SEC. 2. That claims under this statute shall not be approved unless they would be payable according to the law or practice governing the military forces of the country in which they occur.

SEC. 3. That hereafter appropriations for the incidental expenses of the Quartermaster Corps shall be available for paying the claims herein described.

SEC. 4. That this statute does not supersede other modes of indemnity now in existence and does not diminish responsibility of any member of the military forces to the person injured or to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN subsequently said:

The Senate this morning passed a bill to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Claims, and it was reported out by the Committee on Claims, and, as I said, it passed the Senate. The House has passed a similar bill, and it is pending before the Committee on Military Affairs, referred by mistake to that committee. I therefore ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9901) to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now ask for the present consideration of the House bill from which the Committee on Military Affairs has just been discharged. It is identical with the bill which the Senate passed this morning. The House of Representatives passed this bill last Monday. It came to the Senate and, as stated by the Senator from Oregon, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee has been discharged from the consideration of the bill. In my opinion it will not be necessary to refer the House bill since the Senate has already passed to-day an identical Senate bill. I therefore ask for the consideration of the House bill which will obviate the necessity of further action in the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection; the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That claims of inhabitants of France or of any other European country not an enemy or ally of an enemy for damages caused by American military forces may be presented to any officer designated by the President, and when approved by such an officer shall be paid under regulations made by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That claims under this statute shall not be approved unless they would be payable according to the law or practice governing the military forces of the country in which they occur.

SEC. 3. That hereafter appropriations for the incidental expenses of the Quartermaster Corps shall be available for paying the claims herein described.

SEC. 4. That this statute does not supersede other modes of indemnity now in existence and does not diminish responsibility of any member of the military forces to the person injured or to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill S. 4289 was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3803) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9932) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Congress Heights Public Improvement Association, of Washington, D. C., and a petition of Electrotype Molders and Finishers Union No. 17, of Washington, D. C., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 4296) to provide medals of honor and bars for deeds of gallantry and intrepidity in the naval service of the United States (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. RANSDELL:

A bill (S. 4297) to grant to swamp-land States a vested title in and to certain lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 4298) granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the Civil War and the War with Mexico; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEW:
A bill (S. 4299) granting a pension to James E. Newgent;
A bill (S. 4300) granting an increase of pension to Paul L. Bahr;
A bill (S. 4301) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan Paulus;
A bill (S. 4302) granting an increase of pension to Zachariah Blake (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 4303) granting an increase of pension to Ellen Lee Scantling (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 4304) granting an increase of pension to John H. Scott (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 4305) granting an increase of pension to Levi H. Miller (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 4306) granting a pension to Elza L. Ross (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 4307) granting an increase of pension to William C. Roose (with accompanying papers);
A bill (S. 4308) granting a pension to Isabell Main (with accompanying papers); and
A bill (S. 4309) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Lane (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:
A bill (S. 4310) for the relief of the estate of Henry A. V. Post; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $900,000 for extensions and improvement to building No. 42 (shops A, B, and C) machine shops and foundry at the navy yard, Boston, Mass., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 9932. An act to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States" was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

USE OF HOMING PIGEONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3980) to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes, which were on page 1, line 3, after "to" where it last occurs, to insert "knowingly," and on page 2, line 1, after "military," to insert "or naval."

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2917) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," which was on page 2, line 11, after "engineers," to insert:

And provided further, That the persons appointed under this act shall be duly accredited by some religious denomination or organization and of good standing therein, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the maximum age limit of chaplains in the Army shall be 45 years.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

QUARTERS FOR COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases, which was, on page 2, line 1, after "thereof," to insert "and commutation for heat and light."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF MILITARY SUPPLIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3803) authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property, heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States, in connection with, or incidental to, the prosecution of the war.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. I rose to inquire what is the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the committee amendment which has been discussed here for four days.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 strike out the remainder of line 17 and insert certain words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. There being no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to offer the following amendment as an additional section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. Add, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. —. Any person holding any office or position under the United States, by appointment, who shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated, shall, upon a conviction therefor after a hearing before the head of the department in which he is serving, be thereupon discharged from such office or position by the said head of such department: Provided, That if charges are preferred that such person has committed any of these offenses, such charges shall be promptly heard by the head of the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PENROSE. I raise the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McCumber	Sherman
Baird	Henderson	McKellar	Simmons
Bankhead	Hitchcock	McNary	Smith S. C.
Chamberlain	Hollis	Martin	Thomas
Colt	James	Nelson	Thompson
Culberson	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Tillman
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Townsend
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Underwood
Fall	King	Robinson	Walsh
Fletcher	Kirby	Sha'roth	Williams
France	Lodge	Sheppard

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained on official business.

Mr. KING. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] is occupied in committee work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] are necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. NEW, and Mr. TRAMMELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Owing to the fact that when the amendment was read there was hardly anyone in the Chamber I ask that the amendment be again read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment proposed by Mr. PENROSE to add at the end of the bill a new section.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, namely, after the word "enumerated," in line 3, and before the word "shall," to insert the words "since the declaration of war by the United States."

Mr. PENROSE. I can not accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will request the Senator from North Carolina to again state his amendment in order that the Secretary may note it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to amend the amendment so that it will read:

Any person holding any office or position under the United States, by appointment, who shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated since the declaration of war by the United States——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment offered by Mr. PENROSE, in line 3, after the word "enumerated," by inserting the words "since the declaration of war by the United States," so as to read:

Any person holding any office or position under the United States, by appointment, who shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated since the declaration of war by the United States, shall, upon a conviction therefor, after a hearing before the head of the department in which he is serving, be thereupon discharged from such office or position by the said head of such department.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he have his amendment come in after the word "who," in line 2.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well; I think that would sound a little better, and I will ask that the words suggested by me be inserted there. It does not make any difference in meaning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Caroline modifies his amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I think the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona is better.

Mr. PENROSE. What is the suggestion?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Arizona suggests that the words proposed by me be inserted after the word "who," in line 2, so as to read:

Any person holding any office or position under the United States, by appointment, who, since the declaration of war by the United States, shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated—

And so forth.

I think the place suggested by the Senator from Arizona is a better place for the words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to explain the amendment? Does he desire to have the floor?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I was making an inquiry of the Chair as to who had the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have offered the amendment to the amendment and have suggested the place where I think it should be inserted. I ask the Secretary to read it now, so that the Senator from Pennsylvania may understand it as I have modified it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed by Mr. OVERMAN to amend the amendment of Mr. PENROSE, so that it will read as follows:

Any person holding any office or position under the United States, by appointment, who, since the declaration of war by the United States, shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated, shall, upon a conviction therefor after a hearing before the head of the department in which he is serving, be thereupon discharged from such office or position by the said head of such department: Provided, That if charges are preferred that such person has committed any of these offenses, such charges shall be promptly heard by the head of the department.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not rise to take up the time of the Senate in arguing this amendment, but I do not want to have it understood by my silence that the amendment proposed now by the Senator from North Carolina is of any value. It would be utterly impossible for anyone to have committed any of these crimes prior to the declaration of war. They are all crimes of a character that can only be committed during war. For instance, one who spoke contemptuously of the Constitution of the United States 20 years ago or 5 years ago or 4 years ago would not have committed a crime such as is denounced by this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Why would he not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Simply because it was not during the war.

Mr. PENROSE. But the words "since the declaration of war by the United States" have not yet been added to the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the whole amendment relates to crimes committed during the war.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not true that the amendment reported by the committee says:

Or shall willfully obstruct or discourage, or willfully attempt to obstruct or discourage, the recruiting or enlistment in the service of the United States—

That would apply to a time before the war, because we were enlisting men in the Regular Army before the war.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that would be reached under this provision.

Mr. JAMES. It does not say "enlistment during the war," but "enlistment in the service of the United States."

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to have anybody assume that I thought that these acts that were committed before the war could have been or could be converted into offenses against the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator so far as the amendment is concerned; but, out of abundance of caution, I thought it would be well to incorporate in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania the words suggested by me.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator from North Carolina kindly explain what he has in view by offering this amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not wish anybody to be convicted under this provision for language used before we entered the war.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I may be allowed just a moment, this section begins—

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports—

And so forth.

That continues throughout the entire bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment to the amendment should not be adopted. It is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and our laws to make a man answerable for an act that has been made a crime long after the act was committed. If a man who had heretofore made such statements as those denounced by this measure had not then been guilty of a crime, he ought not now to be declared guilty of a crime for an act which was not criminal when it was committed. It seems to me we are going far enough when we say that a man shall not henceforth do so and so; and I think that the amendment to the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this is not a criminal provision. It simply declares that where a man has a certain record he shall be removed from office.

Mr. KIRBY. I am not complaining about the amendment, but about the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, in my opinion, destroys the provision I have offered. Whether he is apprehensive of a wide breach being created in some of the departments of the Federal Government or not and has persons in mind he desires to protect I am not informed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Senator in mind any persons whom he desires to affect?

Mr. PENROSE. I have in mind quite a number of gentlemen.

Mr. OVERMAN. And one especially. I ask the Senator if it is not one man he is after?

Mr. PENROSE. No; my sympathies are catholic and general. I have a number of people in mind who have written pro-German books and given vent to pro-German sentiments of very virulent character; and I think the moral effect of their presence in the departments, exercising a brief autocratic authority and insulting honorable gentlemen who come down here to see them on matters of business, might well be looked into. These men have suddenly become patriotic upon becoming attached to an office.

The provision I have offered is simply declaratory of a condition, just as if an amendment were offered that anyone who in the past, or within 20 years, had been guilty of the crime of forgery should be ineligible for office and should be discharged if in office. Certainly that would be a legitimate declaration as a qualification of an officeholder.

As to confining the measure to acts perpetrated since the war, we have a very flagrant illustration that such restriction does not prevail in practice, when President Wilson interfered in the fight in Wisconsin and charged Mr. LENROOT with alleged crimes and offenses occurring before the declaration of war. So that, if the Senator's party leader and guiding spirit in his actions can go back before the war and charge a Member of Congress with certain misdemeanors, certainly we can afford to take up the cases of the humbler class of appointees in the Federal departments; and if they have been guilty of some flagrant declaration of sympathy with the enemies of the country, particularly very recently, so as to give every reason to suppose that their minds have not changed, it seems to me the charges ought to be considered, and, if proved, then the officeholder ought to be removed. What is the use of going into the byways and villages and prosecuting some ignorant and uneducated man, who, in the heat of the moment, may have made some frivolous remark or who may have lightly spoken in a way that can be considered an offense under this act, and either convict him and sentence him to jail or put him to the expense, and there always is considerable expense, of defending himself in court, when the departments are quite largely honeycombed with men who have recently been guilty of the same offense?

Mr. WALSH, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. JONES of New Mexico addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the whole amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Montana, who first addressed the Chair.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg pardon.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] makes it extremely hard for some of us who are very heartily in favor of his amendment to vote for it. I gather from the remarks of the distinguished Senator that he has introduced this amendment because he wants to go after somebody; but I desire to submit to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that not only is the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] sound, that no offenses under this act could possibly have been committed prior to this war, but the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania can not, under the rules of construction, have a retrospective operation. It contemplates the discharge of those only who shall be found to have committed these offenses, and these offenses will not exist at all until after the act is passed. Prior to that time the thing is not a crime; it is entirely harmless; no one committed any offense by doing any of these things in the past, and will not have committed any offense until the act is passed. So that I think we may very readily accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the intention of the amendment is that it shall have a retrospective effect. That is the intention of the Senator who introduced the amendment. I agree with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and, as I have said, I agree with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. The amendment amounts really to nothing except that it is the intention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to punish somebody whom he has in mind. He denounced Mr. Creel when he introduced the amendment, and Mr. Creel has been denounced on this floor here for some two hours or more by one Senator. Then it was that the Senator introduced this amendment for the purpose of directing it toward one or more men who might have committed offenses under the language of it prior to the declaration of war. I agree that it can not have any retrospective effect, no matter what the Senator says who introduces the amendment; but if the amendment should be adopted I think we should put in the words I have suggested out of an abundance of caution. I agree with the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Montana that they will have no effect; but I think the whole amendment ought to be beaten.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with what I understand to be the general purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I had thought that perhaps this matter might be reached in a little different way.

The other day I offered an amendment somewhat along the same line, which reads as follows:

Any employee or official of the United States Government who commits any disloyal act, or utters any unpatriotic or disloyal language, or who, in an abusive and violent manner, criticizes the Army or Navy or the flag of the United States, shall be at once dismissed from the service. Any such employee shall be dismissed by the head of the department in which the employee may be engaged, and any such official shall be dismissed by the authority having power to appoint a successor to the dismissed official.

Mr. President, it seems to me that there is one very important reason why it might be more advisable to adopt the amendment which I proposed some days ago than the one offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania simply furnishes as a ground for dismissal of the official a criminal act, an act which is made criminal by virtue of the bill which we are now considering; and it must be apparent to any one that to put that provision in the bill, and authorize the head of a department to try out a criminal offense, might have some very deleterious influences.

For instance, an individual charged with a crime who is to be tried before a jury of the country would necessarily be prejudiced if the head of a department had previously taken up the question as to his guilt of a criminal offense and had found him guilty; and it strikes me that for the purpose of dismissing an official we need not go that far. I believe that every person in the employ of the Government ought to be not only not disloyal, but ought to be highly patriotic, and that we need not limit ourselves to the elements which we are willing to have constitute a crime for the mere purpose of bringing about the dismissal of an official. It was with that end in view that the amendment which I proposed some days ago was prepared.

I can see how innocent people might be prejudiced in a criminal tribunal by first having the head of a department try out the case, and dismiss the party for the specific thing which is now to be declared to be a criminal offense; and so this amendment which I have proposed lays down the things which in themselves will furnish ground for the dismissal of the official.

I think we all want highly patriotic citizens only in the service of the Government at this time; and the amendment which I have prepared will accomplish that purpose, and at the same time not prejudice anybody who may subsequently be brought to trial in a criminal tribunal. I believe that my amendment will accomplish all that the Senator from Pennsylvania seeks and all that the Senators generally seem to want, and will not have any deleterious influences upon those who may be prosecuted in the courts. I should like to have this amendment accepted, if it seems to be agreeable to the Senators; and for the purpose of having it considered I offer it as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the amendment which the Senator from New Mexico has offered as a substitute does not seem to me to cover in any way the condition that I want to reach; and I should like to ask him whether it does or not? My purpose is to reach the case of an officeholder who, say three years ago, wrote a book declaring in unmistakable terms that Germany was right in the war, and that France and England were the aggressors, and that the sinking of the Lusitania was justified.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not believe that that point is covered by my amendment, and I must say that I doubt very much whether it should be covered by any amendment. I do not believe in going back to stir up old sentiments and animosities. I am quite content to believe that there are in this country thousands of people who were not in accord with the most aggressive of us who went into this war for reasons which appeared to us to be sufficient and compelling, but who are just as patriotic to-day as any of us. They may have differed three years ago on some lines of international policy, and yet to-day may be patriotic citizens who ought to be serving this country in some way. I do not believe that we ought to adopt any amendment which will cover just the things presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. We already have an amendment pending in the third degree, and the amendment now offered by the Senator from New Mexico is in the fourth degree. It is therefore not in order; and as much might be said of the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. It is in the third degree.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. The second degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the pending question is the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and that the amendment offered in the nature of a substitute by the Senator from New Mexico is not at this time in order. It is first in order to perfect——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I assumed that the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania could be perfected. I wanted to state the purpose of my amendment, and my purpose to present it as a substitute at the proper time.

Mr. PENROSE. I suppose I can modify my own amendment, and that would be in order. I recognize that there is something in the statement made by the Senator from Montana. I had thought about it when I drew the amendment, but concluded that as this is not a criminal statute, but merely a direction to the head of a department, I need not be too technical in the language used; but I am entirely willing, in deference to the criticism of the Senator from Montana, to modify the amendment, on line 3, by striking out the words "offenses herein enumerated" and substituting "acts for which punishment is provided herein." I think that would come pretty near meeting the objection.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania for a construction of his amendment as to the scope of it. It provides that any person holding any office or position under the United States by appointment who shall have committed any of the offenses described may be removed and discharged by the head of a department.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does that cover and include every person and every officer inferior to the head of an executive department?

Mr. PENROSE. I should think so; yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Say, for instance, the Secretary of the Treasury. There are a number of officers, such as the Comptroller of the Currency, the Treasurer, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and some others, who are nominated and appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. They are not appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, or by any of his subordinates, but by the President. Does this amendment give to the Secretary of the Treasury the authority to remove the officers that I have mentioned?

Mr. PENROSE. No; I take it for granted that the charges would be submitted to the President. They are presidential appointees and nominally identified with the Treasury Department.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not think the Senator meant to include the broad scope I suggested, because this provides that the head of the department may remove them, not the President.

Mr. PENROSE. I would consider that the President would be the head, in the sense referred to by the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not understand that the President is the head of any department, and therefore I do not think such a designation would include him.

Mr. PENROSE. To meet the Senator's objection I will further modify the amendment with a proviso, as follows:

Provided, That where the person holding such office or position is appointed by the President or other executive head—

I will perfect that amendment in a minute.

Mr. SHIELDS. Perhaps that would include some officers who could be removed from office only by impeachment. I have not looked up the matter with that in view.

Mr. PENROSE. I will modify the amendment by putting in on line 4, following the words "after a hearing before the head of the department," the words "or the President or other official making such appointment," so that it will read:

After a hearing before the head of the department or the President or other official making such appointment.

Mr. LODGE. Why not have it read:

After a hearing before the President or the head of the department in which he is serving.

Mr. PENROSE. That would be all right—

After a hearing before the President or the head of the department in which he is serving

Mr. OVERMAN. As I understand, the Senator does not want to convict anybody by any ex post facto or retrospective law.

Mr. PENROSE. This is not an ex post facto law.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand. Now, will the Senator agree to accept an amendment striking out the word "have," and making it read "commit" instead of "committed"?

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, that would destroy the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. So that any person holding any office or position under the United States by appointment who shall commit any of these offenses shall be subject to removal?

Mr. PENROSE. That destroys the whole purpose of the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then the Senator wants to go back, does he——

Mr. PENROSE. I do; I have said so repeatedly.

Mr. OVERMAN. And take cognizance of language used 20 year ago?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think it would be necessary to go back 20 years, because these conditions had not arisen then. I suppose you could go back 20 years where an officer had advocated violence, I. W. W. doctrines, or socialistic doctrines. There are some such in the departments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. I am reading the amendment now as it is printed:

Any person holding any office or position under the United States by appointment who shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated——

Mr. PENROSE. I have changed that.

Mr. BORAH. What change was made?

Mr. PENROSE. Instead of "offenses herein enumerated" I have made it "any of the acts for which punishment is provided herein."

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator intend by that to submit an amendment which, if incorporated into the bill, will operate upon acts described in the bill, but which took place before the bill was passed?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes. This is not an ex post facto law or a criminal statute providing for penalties of fine or imprisonment. It is simply equivalent to a declaration that anyone who committed forgery or murder 20 years ago shall be removed from office. Certainly we would have a right to do that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would not support a measure which would undertake to make a law operative prior to the time the law was passed. In the first place, I do not think you could do it. I think it is in the nature of punishment. It may not be within the technical provision, but it is within the spirit of the constitutional provision that you can not pass an ex post facto law; but to undertake to pass a law by which a party shall be held responsible for acts defined in the law, but which acts took place before the law was passed, is in spirit in violation of that fundamental principle of government.

Mr. OVERMAN. To be sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the Secretary state the amendment as modified.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there has been a great deal of confusion about this amendment; and without any disrespect to the Senator from Pennsylvania, but because I think the sentiment of the Senate is against the amendment, I move to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PENROSE. I call for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to criticize the Chair, but my hearing is pretty good, and——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania demands the yeas and nays. Is the call sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, without having made an examination of the question——

Mr. GALLINGER and other Senators. Regular order!

Mr. SHIELDS. Am I in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the pending question is a motion to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and it is not debatable. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. JAMES. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Because of my general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] I withhold my vote.

Mr. KIRBY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] on account of illness, and also the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], on account of the illness of his colleague.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], with whom I have a pair, is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] on official business. I will state that he is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but I observe that my pair, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], is absent. In his absence I transfer my pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a pair with that Senator, but transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted without noting the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], with whom I have a general pair. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and let my vote stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON). I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is detained on important public business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] are absent on business of the Senate. I will allow this announcement with reference to these Senators to stand for the day.

Mr. CALDER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. He has not voted. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and let my vote stand.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—26.

Ashurst	Kendrick	Ransdell	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	McKellar	Robinson	Thompson
Culberson	Martin	Shafroth	Tillman
Fletcher	Myers	Sheppard	Walsh
Henderson	Nelson	Shields	Williams
James	Nugent	Simmons
Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smith, Ariz.

NAYS—27.

Baird	Gallinger	Lodge	Sterling
Borah	Hale	McCumber	Thomas
Calder	Harding	McNary	Townsend
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	New	Underwood
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Wadsworth
Fall	King	Poindexter	Warren
France	Kirby	Sherman

NOT VOTING—42.

Bankhead	Gronna	Norris	Smoot
Beckham	Hardwick	Owen	Stone
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Page	Sutherland
Broussard	Hollis	Phelan	Swanson
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pittman	Trammell
Curtis	Kellogg	Pomerene	Vardaman
Fernald	Kenyon	Reed	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Saulsbury	Weeks
Gerry	La Follette	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Goff	Lewis	Smith, Md.
Gore	McLean	Smith, Mich.

So the Senate refused to lay Mr. PENROSE's amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I voted against laying the amendment on the table, as I usually do vote against such disposition of bills or amendments, except such as are introduced purely for the purposes of delay. I feel that this question ought to be discussed.

I confess, however, Mr. President, that I do not feel from what has been said in its behalf that I can support the amendment upon its merits. I realize that there has been good ground for the feeling which the senior Senator from Pennsylvania has on account of the appointment of men to positions of trust and of their retention in office after their unfitness has been demonstrated, whose whole experience has been antagonistic to our Government and its Constitution. I have only contempt for such appointees.

It occurs to me that there is some danger, if it is possible for Congress to do it, in the passage of a retroactive law, and that is the whole object which the Senator has in mind, as he states. I think it would be exceedingly dangerous. There were good reasons for men to differ in opinion before the war had progressed in Europe very far. Some of the very best men in this country expressed themselves strongly in favor of the German side of the controversy. That was before we were in it and while we were occupying what was said to be a neutral position.

Now, it stands to reason that the representatives of the various nations in Europe which were involved in that war would have a choice between European contestants, and it is too late now when we require the working together of all our citizens to go into the past and rake up statements which have been made carelessly or indifferently for the purpose of determining the loyalty of our people at the present time.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit an inquiry on that point, I can understand how good men might have had a different point of view three years ago than they have to-day, but can the Senator excuse or condone a case where a person within three or four years has deliberately declared the Constitution of the United States a fraud on the people, a vicious and unworthy instrument, our whole scheme of government an effort to suppress the people, and tearing, you may say, to shreds an instrument that all officeholders are called upon before they perform an official act to uphold and support?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; I do not sympathize with that.

Mr. PENROSE. This amendment covers much more than sympathy with Germany.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It covers that and other things——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just let me answer the Senator from Pennsylvania for a moment. I condemn more the power that appoints such a man to office than I do the appointee himself.

The general provision of the proposed law provides that men shall be branded as criminals and punished as criminals if they commit the offenses charged in the bill. If they are convicted, they will be sent to jail, and can not very well serve in the office during that time at least, and I think there will be no difficulty about disposing of those men.

I agree with the Senator that there have been mistakes made, as suggested by him, and I would like to see them corrected, but I would like to have the men who made the mistakes correct them themselves. I do not want to subject the possible persecution or to condign punishment, because it is a punishment for a man to be discharged under such a complaint as will be made against him if he is now a loyal, law-abiding citizen.

Therefore with the explanation of the Senator from Pennsylvania, which is to the effect that he wants it to reach back prior to the war; and, believing that Congress has no right to enact such a law, yet inasmuch as the distinguished Senator has announced the purpose of the measure so directly I can not vote for it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, like the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], I voted against laying the amendment upon the table. I do that always, or nearly always, because I do not like that way of disposing of a measure.

But there are three reasons which will make it impossible for me to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. The first is that I do not think that it has a proper place upon this bill. We are enacting a criminal statute, and I think the provisions of the bill ought to be limited to that subject. We ought not to attempt to regulate the departments of the Government in the passage of a purely penal law.

The second reason is this: The person who is to be dismissed must be tried before the head of the department. If the head of the department is in sympathy with his own country and wants to preserve in his work a loyal force of men, he will have no difficulty whatsoever in doing so without a statute of this sort. If he is not particular with regard to the sentiment of his employees regarding the country which they serve, then this would be unavailing, because he would not find the particular employee to have been guilty of the offense for which he is to be removed.

My third reason is that I am just as solicitous about preserving to the President of the United States the just power he has under the Constitution as I am anxious to preserve in the Congress the powers which it has assumed to exercise under the Constitution; and while I know that we have the right to prescribe qualifications or elements of eligibility which the President must observe in making appointments, I doubt very much whether we have the right to say to the President that upon a given state of facts he must discharge or dismiss a given employee.

For these reasons I am opposed to the amendment, aside from the injustice, in a sense, of punishing one for an act committed before the declaration is made in the statute, and with regard to that I can easily see that the Senator from Pennsylvania can escape the prohibition of the Constitution against ex post facto laws, because I hardly think that declaring a certain requirement for an employee is a penalty or a punishment that would fall within the constitutional prohibition. But it is obviously unjust to hold one to an accounting of that character by a statute passed after the act was committed unless the act be of such exceeding gravity as to entirely remove the opportunity or the thought of repentance and reform. For these reasons I do not feel that I can support the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit an inquiry on that point?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is himself, to some extent, a party guilty of this very performance, because he has acquiesced in it. I do not recall that he has raised his voice in protest. A gentleman of German ancestry was nominated to this body for the office of brigadier general, and he was charged with offenses such as are enumerated in this bill, occurring before the war, and among them excusing the sinking of the Lusitania. The charges were never proved adequately. They are denied by the party defendant and by his friends, and yet that gentleman's life is ruined and his career blighted. I have not heard the Senator from Iowa raise any protest against the injustice of bringing up offenses of this character committed before the war.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I did not happen to be in the Senate when that matter was before the body.

Mr. PENROSE. It has been hanging for months and is still pending. Why does not the Senator move to have the committee discharged?

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand perfectly the instance to which the Senator refers, although not familiar with all the facts which may have been developed in the case; and there is no parallel at all, in my point of view, between such a case and the enforcement of such a provision as has been proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I will not knowingly vote to confirm any man whom I believe to be unfit for the office to which he may have been appointed or nominated by the President. I never have and I never will, because I understand that the duty devolved upon us by the Constitution is an important one and not merely the discharge of a perfunctory or nominal service. I would not vote to confirm the gentleman to whom the Senator from Pennsylvania refers, either to a military or a civil office, if he were charged and proven to be guilty of the utterance of the language which is imputed to him, unless I am convinced that he had entirely reformed his habit of thought and is really a loyal citizen to the laws and institutions of the United States.

Mr. PENROSE. And not likely to have a relapse.

Mr. CUMMINS. He might have a relapse. I have known Senators as well as ordinary individuals to fall away from their sound and emphatic resolutions of reform. But that is a responsibility which ought to be discharged by the President and by the heads of the departments. If they are loyal and decent they will not keep in their employ men who are unfaithful to the Government which they serve, and if they are not loyal and decent a law of this sort would be of no value in correcting them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, just a word or two with regard to the proposed amendment. Perhaps before saying what I am about to say I should correct the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the case which he mentions, which was pending some time ago. I do not feel at liberty to refer to matters that arose in executive session, but I will say, by way of correcting his idea about the status of that case, that it is no longer before the committee; that when Congress adjourned the nomination became void, because it was not confirmed. That failure to confirm was the end of the matter until another nomination is sent in.

Mr. PENROSE. It was long enough before the Senate to have given the Senator from Iowa ample opportunity to protest, if he holds the views he says he does.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, as to that I have nothing to say; but I do not feel at liberty to go further into that particular matter, because it involves executive business.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I endeavor to do my duty as I see it, and I shall continue to do that without regard to the reflections of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLETCHER. My chief objection to the amendment is that, frankly, it is proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania in order to reach out and accomplish a purpose and object outside of the intent and scope of this particular measure. If there is a condition which in his mind ought to be remedied with reference to some particular individual or condition, it ought to be, it seems to me, reached in another way.

But in addition to that, I do not think the Senator would accomplish by this amendment what he has in mind at all. I doubt very much if he could accomplish it by adding to this bill some provision in an effort to bring within its scope acts and conduct which took place long before the condition arose which is the very basis of this bill, namely, "when the United States is at war." Simply providing that if offenses which shall have been committed, or that if acts for which punishment is provided herein shall have been committed, by an appointee he shall be removed from office if, upon inquiry by the head of the department he is found guilty of having done these acts for which punishment is provided in the bill, does not reach the situation at all, it seems to me, that the Senator has in mind, because the acts for which punishment is provided in the bill are acts which have been committed "when the United States is at war." That is perfectly plain.

The very opening sentence of the bill provides that "whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully" do certain things shall be punished. The Senator says whoever commits any of the acts for which punishment is provided in the bill, or whoever shall have committed the acts for which punishment is provided in the bill, shall be removed from office. Necessarily the amendment would be held to mean the acts which are punished under the bill are acts which have been committed since this war began; but I think it does not extend to acts committed before that condition arose.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Suppose that is the intended and obvious consequence of the language used in the amendment, does the Senator suppose for a moment that the courts would permit it to stand?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think they would; and that is the real reason why I voted to lay the amendment on the table, because I think that the act would not be valid; that it would be absolutely void; but I do not believe it would accomplish the object anyway. I do not think it is necessary to enact a provision of this sort for future application, because, as has been said heretofore by some Senators in this discussion, the head of a department has the absolute authority now to dismiss from the service a disloyal employee or appointee. There is no difficulty about removing that sort of an official or employee; and if anyone knows of such an employee occupying a position in the Government service it would be the duty, it seems to me, of that one to prefer charges to the head of the department or to the executive under whose authority he is acting and bring the proof to sustain those charges. I am satisfied there would be no hesitation on the part of those having the power to see that such an employee or appointee should no longer occupy that relation to the Government.

I am not out of sympathy at all with the notion of getting rid of any such employees if they exist; and I have, I will say frankly, some reason to believe that there are people in the Government service who ought not to be in the Government service. We are living in extraordinary times; war conditions bring on new responsibilities, new duties, and impose new lines of conduct. What was said and done years ago in times of peace might be entirely harmless—foolish, it might be, but entirely harmless—which to-day would be treasonable, and we must recognize that situation.

There ought not to be in the Government service any man who not only is not helping the other side, but any man who is not enthusiastically helping the United States, in my judgment. If there is any such man or woman in the Government service, he or she ought to be speedily dismissed, because this war has absolutely drawn the line, and you are either on one side or on the other. Every man and every woman in this country must take a stand on one side or the other. Either you are for the Government in this tremendous struggle, which involves the very life of civilization, or you are against it. If you are against it, then you ought not to be in a position to hamper or hinder or obstruct. Not only that, you ought not to occupy a position under the Government when you are not helping to the utmost of your ability to move forward in this great enterprise.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico. I am not at all out of sympathy with the thought included generally in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not think it will accomplish what he intends to accomplish by it; and I do not think that, if it did, it would be valid as a law. We can not enact that sort of legislation; and it is, in my judgment, out of place to attempt to place it on an important measure like this.

Mr. President, I hope that we shall dispose of this bill to-day. It is important that it should be disposed of. The people of this country are aroused. I am getting letters in every mail from men who write to me saying, "My boys are on the other side in the trenches; are you going to take care of those people who would stab them in the back on this side?" German propaganda is more dangerous than are German guns to-day, and we must get control of that situation. This sort of legislation will help to do it, and the sooner we enact it into law the better.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I came into the Chamber just as the vote was being had to lay upon the table the proposed amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and I voted against laying it on the table, because I saw in it a direction that the disloyal should all be turned out of office, and that meets my most cordial approval. If there are in any of the departments any who are not absolutely behind the Government or any who go around and in any way express disapproval of the contest we are in and sympathy with our enemies, they ought to be turned out, and speedily turned out; but I really believe that the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] is in more satisfactory shape than the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I wish to add that in voting for either amendment I do not indicate a doubt as to the right of the head of a department in Washington, without any such legislation, to discharge instantly an employee who had been guilty of any of the conduct described in this bill or who expressed himself in a way that indicated disloyalty.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Assuming that the person appointed to an office is absolutely loyal to this Government as between this Government and our enemies, does the Senator believe if that person speaks with the greatest contempt not only of the Constitution of the United States but of the founders of that Constitution he ought to hold an office by appointment under the Constitution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does not embarrass me to answer that question. I answer without hesitation, "no."

Mr. McCUMBER. I am glad to have the Senator's answer. Then the Senator believes that we ought to have a law that would disqualify such a person?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not believe that anyone should hold office in the United States who is not ready to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and take it with an earnest and zealous heart, and with a profound desire to support the Government.

Now, Mr. President, what I desire to say is that I believe the heads of the departments have the right now to remove such employees; and they ought to do so. I think the President ought to remove any of his appointees who fail in loyalty or express themselves in such a manner as to indicate a question as to their loyalty. I, however, would not wish to vote against one of these resolutions, for, even though I think the power already exists, I do not mind emphasizing it by the declaration that we think the power ought to be exercised; and in voting for such a resolution I would feel rather that we were expressing the opinion that the duly constituted superior officers should exercise this power than to question the fact that they have it already.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I did not intend in the beginning to say anything on the floor with reference to this bill. I intend to give the bill my support, and have so intended from the very beginning. Under ordinary circumstances, it is very difficult for me to get my consent to vote for drastic legislation that goes into the homes of the citizens of the United States and holds men responsible for acts that are made offenses by laws that in many cases are unknown in advance of committing the offense to the individual who offends. But, Mr. President, I think the hour has come in the American Republic when the tocsin has sounded for all men to stand upon guard. The danger to our Republic, the danger to our civilization, the danger to our democratic institutions is too great, too appalling at this hour for any man to hesitate as to the position he will take when it is necessary to uphold the flag and support the Government of the United States. Therefore, although I recognize that the terms of this bill are drastic, that they are severe, I intend to give the bill my support.

Now, coming to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I refused to vote to lay the amendment on the table, not that I object to laying amendments on the table; I have never occupied that position. If I am opposed to an amendment and I think that it is standing in the way of the enactment of legislation that ought to go through the body, although I never intend to be impolite to my fellow Senators, I would not hesitate for a moment as a public duty to vote to lay any amendment on the table to get it out of the way.

The reason I voted against laying the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the table was because I believed either that amendment or some other amendment along that line should be enacted. There may be better proposals. I have heard in the debate reference made to a proposal by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. I do not happen to be advised as to what that particular amendment is, but I shall listen to the debate, and if it is offered as a substitute for the pending amendment and I consider it a better proposal, I shall vote for it as a substitute; but I do not propose to occupy the position in the Senate of the United States wherein I say I am willing to go to the hut or the hovel and convict a man of disloyalty to the flag of the United States, and yet when it comes to those who are garbed in the uniform of the country, men in authority, those who should best know what disloyalty means, those on whose shoulders rests the primary duty to support the flag and to be loyal to the United States, I am not willing that they should be allowed to commit disloyal acts and continue to hold office while the citizen is convicted of a similar offense.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. The fact that a man is an officeholder and is garbed in some official uniform would not exempt him from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; but it ought to fire him out of the office so quickly that he could not bat an eye between the time of committing the offense and going out of the service of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill provides for putting such a man in the penitentiary for 10 years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, he ought to go to the penitentiary, of course; but in the meantime he ought not to be cloaked in the uniform of his country.

I do not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that his amendment is retroactive. I have heard it stated in the debate that this amendment may be directed against some particular person. If it is, I am not aware of that fact. If there is any man in the service of the Government of the United States who has committed any of these offenses I do not know it, and I am glad that I do not know it, because it would disturb me very greatly to feel that any man who holds office under the Government of the United States could continue to do so while being disloyal to his Government. So that, so far as that side of the question is concerned, it does not concern me; but I do not agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that the amendment can be retroactive in its terms.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Pennsylvania, as I understand, intends the amendment to be retroactive.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I heard him make the statement; but I am not going to vote on the bill on the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, the Senator from Alabama would not be bound, and neither would the courts in construing the act be bound, by the interpretation of the Senator from Pennsylvania; but when an amendment was offered which would unquestionably make it operative in the future alone the Senator from Pennsylvania declined to accept the amendment. I presume, therefore, that if the Senator from Alabama should convince the Senator from Pennsylvania that the amendment is not retroactive, the Senator from Pennsylvania will undertake to make it so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know how the Senator could make it so if he attempted to do it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. May I not suggest that the word "retroactive," which was used by my colleague, was not used in the constitutional sense at all; that it only meant, as I read the language of his amendment, that those who have been guilty of this vile thing shall not continue to hold office. It is not retroactive. It is only imposing a condition for holding office.

The right to hold office is not a natural right. An office is created by statute, and the statute may impose any condition it sees fit upon the person who shall hold it. For instance, the statute may say that nobody shall hold office who is not a citizen, or that nobody shall hold office who is not of a certain age, just as this amendment says that nobody shall hold office who has committed any one of these offenses. So I think the doctrine of retroactive legislation, as our Constitution provides it, is not involved here at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not disagree with the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania; but it is not in harmony with the suggestion of his colleague. If I may have just a moment, the amendment says:

> Any person holding any office or position under the United States by appointment who shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated shall, upon a conviction therefor—

And so forth. He must be convicted before this thing operates at all; and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] stated that he intended that it should cover the last three years.

Mr. PENROSE. Any number of years.

Mr. BORAH. Any number of years, and before it operates at all he must have been convicted of the offense.

Mr. PENROSE. Before the head of the department.

Mr. KNOX. Suppose the statute stated that nobody shall hold an office who has not a good moral character or who does not sustain a good moral character. You could go back five years and show that a man had committed murder or burglary.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; but what would the Senator do with the word "conviction"?

Mr. KNOX. That establishes the fact.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but in convicting him you may go back to his acts which cover the last three years.

Mr. KNOX. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. You could not convict him for acts of the last three years unless the provision was retroactive.

Mr. KNOX. Retroactive only in the sense that the condition for continuing to hold office has relation to his conduct in the past as well as in the present.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. NELSON. This is not retroactive legislation. It is ex post facto legislation. That is what it means. It is making criminal an act that was not criminal when it was committed.

Mr. PENROSE. It does not make any act criminal.

Mr. NELSON. Why, how can you convict a man under this law for what transpired before there was any law in existence?

Mr. PENROSE. There is no penalty of fine or imprisonment. The word "conviction" means that when the head of the department is persuaded that these acts have been committed then the appointee shall be discharged from the office.

Mr. NELSON. How can he be convicted by any court for something that was not an offense when it was done?

Mr. PENROSE. He is not convicted before any court. He is convicted before the head of the department.

Mr. BORAH. That is not what the amendment says.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; it is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am always glad to yield to my colleagues; but I only desire a few more minutes, and I should like to finish my statement.

In part, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has suggested what my view of this amendment is. The amendment is no broader in its terms and can reach no further than the original bill. It relates to the original bill; it is tied to the original bill and must be construed with the original bill. Now, it is proposed to turn a man out of office, not for an act, as suggested by the Senator from Florida, but for committing an offense. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania does not refer to any acts committed along this line, but to an offense of which the officeholder is convicted.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I will state for the information of the Senator from Alabama that I have modified the language by striking out "offenses herein enumerated" and inserting the words "acts for which punishment is provided herein."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, that does not change the effect. The language "acts for which punishment is provided herein" brings it back to the word "offense" in the sense in which I am speaking of it, because there is no punishment provided now, and therefore the act for which punishment is provided can not be effective until after this bill is passed. Now, the bill itself starts out by saying, "Whenever the United States is at war." These offenses, therefore, are all limited to the time when the United States is at war. We went to war a year ago the 6th of this month; and therefore there could be no act committed under this bill in the sense in which the Senator from Pennsylvania uses the word—an act that could be punished as a crime—prior to the declaration of war, because it was not an offense at that time. More than that, as to the particular acts referred to in the section of the bill which is sought to be amended, they are not acts for which a man can be convicted until you pass the bill, and therefore his amendment could not be retroactive.

I am in doubt in my mind on the proposition as to whether or not, if a man committed a disloyal act, even if it were retroactive, and I could turn him out of office, I would not do it. I might not hang him by an ex post facto law, but I am not one that is willing for a man to wear the uniform of the Government of the United States who has admittedly committed a disloyal act. Now, the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania may not be in the best form. I am not committed to the form. If someone else offers as a substitute, or by way of amendment, a better form, I shall gladly give it my support; but I shall not vote to wipe out of the bill entirely, if my vote can prevent it being done, a provision in the bill that distinctly declares to the people of the United States that a man who stands in the uniform of his country, whether he is in the Army or in civil life, shall not hold office if by word or deed he is disloyal to the flag of his country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am in favor of doing what this bill proposes. If a man is disloyal, or has uttered these sentiments since the war was declared, I want him to go to the penitentiary. I want him to be treated like any other citizen. Senators have been arguing that because a man has an office in this country, he has a cloak around him by reason of which he can not be convicted. Why not put him in the same category with anybody else, no matter who he is, Cabinet officer or anybody else, and put him in the penitentiary?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I stated a moment ago that I recognized that a man should be sent to the penitentiary for doing these things, and, in addition to that, that he should be turned out of office.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, Mr. President, if there is any such man in this Government, he ought to be turned out, and it will not require any law to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To be sure.

Mr. OVERMAN. He ought to be indicted and punished as an ordinary citizen. Why do we want to go on and say that we will turn him out of office? What does that amount to? Nothing. I want to put him where he belongs—in the penitentiary.

The Senator argues that because the bill itself says this must happen during the war, this amendment is added to that provision of the original bill. It is not so. This is offered as a separate section. Nothing is said about the war. Therefore, according to this amendment as I construe it, if a man at any time, 25 years ago, said anything or uttered anything that is prohibited in this bill, no matter when it was uttered, the Senator wants to turn him out of office.

I do not believe in ex post facto laws, Mr. President. I shall never vote for an ex post facto law; but I will withdraw my amendment, and let us test the sentiment of the Senate on this question, and see whether or not the Members of the Senate are in favor of the Penrose amendment.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] prepared an amendment carrying out in due form the idea of turning these people out of office. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept that amendment; but I am opposed to this amendment, because I believe, as the author says, it is intended to have a retrospective effect; it is intended to be an ex post facto law; it is intended to get after certain people who have been mentioned here upon this floor; and I do not think that is just or right or fair. But if, since the war began, any man has uttered any of these sentiments or done anything which is forbidden in this bill, let him go to the penitentiary and be fined and be punished in that way, but do not simply remove him from office.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. Suppose that two or three months or six months before the time when we recognized the existence of a state of war a man who was in office, or who is still in office, denounced the Constitution of the United States and our form of government and denounced the flag. Under this act he could not be punished. Does not the Senator think that that man, entertaining those views, ought to be removed from office?

Mr. OVERMAN. I put him in the same class with other people. As the Senator from Michigan says, there are Germans over this country—in my State and in every other State—who sympathized with Germany, who uttered sentiments like those named in this bill before war was declared, who now are giving their money to buy liberty bonds and are sending their sons to the front. They are just as loyal as I am. Yet while this country was not at war they were sympathetic with Germany. I would not put those men within the provisions of this bill because of some act or some things they did prior to the war. I think there are probably a million Germans in this country who are loyal. I believe there are. It is disloyalty hereafter that we are trying to reach.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator's bill is aimed at the people who speak against the form of government of the United States and the Constitution.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a question of people who indulge in pro-German talk. There are lots of them in office here. It is the people who are against the Constitution that the bill seeks to reach.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in times of peace there may have been Germans——

Mr. LODGE. No; not Germans.

Mr. OVERMAN. There may have been Germans who said that they did not like our Constitution and that they preferred their form of government and thought it better than ours; yet, Mr. President, there was no law against it then. Now we are making a law against it, and I would not go back 10 years to punish a man who did that. Would the Senator?

Mr. LODGE. I would not appoint him to office.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I would not, either, if he had the same sentiments now.

We might as well be candid about this. All of this is a fight against one man. Now, Mr. President, I do not know him. I am not defending him, and if he uttered what it has been said on this floor that he uttered I would turn him out; but I would leave it to the loyal officeholders who control this Government to do it if it is true, and for anything he has done since that time I would put him in the penitentiary, where this bill puts him. I would not just simply turn him out of office.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to ask the Senator whether he does not think that where there is a disloyal man in the service, so expressing himself, setting a bad example and perhaps committing treason to the Government, and it is discovered, there ought to be some summary way to remove him right then and there, and not wait for an indictment and conviction and perhaps a review in an appellate court upon the subject? That is largely the object of legislation of this kind, and it is very wholesome, and I favor it. I like the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] much better than I do that offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania; but I certainly would not support any measure that would be an ex post facto law, because it would be useless as well as bad legislation. If the effect of this and the intent of it is to forfeit an office by an act or on account of conduct that did not cause a forfeiture at the time the act was committed, it would be an ex post facto law; it could not be enforced; and all forfeitures come within the ex post facto law provision there.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator interrupted me. I do not disagree with him. I said when I began my speech that the Senator from New Mexico had showed me, three or four days ago, an amendment to which I did not object if he would narrow it somewhat in form.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not think the Senator did; but the position he has taken was getting into conflict with the idea of some legislation along this line.

Mr. OVERMAN. I just started to say that I would be glad to see some legislation on this subject, although I do not think it is necessary. I think if any man has uttered any disloyal sentiment or has done any disloyal act he ought to be turned out; and I would not only turn him out but, as I say, I repeat, I would get the district attorney to indict him. That is what ought to be done. He ought not to be just simply turned out and uncloaked. He ought to be put where the humble citizen will be put—convicted and sent to the penitentiary and kept there; and I would hang some of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. The question, then, is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania by inserting, after the word "who," in line 2, these words:

After the entrance of the United States into the present war.

I send to the desk a copy of the amendment as it will read if my proposed amendment be incorporated in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The SECRETARY. After the word "who," in the second line of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, as printed, it is proposed to insert the words "after the entrance of the United States into the present war," so that, if amended, it will read:

SEC. —. Any person holding any office or position under the United States, by appointment, who, after the entrance of the United States into the present war, shall have committed any of the acts for which punishment is provided herein, shall, upon a conviction therefor, after a hearing before the President or the head of the department in which he is serving, be thereupon discharged from such office or position—

And so forth.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana, if the question is a proper one, whether he has any one or more persons in mind to protect in the departments by this amendment?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania would not at any time, on any subject, ask me an improper question; and——

Mr. PENROSE. There is nothing improper in that. I do not mean to have the question assume an improper shape.

Mr. MYERS. I am acquitting the Senator of that. I say it is entirely proper, and I know that the Senator would not at any time, on any subject, ask me an improper question. This is a proper one, and I will answer it.

Mr. PENROSE. All right.

Mr. MYERS. It has not reference to any one or more particular persons. I believe that a distinction ought to be drawn in regard to punishment, or the infliction of any penalty, between persons who have made disloyal or profane or contemptuous or scurrilous or abusive remarks about the subjects enumerated in the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania since we entered the present war, and those who may have made such remarks before we entered the present war. This measure imposes a penalty, and I do not believe the same penalty would be applicable to one who made such a remark before we entered the war as would be applicable to one who made it since we entered the war.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me, I may be a little dense in my intellectual processes, but I should like to get illumination from the Senator from Montana as to the precise difference between a declaration that the Constitution of the United States is a fraud perpetrated upon the American people, and that the founders of that great instrument were practically men without character or repute, made one day or three months before the war, and a similar declaration made the day after the declaration of war. Is there any difference, Mr. President, when the statement stands unrepented, uncontradicted, a record against the character of the officeholder which would certainly persuade the average man that his sympathies were not in harmony with the purposes of the Government of the United States?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, morally there is no difference, but when it comes to the infliction of punishment I think there ought to be a difference. Before we entered into this war a man might make many criticisms against the Constitution of the United States——

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator withdraw his amendment, and let us make a straight fight on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania? I wish he would withdraw his amendment, so that we can make a straight fight on that amendment.

Mr. MYERS. A straight fight can be made by rejecting my amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to see a straight-out fight, and see how many Senators will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. I want to answer the Senator's question a little more fully. As I was saying, before we entered into this war a man might make many strictures on the Constitution of the United States, criticism of it, denunciation of it in time of peace, which I think would not be proper in a time when we are engaged in war. I think there is a difference. But out of respect to the wish of the acting chairman of the committee, who has charge of the bill, I do not want to infringe on whatever he thinks is proper, and I am ready to yield to his request, and I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, while I sympathize with the purpose the Senator from Pennsylvania has in view, I think the amendment will utterly fail to accomplish the proposed object. Reading it in the ordinary sense, it seems to me it is absolutely nugatory and void because of its uncertainty. I will read it:

Any person holding any office or position under the United States, by appointment, who shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated, shall, upon conviction therefor—

It does not say by what tribunal the conviction shall be had—upon conviction therefor after a hearing before the head of the department.

It does not imply that the department must convict him.

Mr. PENROSE. That is the intention.

Mr. NELSON. It is not expressed at all in the amendment.

I wish to say further to the Senator as to the purpose he has in view to reach a case like that of Mr. Creel, as I understand it he is not an appointee of any department; he is a direct appointee of the President.

Mr. PENROSE. That part of the amendment has been changed.

Mr. NELSON. It would hardly cover it; but if it did cover it I do not conceive that you could make that criminal which was not criminal when said or done. Our Constitution is very plain about that.

No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

If there is any question in this law which makes those acts criminal which were not criminal when perpetrated it is an ex post facto law, and it is utterly nugatory.

So it does seem to me that giving it the scope and view the Senator intends, and that is that there is to be a trial and a conviction by the courts or by the Secretary, no court under our Constitution would ever convict a man for an offense which was committed prior to the enactment of this law. This law creates the offense; there was no such offense in existence under the law of the United States as is described in this bill prior to its enactment. So it would be utterly nugatory. It is because I look upon the question in that light that I voted to lay the amendment on the table, and for the same reason which was so well expressed by the Senator from Alabama, and that is, if I believe an amendment is not proper, is not what it ought to be, I have no scruples to vote to lay it on the table.

So I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I sympathize with what I think is the purpose he has in view, but this amendment will utterly fail to accomplish it, in my opinion. There is nothing mandatory here upon the heads of the departments. What we ought to do if we want to do anything is to first put in a prohibition and state that no head of any Government department or the President of the United States, if you please, shall employ or keep in the service of the Government any employee who is guilty of these offenses or guilty of disloyalty, if you please, giving whatever definition you see fit, and it is to be the duty of the heads of the department as soon as they ascertain it from their own information, or as soon as charges are made, to investigate these things, and if they find they are true then the employee shall be removed.

The amendment of the Senator, in my opinion, will utterly fail to accomplish what he intends to do, and I can not vote for it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I believe I had better offer this proposed amendment of mine as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I have been listening to the debate by the various Senators. I believe there can be no objection to the amendment which I propose, and I believe that it will accomplish all a vast majority of the Senators have indicated they seek to accomplish.

So that it may be understood I will read again the amendment which I offer now as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. Since I prepared the amendment the suggestion was made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to me that perhaps it was too broad and would include officials in the legislative or judicial branches of the Government, and perhaps that ought not to be done. So I will accept, if it meets the approval of the Senate, an amendment which I have written in here at the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee. It will then read:

Any employee or official in the executive branch of the United States Government who commits any disloyal act or utters any unpatriotic or disloyal language, or who, in an abusive and violent manner criticizes the Army or Navy or the flag of the United States, shall be at once dismissed from the service. Any such employee shall be dismissed by the head of the department in which the employee may be engaged, and any such official shall be dismissed by the authority having power to appoint a successor to the dismissed official.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I gladly yield.

Mr. NELSON. I have this suggestion to make: If the Senator from Montana will withdraw his amendment, I think the Senator's amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Montana has been withdrawn.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Montana has been withdrawn, and therefore I offer this as a substitute.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does it cover only employees?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It covers employees and officials. At the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee I ask leave to amend my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Mexico that that is not necessary; that he can offer his amendment now in such form as he desires.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well; I modify my amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the amendment be read by the Secretary as it reads now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Pennsylvania insert the following:

Any employee or official in the executive branch of the United States Government who commits any disloyal act or utters any unpatriotic or disloyal langauge, or who in an abusive and violent manner criticizes the Army or Navy or the flag of the United States, shall be at once dismissed from the service. Any such employee shall be dismissed by the head of the department in which the employee may be engaged, and any such official shall be dismissed by the authority having power to appoint a successor to the dismissed official.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Mexico does not intend this provision to apply to any act that has been heretofore committed, of course. In other words, it is not retroactive in any way. It being in the nature of a quasi-criminal proposition, it will be strictly construed, and, of course, will be prospective in its construction. Therefore, no matter what anyone may have said concerning the Constitution in the past, no matter what criticism he may have leveled at the Constitution or the American Government or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, he would not be removable under the amendment which the Senator proposes.

I do not think it possible or probable, at least, that anyone who has been appointed to any place, so long as he is in close connection with his position and his salary, is very liable to make any such remarks, and therefore the very purpose for which the original amendment is offered is lost sight of, and that is to compel the removal of those persons who may be found in the service of the United States whose mental attitude toward the Constitution is such that they ought not to hold the place.

I will vote against this proposed amendment simply because it does nothing. All it does is to say if a person has been guilty of the offenses for which he should be punishable he shall be removed from office.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator's criticism is well taken. It reminds me of the clerk who, when the administration changed, said no one need suppose he was fool enough not to change his politics as fast as the administration changed. So those now in office are not going to commit these deeds. They are watchful over their speech and conduct. Hence the amendment really amounts to nothing.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to say a few words, prompted by some remarks of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. So far as the officials referred to in the amendment are concerned, they are appointed by the President of the United States under the provisions of the Constitution, and they are removable by the President of the United States for any cause that he thinks sufficient, even in the case of those officers whose appointment must be confirmed by the Senate. So if the President of the United States, being advised of the fact, thinks the case calls for the removal of the officer, he will be entitled to remove him, notwithstanding the provisions of this act if it becomes a law.

Mr. McCUMBER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Moreover, Mr. President, it is doubtful whether this act can put any constraint upon the President of the United States and require him to remove an officer for anything described in the act. So far as that is concerned, it is merely suggestive in character. It does not arise to the dignity of a law, because there is no way of enforcing it.

So, Mr. President, with respect to officers whose continuance in service is not protected by law. If Congress has vested the appointment of any officer in the head of a department the power of appointment gives the power to remove for any cause the head of the department deems sufficient. A great many people in the public service are protected or are believed to be protected by the provisions of the civil-service act. The only force of any of these amendments that are proposed is to remove from those now complained of, except in the civil-service act, the protection of the act so far as the matters to which these amendments refer go. So no one need be alarmed that anyone who may have transgressed in any of these particulars in the past may be continued in office or protected in office if any of these amendments happen to be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no question about the power of the President to remove any appointee. I will go further than that and say that notwithstanding our civil-service law the President has the right to remove any of these appointees, and that the civil-service law is merely a suggestion to the President that it is the view of the country as expressed by the Congress that he should not summarily remove them without proper cause. He would not be compelled to abide by that.

All this amendment does—and I am speaking of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania—is a suggestion to the President that he should remove from any office anyone who has heretofore held such opinions concerning the Constitution of the United States and our form of government as would make him practically unfit to hold his position. That is all that it can be, in my opinion.

The amendment to that amendment, offered by the Senator from New Mexico, tends to excuse those who held those views prior to the entrance of this country into the war. I do not believe that any man can so suddenly change his views with reference to the Constitution of the United States and the character of our form of government that it changes his whole opinion simply because we are in a war. The question of the Constitution and the question of whether we are righteously in this war are two separate and distinct questions.

I do not think the Senator would claim that an anarchist, even though he would be very loyal to this Government, ought to hold a position under it, or that a person who believes that we ought not to have a republican or representative form of government, but that we ought to have an autocracy, should be an officeholder under the Government. If persons had those views prior to the war they probably will continue those views during the war.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I, of course, realize the force of what the Senator from North Dakota has said. I am in sympathy with nearly all that he has said. But we want to keep a larger class of people in Government service than that indicated by the Senator from North Dakota, and I submit that things have been done in the past which were in the twilight zone that are not of sufficient magnitude to justify us in going back and drawing fine distinctions as to what would have been considered patriotic or disloyal at that time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator you already have provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from New Mexico for the punishment of those people who make such utterances. I assume that if you prosecute them—and they can be prosecuted even though they hold a public office—and if prosecuted for disloyal sentiments, they will not hold their office after an indictment has been urged against them. So it is unnecessary for that purpose. The only purpose there can possibly be is the purpose to reach those who have convictions not concerning loyalty, but convictions concerning the Government of the United States and our Constitution which render them unfit to hold a position under it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said to the Senator from New Mexico when he introduced this amendment, several days ago, that I did not object to it, and therefore I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the following amendment to the bill as a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. The use of the mails shall not be permitted to any newspaper, magazine, or periodical, circular, or pamphlet which is printed in whole or in part in the German language, unless the German text is accompanied by a translation into English printed beside said German text and in the same issue of such newspapers, magazines, periodicals, circulars, or pamphlets.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am glad to accept that amendment, as far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. NELSON. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept it, as far as I am personally concerned.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only want to say this word: I have always believed, and believe now, that the great mass of the citizens of this country of German extraction are as thoroughly loyal as any other class of citizens. We see their names in the casualty lists every day, and the great mass of them speak English. Some of them speak no other language except that of the United States.

This amendment of mine simply carries out and puts into law the regulation of the Post Office Department at this moment. German is the enemy's language. Many of the papers, judging from extracts that I have seen, have gone to the very verge of disloyalty and over it. I think it is only a protection in the direction of this bill that there should not be papers published in this country in the enemy language containing disloyal utterances in a language which the great mass of the people of the country can not understand. If we are to have a foreign-language newspaper in this country in this time of war that is published in the enemy language it ought to be accompanied by an English translation, so that we may know what they are doing.

Mr. FALL. I wish to ask the Senator a question. Why should we discriminate as to the German language alone?

Mr. LODGE. It is enemy language.

Mr. FALL. Is not the Austrian enemy language? In my judgment, the Turkish is enemy language; the Bulgarian is enemy language.

Mr. LODGE. Austria has no universal language. It has something like 17 languages.

Mr. FALL. Very well. Then are not the 17 languages in Austria exactly on the same plane?

Mr. LODGE. No. All the Austrian Germans are our enemies. I do not think there are more bitter foes of Germany in the world than the Bohemians are. They are ardent against them. I do not want to interfere with other languages; I want to interfere only with the enemy language, which is the language of the German Empire.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment for that very reason. I want to interfere with the sending of literature through the United States mails in any other than the English language, or, at least, not permitting the literature to go through the mails in any other language unless accompanied by a translation. Unfortunately I do not understand as many languages possibly as the Senator from Massachusetts, and I want to have the original and the translation published side by side. This is an English-language country, it is an American country. It is not an Austrian nor a Bohemian nor a Slav country nor a Turkish country nor a Bulgarian country. It is an American country and English is the language of the country, and the use of our mails should be permitted to English literature or, at least, a translation in English; it makes no difference in my judgment what language may be used. If you confine this proposition simply to the German language I certainly will not vote for it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am utterly opposed to this amendment, and I shall briefly state my reasons. During the last Congress we passed legislation giving the Post Office Department full power to regulate this matter of foreign newspapers. I voted for that and I am heartily in favor of it. The Post Office Department have laid down rules under which loyalist papers which have shown their loyalty, and have always been loyal, can go on and publish in their own vernacular language any news pertaining to the war or the progress of the war, but it has always held that those papers that are not loyal must publish a translation of any article of that kind in English.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit, the law was passed at the last session.

Mr. NELSON. I think so.

To my mind, Mr. President, this is a direct insult to the large German population in this country. While there are some among them who are not loyal the bulk of them are as loyal as those who are native born.

I object to this amendment because it segregates the German from all other foreign newspapers. If the amendment covered all newspapers published in foreign languages I would not look upon it as a discrimination.

Mr. President, in my neighborhood 60 miles from where I live is the small city of St. Cloud. The Catholic bishop of that diocese lives there. He is a native of Minnesota, but of German descent, Bishop Busch. He is as patriotic and as loyal as any man who is descended from any pilgrim who landed at Plymouth Rock. Two months ago he issued a patriotic pastoral letter to all the priests of his diocese, directing them to read it at the morning service on the ensuing Sunday. He is publishing a newspaper partly in English and partly in German, of which he has sent copies to me. That bishop has done more good with his paper and through his actions than any other man I know of in that community. I have a right to speak in this way, because I have been brought up as a believer in the Lutheran faith. I should have been glad if all the Lutheran ministers had been as loyal and as patriotic as has been the Bishop of St. Cloud. It is because this proposition will be considered an insult to the people of German descent in this country, because we segregate their language from all the other languages in the country, that I oppose this amendment.

Mr. President, I read this morning a list of the names of the men who have fallen in France, those who have died in battle, those who have died in the hospitals, and those who have been wounded, and I was impressed with the great number of German names. That was as plain as could be. We shall have in the Northwest, in the State of Minnesota and other States, a large body of young men under the selective draft who will join our Army in France to fight in the trenches and in the open field. I do not want anything done to discourage them or to arouse a feeling in this country among the Germans that, as a body, we classify them as black sheep in the American Republic. I want to leave as wide open and as free to them the door of loyalty and patriotism as it is to any other class of our citizens.

So, Mr. President, to my mind, the amendment proposing to segregate the German language from all other foreign languages makes an invidious and unjust discrimination and is a slap in the face of our loyal German citizens in this country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may again be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill, following the amendment already adopted, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

The use of the mails shall not be permitted to any newspaper, magazine, or periodical, circular, or pamphlet which is printed in whole or in part in the German language, unless the German text is accompanied by a translation into English printed beside said German text and in the same issue of such newspapers, magazines, periodicals, circulars, or pamphlets.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, Does this amendment apply merely to the duration of the war or does it relate back to prior years?

Mr. LODGE. I only intend the amendment to apply now, during the war.

Mr. McKELLAR. On its face I do not believe it will have that effect.

Mr. LODGE. I have no other intention. The amendment is entirely prospective, in my judgment.

Mr. McKELLAR. And to operate only during the war?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it could be retroactive.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think it would be better to say "during the period of the war"?

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to limit it in that way.

Mr. McKELLAR It seems to me it ought to be limited to the period of the war.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to so limit the amendment if the Senator from Tennessee desires to add those words.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have the Senator make that modification in his amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Secretary to so modify the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the modification of the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The SECRETARY. In line 1 of the amendment, after the word "mail," it is proposed to insert "during the period of the present war," so as to read:

The use of the mails during the period of the present war shall not be permitted—

And so forth.

Mr. LODGE. That will cover it.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, Is it the intention to exclude from distribution through the mails religious pamphlets, tracts, and other issues of societies?

Mr. LODGE. It is not my intention to exclude anything from the mails that carries an English translation with it.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Ohio desires to speak, I will yield to him.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to say a word, if I may.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I think I feel as keenly as does the Senator from Massachusetts the necessity of making this Republic an English-speaking Republic. I am as anxious, as is he, to provide against the utterance or distribution of disloyal sentiments through any sort of publication issued in the German language. I asked my question with one particular thought in mind. I happen to be familiar with a very well-established and highly loyal religious organization, which is probably doing as much toward the Americanization of the foreign born of this Republic as is any agency in the United States, and I am wondering if we would not defeat the purpose we have in mind if we undertake to go so far as this amendment proposes at this time.

Quite apart from the prohibition on the religious organizations of this country, we have actually encouraged throughout the United States, particularly in my State, the publication of foreign-language newspapers.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I desire to say that I have no possible objection to exempting religious, scientific, or educational publications. My object is to reach the political and the news columns; indeed, those are pretty well reached in the law now.

Mr. HARDING. Well, Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Massachusetts has that thought in mind. I should welcome to his proposed amendment a modification of the language such as he has just suggested.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARDING. But let us go a step further. As was pointed out by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], we have already enacted a law requiring that the German-language newspapers shall not have access to the mails during the war, except on a license issued by the Post Office Department or by an accompaniment to every editorial article of an English translation.

Mr. LODGE. It applies to all foreign-language newspapers.

Mr. NELSON. If my friend will allow me to correct him, it applies not only to German papers but it applies to all papers which are published in foreign languages.

Mr. HARDING. I stand corrected. I only had the thought in mind that the particular application of the law has been in relation to German newspapers; and because of the fact that I represent a State with a great many German-language newspapers I have been brought into more or less intimate knowledge of the operations of the Post Office Department in that regard. I happen to know that licenses to use the mails, without weekly or daily inspection, have been very grudgingly granted; and in every case where there has been the slightest suspicion of disloyal or seditious utterances licenses have been altogether withheld.

Now, I am opposing no restriction along that line which safeguards public sentiment in this country. I am willing to go much further. I am perfectly content to go on record now and say that the day is near at hand when the making of a really American Republic demands that we have a one-language Republic; but I seriously doubt if it will contribute to the concord of the American spirit at this time to turn and place the ban on all foreign-language newspapers when we are seeking the cooperation and concord and patriotic spirit of all the people in this country, no matter what their origin.

I know of very many German-language newspapers which carry the finest utterances of American devotion and loyalty that are printed anywhere in this land. I have not the slightest doubt that there are many abuses; I have not the slightest doubt that many a traitor is hiding behind the camouflage that is contained in many of these publications. I am wondering, however, if this drastic step at this time—and it is a drastic step—will not bring us more embarrassment than it will accomplish of good. If the Senator from Massachusetts and others who think as doubtless he does, and as I cordially agree, will at another time, when the country is less torn and rent with dissension than it is to-day, will take up the basic proposition of making this an English-speaking Republic, I want to join him in that movement; but I very much doubt the wisdom of going so far as is proposed at this particular time. In any event, if the amendment proposed should prevail, I most urgently suggest that there be such a revision of the amendment made as will exempt religious publications, so that societies which are contributing earnestly and notably to the Americanization program will not be hampered by this provision.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course I have not the slightest desire to interfere with publications of the character which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] suggests, but when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] speaks about discriminating against the Germans in this country, I desire to say that they demand a privilege, and that is that they shall not speak the language of the country. I believe the great mass of the Germans in this country are thoroughly loyal; I repeat that. I have seen their names in the casualty lists from the battle front in France; and I believe them to be absolutely loyal and to represent the great mass of their people. The great mass of their people, however, read English, and many of them who even bear German names read nothing else. The people who do not read English and who want to have newspapers printed in German are the people who have never learned the language of their adopted country or who have never become naturalized.

Mr. President, I believe that language is one of the greatest bonds of union; perhaps the most powerful possible bond of union. I do not believe you can ever thoroughly unite a polyglot republic. You can see that to-day in Austria, with her 16 or 17 languages. Language, I repeat, is one of the greatest of all possible bonds, and the Senator from Ohio knows as well as I do that a general proposition to get rid of all these newspapers printed in foreign languages—he must know it—could never be accomplished in ordinary times. Political pressure would be altogether too great to permit it.

I aim this amendment against the German-language newspapers, not because I want to discriminate against loyal Germans; I have no thought of that sort; but I am trying to carry out what I believe to be the purpose of this bill; that is, to crush out disloyalty and sympathy with Germany.

Germany is our enemy. What is the use of splitting hairs over Turkey and Bulgaria, that, to begin with, have no newspapers in this country? Our enemy is Germany, and the German language is the language of the enemy that is threatening the existence of this Government and of every ideal that this country holds dear. When such newspapers discuss politics or print the news in the German language in this country, I want to know in the language of this country what that news is and what those political sentiments are.

I had forgotten, I frankly confess, how explicit the present law is, but I think it is a little too narrow. I want to stop the disloyalty that this bill aims to stop. I have heard very ardent expressions of intention to reach the so-called soap-box orator, the man on the corner, and this man and the other man who is making all kinds of remarks, but if he is allowed to veil his remarks in the German language we have apparently no desire to reach him.

I think, Mr. President, we ought to be able at least to know what is being said in the enemy language. Some of these people are loyal. I have no desire to strangle a religious or scientific or educational publication, and still less a loyal paper, but there is no way of getting at the disloyal ones—and there are plenty of those—except through the post office and by making a test. That is the reason I introduced the amendment, and the only reason.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in substantial accord with the views expressed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. The method of dealing with the foreign-language press presents many serious questions. At the outset an important question is as to the power of the Federal Government to legislate in respect to the press. That question engaged the attention of Congress at the time the alien and sedition laws were passed. Senators are familiar with the contentions then made, as well as the position taken thereafter by those opposing such enactments. It was broadly contended by Mr. Madison that the States, under their police powers, alone could deal with the press; that the Federal Government had no power to enact police regulations; and the inhibitions found in the amendments to the Constitution prohibited Congress from abridging the freedom of speech or of the press. I do not intend discussing the constitutional question involved in the consideration of the bill before us nor the legal questions that might be raised by the amendment just offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. There can be no question, however, as to the power of Congress to regulate the entire Postal System of the country and designate what may or may not be carried in the mails. In the case of In re Rapier, One hundred and forty-third United States, page 110, it was clearly pointed out that to refuse the facilities for the distribution of matter deemed injurious by Congress to the public morals was not any interference with the freedom of the press or with any of the rights of the people. As I remember the case, the opinion of the court went further, and in effect held that Congress has the discretion to determine what it will permit to be carried through the mails of the United States, and what it may exclude. The same doctrine was held in the case of Ex parte Jackson, Ninety-sixth United States. So, I think there can be no question but what Congress has the power to enact legislation of the character suggested in the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

It is not necessary to invoke the war power of the Federal Government to support the proposition, although it can be argued with great force that under the war power the foreign-language press might be denied the use of the mails. Certainly, if Congress were of opinion that the newspapers published in the German or any other language were disloyal, or that their publication and dissemination were inimical to the interests of the Nation in the prosecution of the war, such publications could be excluded from the mails. By this statement I do not mean to be understood as contending that Congress would have no other method of dealing with disloyal publications or newspapers whose utterances impeded the great war undertaking of our country.

Several months ago I gave some little attention to the foreign-language press of the United States and considered at that time the question as to whether there should be legislation looking to its suppression. Numerous complaints were made, not only to me but to other Senators, that many of the newspapers published in foreign languages within our country were either openly seditious and disloyal or in a subtle and sinister way were opposing the war and the efforts of our Nation to prepare for the great contest. I receive many letters urging that Congress enact laws prohibiting the publication of any newspaper in the language of any country with which we were at war. Many of the letters which I received in relation to this question urged that now was the proper time to destroy all foreign-language newspapers. The contention was made that the publication of so many newspapers in other languages tended to prevent unity and assimilation, and, upon the contrary, directly contributed to separatist movements, and was calculated to maintain racial lines, the result of which was and would be a divided and polyglot population. In August of last year I introduced a bill, S. 2781, which provided that—

> It shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in the German or in any language other than the English language, any comments respecting the Government of the United States, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or of any matter relating thereto without printing or publishing in a column parallel to such matter a true and complete translation of the same in the English language.
>
> Any print or publication in German or any other foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this act shall not be admitted to the mails, and it shall be unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

A violation of the provisions of the bill was to be punished by penalties which were set forth in another section of the measure.

When the Senate was considering the act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, I offered the bill which I had introduced as an amendment, and it was accepted by the Senate. After the bill passed the House it went to conference, and in conference the subject was further considered. As the bill finally passed and became a law it contained the following provision:

> SEC. 19. That 10 days after the approval of this act, and until the end of the war, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to print, publish, or circulate, or cause to be printed, published, or circulated in any foreign language, any news item, editorial, or other printed matter respecting the Government of the United States or of any nation engaged in the present war, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any print, newspaper, or publication where the publisher or distributor thereof, on or before offering the same for mailing, or in any manner distributing it to the public, has filed with the postmaster at the place of publication, in the form of an affidavit, a true and complete translation of the entire article containing such matter proposed to be published in such print, newspaper, or publication, and has caused to be printed, in plain type in the English language, at the head of each such item, editorial, or other matter, on each copy of such print, newspaper, or publication, the words "True translation filed with the postmaster at ——— on ——— (naming the post office where the translation was filed, and the date of filing thereof), as required by the act of ——— (here giving the date of this act)."
>
> Any print, newspaper, or publication in any foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this section is hereby declared to be nonmailable, and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, or association to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same, or to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute any matter which is made nonmailable by the provisions of the act relating to espionage, approved June 15, 1917: Provided further, That upon evidence satisfactory to him that any print, newspaper, or publication, printed in a foreign language may be printed, published, and distributed free from the foregoing restrictions and conditions without detriment to the United States in the conduct of the present war, the President may cause to be issued to the printers or publishers of such print, newspaper, or publication a permit to print, publish, and circulate the issue or issues of their print, newspaper, or publication, free from such restrictions and requirements, such permits to be subject to revocation at his discretion. And the Postmaster General shall cause copies of all such permits and revocations of permits to be furnished to the postmaster of the post office serving the place from which the print, newspaper, or publication granted the permit is to emanate. All matter printed, published, and distributed under permits shall bear at the head thereof in plain type, in the English language, the words, "Published and distributed under permit authorized by the act of ——— (here giving date of this act), on file at the post office of ——— (giving name of office)."
>
> Any person who shall make an affidavit containing any false statement in connection with the translation provided for in this section shall be guilty of the crime of perjury and subject to the punishment provided therefor by section 125 of the act of March 4, 1909, entitled

"An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," and any person, firm, corporation, or association violating any other requirement of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment of not more than one year, or, in the discretion of the court, may be both fined and imprisoned.

I have taken the trouble to inquire from time to time how the act just mentioned operated, and have been informed by a number of officials in the Post Office Department that it has worked in a most satisfactory manner. Under its provisions a number of disloyal publications have been excluded from the mails, as a result of which they have been discontinued. Other newspapers, whose columns had been filled with violent and unjust criticism of the Government and whose policies were calculated to hinder our country in the prosecution of the war, changed their policies—in part, at least—and have become less bitter and denunciatory. It is true that there are many foreign-language newspapers in the United States that are still foreign and not American. It is unfortunate that there are so many foreign-language newspapers published in our country. It is very regrettable that all who have come from other lands have not more quickly taken on the thoughts and ideals and language of their new home. It can not be denied but what there are those living in our midst who desire to preserve in this land the language of their native lands and who resist assimilation and absorption into the great national stream of our country. It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the evils which result from the maintenance of racial lines and the efforts to superimpose upon this land the culture or language or ideals and aspirations of Germany or any other foreign nation.

But I want to add that the time has come when there must be unity and homogeneity. This must be a nation, not many nations—one people, not many peoples. This is America, not Germany, or Austria, or any other nation. Our Government and its institutions, its aspirations, ideals, and mission are different from that of other nations, and those who come here and are welcomed into the family of this Nation must be Americans in all that the word implies. They can not be German-Americans or Irish-Americans or any other kind of Americans. The day is past for any sort of divided allegiance. This must be a united country—there must be one people and one flag. Those who are not for our country and for our flag are enemies and should be dealt with as such. But, referring to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, in my opinion it is not necessary and will not be as effective as the present law. Under the existing law the foreign-language press is held in leash and its conduct subject to careful scrutiny. If a paper is loyal and known to be such, it is not subjected to any inconvenience because it can obtain a license; but if it is distrusted or its policy is equivocal, then it must file with the postmaster at the place of publication a true and complete translation of the entire article which deals with the Government or any nation engaged in the present war, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or any matter relating thereto. The postmaster is given power to deal in an effective way with the entire foreign-language press.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the trouble with that is not with the definition the Senator has read, but the matter is left entirely to the decision of the Postmaster General.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The matter is handled in secrecy; the Postmaster General, or his agents, pass on the translation, and there is no opportunity for any public judgment or any judgment such as is carried in this proposed amendment for the protection of the citizen. I think, however, that that act might be amended in such a way as to meet very well the purpose I have in mind.

Mr. HARDING and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio, who I think addressed the Chair first.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I wish to say, with the Senator's permission, that the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts scarcely holds good, because, even if his amendment were adopted, the Post Office Department would still have the discretionary power to pass upon the accuracy of the translation of the German text.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is a trifling matter, for the translation would appear so that all could read it.

Mr. HARDING. But it would still be under the direction of the Post Office Department.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator, perhaps, is assuming that the translation would not be an accurate one, that there might be some fraud, which is improbable, because so many people understand the two languages.

Mr. HARDING. If the administrative or executive officers sought to play favorites or be unduly exacting, he would have the opportunity under the one provision as well as under the other.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think the officer would so act?

Mr. HARDING. I would rather not testify.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I feel I owe the Senator from Utah an apology for interrupting him.

Mr. KING. Not at all. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] rose; and if he desires to interrupt me I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that my fear in regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is that it does not furnish a sufficient method of discriminating between loyal and disloyal publications without at the same time imposing the same burden of printing in English upon loyal publications that is imposed upon disloyal ones. I think I am in thorough sympathy with the object which the Senator from Massachusetts has in view, namely, to encourage the use of but one language, and that is our own language, in this country and to bring under our language all our people; but at this time I confess I do not like the idea of putting upon the German paper the burden of publishing in English whether the paper is loyal or disloyal. I only want to reach the disloyal people wherever they come from and whether they belong to one nationality or to another. I do not want to assume that these people are all of such questionable loyalty that this burden should be imposed upon them, because I know, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, and as we all know, that the great mass of the German citizens of this country are perfectly loyal; and if they were let alone by the propagandists, the small per cent of agitators, they would practically all be loyal. There are a small per cent of disloyal German citizens, but I am morally certain that the great mass of the German people in this country are perfectly true to the American cause. Let us not discriminate against men because they are Germans, but make our discrimination upon the question of loyalty and disloyalty. We do not care where a man comes from or where his ancestors were born. The question is, Is he loyal? If he is loyal, let us deal with him as we deal with all other Americans.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah allow me just a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I beg leave to state that I voted for the law which the Senator from Utah has just quoted, and I was heartily in favor of it.

Mr. KING. I knew that the Senator from Minnesota supported it, and I have felt that it would accomplish much good in suppressing disloyal publications. As I have already said, it has proved a most effective weapon in dealing with seditious foreign-language newspapers. I concede that there is still much to be desired from the class of newspapers just mentioned. Many of them are negatively loyal; others are sullen and resentful; many graze the edge of treason and disloyalty in every issue. Some devote much space to a denunciation of our allies, particularly Great Britain. Others belittle the power and ability of this Nation to conduct a great war. It is clear that some of these papers have but little sympathy with our country, while others are hostile to every government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. To-day I have been examining that law, having somewhat lost track of it; indeed, I think I was absent because of illness at the time it was passed. It seems to me that if that statute does not fully cover the case we could easily amend it so as to provide against any contingency. I think it is rather a dangerous thing, Mr. President, for us to impose this burden upon the German-language newspapers. It is practically asking them to print two newspapers; and I presume it would wipe out most of them, for they could not well afford to do it.

I am quite in sympathy with the view which the Senator from Massachusetts holds, that we ought to Americanize our language as far as possible; and yet there are certain nationalities in this country that would strongly resist it at the present time, not only Germans but other nationalities; for instance, in my own section of the country, French Canadians, who form a very numerous part of our population and who subscribe to newspapers printed in their own language, most of them printed in Canada. So I think we are on rather dangerous ground when we demand that the German-language newspapers shall be printed in two languages; and believing, Mr. President, as I do, that the law which the Senator from Utah has very wisely read, which we enacted last year, can easily be amended if it becomes necessary, I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will allow me——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I have listened with attention to what has been said, and I confess that the point which has been made that the amendment as I have drawn it will confound the innocent and the guilty, the disloyal and the loyal, and will put an immense burden, which I would be the last to wish to put, upon the loyal papers, which I have no doubt are in a majority, has convinced me that the amendment is not desirable or right in its present form, and I ask leave to withdraw it.

Mr. KING. Before taking my seat I wish to make one observation.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I think one of the mistakes that we make in this connection is to assume that papers that are published in the German language are German papers even in the sense that they are owned by Germans. I happen to know of one particular newspaper, with a very large circulation and printed in the German language, which has 32 stockholders, 28 of whom are native-born citizens of the United States and the other 4 naturalized citizens, and more than 50 per cent of the stockholders are of Anglo-Saxon origin. This newspaper is a tower of strength in the community in which it is printed, because there are there a great number of Germans. It is as loyal as it can be, loyal to the core, and is going to a class of people who are reading patriotic literature published in their own language.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the loyal Americans are aroused over the pernicious activities of the disloyal foreign-language press as well as the well-nigh treasonable utterances of some newspapers published in the English language. There are a number of extreme Socialist papers and others of an anarchistic nature published in the English language. They are not only un-American, but are seeking the destruction of our Government and of all governments. Our Nation, which has welcomed with generous warmth the downtrodden and the oppressed from all lands, has received ingratitude at the hands of those whom it has sheltered and protected. There are those who seek the destruction and the overthrow of our country who have been the beneficiaries of its humane and just laws and policies. There are some who have come from beyond the seas and sworn allegiance to our Constitution and our flag who are strangers still to our form of government and who rejoice when the sorrowful news is brought to our shores that our bitter and implacable foe has been successful in some military endeavor. Demands are frequently made by loyal Americans that all disloyal newspapers shall be suppressed and that no publication shall be permitted in our country, at least during the war, other than in the English language. I have received hundreds of letters during the past six months from all sections of our country insisting that Congress shall not only deny the use of the mails to foreign-language newspapers but shall absolutely prohibit their publication. Some time ago I introduced a bill, being S. 3529, which reads as follows:

SECTION 1. That on and after July 1, 1918, and until the end of the present war, no newspaper, magazine, news item, editorial, or other matter printed, mimeographed, or otherwise reproduced in the language of any country, or part thereof, with which the United States is at war, or printed, mimeographed, or otherwise reproduced in the languages of any country, or part thereof, allied or associated in war with any country with which the United States is at war, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any print, mimeograph copy, or other reproduction brought or sent into the United States from any foreign country. Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited in the mails, or shall knowingly take or receive or cause to be taken or received from the mails anything herein forbidden, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court. Whoever shall deposit or cause to be deposited in the mails any matter herein forbidden to be carried by mail may be tried and punished either in the district in which such matter was mailed or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person or concern to whom it was addressed.

SEC. 2. That whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited with any express company or other common carrier for carriage, or shall carry from one State, Territory, District, or possession of the United States to any other State, Territory, or possession of the United States any newspaper, magazine, news item, editorial, or other matter printed, mimeographed, or otherwise reproduced in the languages of any country, or part thereof, with which the United States is at war, or printed, mimeographed, or otherwise reproduced in the languages of any country, or part thereof, allied or associated in war with any country with which the United States is at war, or shall knowingly take or receive or cause to be taken or received, from any such express company or other common carrier, any such newspaper, magazine, news item, editorial, or other matter so deposited or transported, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than five years, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any print, mimeograph copy, or other reproduction brought or sent into the United States from any foreign country.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts in so far as they are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

I am frank to say that this bill does not fully represent my views, and I am not sure that I would vote for so drastic a measure. I felt, however, that the subject should receive consideration at the hands of the Judiciary Committee, and therefore offered the bill just referred to. It is now pending before the Judiciary Committee, and I feel sure that that committee will examine into the question with care and in the light of all conditions existing, with the view of determining whether that or any other measure of similar character is required to meet conditions existing in our country. Personally I know that there are many loyal newspapers published in other than the English language in our country. There are many newspapers published in the German language whose loyalty to our country can not be questioned, and they are doing a splendid work among their readers. Of course, it is to be regretted that those who subscribe to these papers do not read papers published in the English language. It is to be regretted that there are so many foreign-language newspapers published in the United States. Efforts should be made by the States to educate those who come from other lands in the English language, so that the necessity for a foreign-language press may not exist. I do not mean to disparage the cultural advantages resulting from a knowledge of foreign languages, but I do insist that it will be better for our country and make for greater unity and strength if all our citizens know and speak the English language. This is an English-language Nation, not a German-language Nation, or an Italian-language Nation. I have been surprised to find that in some States laws require the publication of certain legal notices in the German language. As I have stated, any plan which is opposed to the solidarity of all our people should meet with stern and relentless opposition. There are a number of French newspapers published in our country that have exerted a powerful influence for good among their readers. The same can be said of some newspapers published in the Norwegian, Danish, and Swedish languages. It might be very unwise to strike these newspapers down at the present time; indeed, with my present views I would not support a bill to prohibit the publication of all foreign-language newspapers; but, as stated, the question, I believe, will be fairly and exhaustively considered by the Judiciary Committee. I believe that the bill which is now under consideration, if it becomes a law, together with the statutes which we now have, will enable the Government to deal effectively with the disloyal press of our country.

The sentiments against papers published in the German language is partially the result of the efforts made by Germany to control those countries into which Germans have gone. There is a feeling among the American people that Germany has sought to control the policies of other nations by maintaining a sort of imperium in imperio. There is much evidence to support the contention that Germany attempted the colonization of certain Provinces of Brazil with a view to making Brazil, or a part of that country, a colony of Germany. A powerful movement in Germany has been under way for years to Germanize other lands and to extend German control and influence over our Republic.

The Pan-German League has for years waged an unceasing warfare in behalf of "Deutchtum." This organization has boldly sought to control the Germans in Austria and influence Austria's political life. It has also aimed at world dominion in behalf of Germany. For years it has had the active support of the German Government and has attempted a propaganda in this country, as in other countries into which German people have gone. The purpose of that propaganda was to maintain a separatist movement, to keep Germans who went into South America or into the United States or elsewhere as Germans, as German nationals, to prevent assimilation or absorption; to impose upon other peoples German kultur, German ideals, and in the end the German rule.

A considerable portion of the German press of the United States has been a tool in the hands of this Pan-German movement, and has sought to prevent the Americanization of the Germans who have come to this country. In some States strong efforts have been made to control the schools in the interest of this separatist movement and in harmony with the Pan-Germanic scheme. It was thought that the teaching of the German language in the schools would tend strongly to develop the German ideals and superimpose German kultur upon the American people. This movement has sought to influence political thought and action in our country and has strongly resisted the melting process, so essential to national unity and strength.

It may be that in the near future Congress may feel constrained for the good of our country to pass some act dealing in a more comprehensive manner with foreign-language newspapers. I desire to state that some of the most disloyal newspapers published in the United States are those published in the Italian and Russian languages, and in the so-called Yiddish language. There are a number of anarchistic newspapers published in the Italian language, and a considerable number published in the Russian language; these publications are more opposed to our Government and are far more sinister in their purposes and in their consequences than any of the German publications in the United States. Certainly there should be no suppression of German papers if these are permitted to exist.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. The law that the Senator has read, and very properly read, covers all those publications.

Mr. KING. Oh, yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Postmaster General does his duty, as I have no doubt he is trying to do, he will have all those newspapers examined; and if he finds that they are committing acts against our Government that are prohibited by the statute which we are about to pass, of course they will be forbidden the use of the mails.

Mr. KING. May I say to my friend in reply, though, that some of these newspapers are disseminated in other ways than through the mails. For instance, the Tageblatt, published in Philadelphia. It has been excluded from the mails, but nevertheless it is now issuing about 10,000 copies and distributing them to the people through other instrumentalities than the mail. It is a paper which has been disloyal and is still disloyal and hostile to this country and to the cause of liberty, for which it is making supreme sacrifices. The influence of this subtle and sinister paper is for evil; it is an ally of our enemies.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then a few words added to the existing law would cover that, would they not? The Senator could easily frame language that could cover it.

Mr. KING. Yes; I think that could be done.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The newspaper he has described surely will be caught under the law we are now passing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I think so.

Mr. LODGE. It includes printing, publishing, and uttering. That is the kind of newspaper I want to get at; and I think this law will reach that, because it covers printing, uttering, and publishing.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is right; and the bill which we are now discussing, if it passes in substantially its present form, will reach some of the traitorous and disloyal newspapers now being published in our midst. There are a number of papers of this character which are excluded from the mails, but continue their poisonous work by other means of distribution.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. I will ask the Senator from Utah if he does not think the Philadelphia publication to which he has just made reference might be closed under an Executive order?

Mr. KING. Under what statute, may I inquire of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARDING. I can not specify the statute; but under such an Executive order, for instance, as President Lincoln issued closing some very eminent New York papers during the Civil War.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that one of the attorneys for the Government who aided in the prosecution of the Tageblatt editors a few days ago—and they were acquitted by direction of the court—called at the Senate Office Building this morning to see me, for the purpose of urging that legislation be enacted that would enable the Government to meet the situation and mete out justice to the viperous and traitorous publications menacing the peace and tranquillity of the people. The Tageblatt was published for months, carrying on a wicked and alien campaign against our country, and yet the publishers and editors were so covert and so subtle that they could not be convicted of treason. They were indicted under the treason statute, but the prosecution failed. The attorney just referred to stated to me that he could find no law by which the publication of that paper could be prohibited or the editors prosecuted.

Mr. HARDING. The Senator is aware, is he not, that under his military authority President Lincoln stopped the publication of certain newspapers?

Mr. KING. Oh, I know that President Lincoln ordered the military authority to prohibit the publication of a number of newspapers, and it was done. Gen. Burnside issued a number of orders suspending the publication of some very important newspapers in the United States; and other military commanders acting under general, and in some cases special, authority prevented the publication of newspapers.

Mr. HARDING. Most of which were quite outside of the war zone, too.

Mr. KING. Yes; they were outside the war zone. I am inclined to think that under the decisions of the courts, particularly the decision in the Milligan case, the action of the President of the United States could not be supported.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The country could well afford to pay but little attention to the outcome of discussions of lawyers in court if the safety of the country in a war was preserved by the action of the Executive. The duty and the authority of the Executive is to administer all of the various war statutes which we have passed. He has full responsibility for their execution. He has the power, of course, subject to a wise discretion, for which he is held responsible by the American people as to its wisdom, its justice, and its results, to suppress any activity or any agency which, in his judgment, interferes with the carrying out of the laws of Congress.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit, I would like to propound a question to him. I ask the Senator, in view of the discussions which we have been having here with respect to freedom of speech in the United States, taking into account the expositions of that view by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], keeping in mind the constitutional inhibitions upon Congress concerning the abridgment of the freedom of speech, does not the Senator think that there might be some difficulty if the President of the United States should suppress some of these newspapers upon the ground that they were disloyal? Would it not be urged that he was acting not only in an arbitrary manner but wholly without authority and that he was abridging the liberty of the press and interfering with the right of free speech?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly that would be urged by every spy and traitor and disloyal individual in the United States, and the action of the President would be applauded to the skies by every American patriot.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while I am just as anxious as anybody can be to go to the limit in suppressing the disloyal press and in punishing spies and traitors, I would prefer to have some statute upon which to predicate our conduct, whether it be executive action or whether it be the action of some of the subordinates of the Government. In other words, I would prefer that we observe the forms of law. This is a Government of law, and even in war the Constitution is not abrogated. We can under the Constitution and with due regard for law protect this country from the traitors, spies, and treasonable publications.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I want to remind my good friend from Washington that the men who are shouting about freedom of the press do not all belong in the category to which he refers. There are a lot of statesmen who can not be called German spies, or operating directly for the Germans, who are all the time shouting about freedom of speech and freedom of the press, and they can see something in every attempt to repress disloyalty that bears in that direction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. The fault I found with the Senator's statement was that he did not include enough classes in his specifications.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not propose to include all classes. I just included some of them; and I agree with the Senator that there are a great many people who seem to be exercised for fear the liberty of their speech may be interfered with who apparently are perfectly willing that the personal service and the accumulated property of citizens of the country may be taken and put into this war. They seem to regard the right to talk as a more precious privilege than any other right that there is. I think it is one of the least valuable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can not say that I quite agree with the position of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] last evening in rebuking the Senators—as he did in a very strong way—because of what he claimed to be the wasted time in the discussion of the question of freedom of the press, nor do I quite support the views of the Senators from Washington and Minnesota. I believe that whenever any question is presented for consideration involving the freedom of speech and of the press and those personal guaranties that come down to us with the Constitution the utmost caution should be exercised, even in time of war. I think we should approach the question of abridging the freedom of the press with care and with discrimination, and with a recognition of the fact that our liberty and the splendid civilization which we enjoy are the products, in part at least, of the application of the principles embodied in our Bill of Rights. It is exasperating that in the United States there should be foreign newspapers, and some published in the English language, that are disloyal, that are in a subtle manner expressing sympathy for Germany, and doing everything they can to hamper the United States in the prosecution of the war. And we have German propagandists here doing all that they can to stir up sedition and domestic strife and to obstruct our country in the great task before it.

There are others who are aiding Germany and injuring the United States by their violent opposition to Great Britain. Professing devotion to our country and opposition to Germany, they bitterly assail England, who is fighting our battles and for the cause of civilization. Only a night or two ago in this city, I believe, a woman from Ireland spoke, and a number of Irish-Americans participated. England was denounced and appeals were made for Irish freedom. Our ally was held up to scorn and opprobrium. There was not one word denouncing the barbarities of Germany and her wanton disregard of all law; not a word concerning England's heroic fight for liberty and the cause of humanity. The speakers seemed to be more interested in weakening our cause and attacking our strongest ally than in defending our country from the domination of Germany. Unfortunately we have those in our midst who are not loyal to truth, who are at heart enemies to our country, who are unfit to live under the Stars and Stripes of this Republic. But we will deal with them and with the disloyal press in a legal and proper manner and under the forms of law.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to understand the Senator. Does the Senator believe that this whole subject ought to be treated by a separate bill which will cover all foreign-language papers instead of by a single amendment?

Mr. KING. Yes; I think so. As I stated a few moments ago, there is a bill now pending before the Judiciary Committee that deals with the entire subject of the foreign-language press; and I shall urge the Judiciary Committee to give consideration to that measure at a very early date. But while I am upon my feet, in view of the fact that the Senator from Idaho has an amendment to offer to this bill, I desire to submit one or two further observations.

The amendment of the Senator from Idaho is to strike out from the original espionage bill the provision or section——

Mr. OVERMAN. He is not going to introduce it.

Mr. KING. He is not?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. KING. I will finish my sentence and then pretermit any further observations, in view of the statement suggested by the Senator from North Carolina. That amendment had for its object the striking out of the provision in the espionage bill which authorizes exclusion from the mails of certain seditious matter. I just wanted to state that that section has been wonderfully efficacious and has resulted in the exclusion from the mail of thousands and hundreds of thousands of documents seditious and disloyal.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section, to be known as section 5:

Every official and employee of the United States and of any of its departments, councils, and boards, whether constituted by law or administrative order, shall, within 10 days from the date hereof, notwithstanding that he may heretofore have taken an oath of office, take an oath to support the Government of the United States, its Constitution and laws, and the cause of the United States, as well as an oath to faithfully perform the duties of his office. Every official and employee hereafter elected or appointed shall take a similar oath. Failure or refusal to take such oaths shall create a vacancy in such office or position, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I heard that amendment read, it says "within 10 days from the date hereof." Will not the Senator make it read "from the approval of this act"?

Mr. FALL. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment, Mr. President. Instead of "within 10 days from the date hereof" I ask that it be made to read "within 10 days from the approval of this act." I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words "within 10 days from the date hereof" it is proposed to insert the words "within 10 days from the approval of this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I ask to have the amendment as now amended stated from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as an additional section, to be known as section 5:

Every official and employee of the United States and of any of its departments, councils, and boards, whether constituted by law or administrative order, shall, within 10 days from the approval of this act, notwithstanding that he may heretofore have taken an oath of office, take an oath to support the Government of the United States, its Constitution and laws, and the cause of the United States, as well as an oath to faithfully perform the duties of his office. Every official and employee hereafter elected or appointed shall take a similar oath. Failure or refusal to take such oaths shall create a vacancy in such office or position, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that 10 days is rather a short time for people in the possessions of the United States to take this oath? For instance, there are officers of the United States in the Philippine Islands who are many miles from telegraphic communication; and it seems to me that it would be well to make that 30 days instead of 10 days.

Mr. FALL. I am willing to accept the amendment making it 30 days for those in the possessions of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I hope we will not cast any such reproach upon the American people. I do not want our enemy to understand that we have so little confidence, so little trust, in the officeholders of the United States that we compel them to take another and a subsequent oath. It seems to me that it casts a reproach upon the entire Government of the United States with respect to its loyalty. Because there may be one or two or a dozen persons holding places by appointment who are not loyal to the Constitution, I do not feel that we ought to introduce and pass a law of this kind which questions the loyalty of the whole.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have not said anything with reference to this amendment. The debate, if it may be called debate, which has been heard in the Senate for the last week is ample and sufficient excuse, in my judgment—with due deference to the judgment of the Senator from North Dakota—for the offering of this amendment and for the enactment of such a law.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if he thinks it would be possible, even within 30 days, for all persons in the employ of the Government, including the soldiers, to take that oath?

Mr. FALL. I have no doubt it would be perfectly feasible and possible for every soldier in the United States and every man, woman, and child in the employ of the United States Government, or connected with it directly or indirectly, to take the oath within 30 days or less time.

Mr. President, the trouble about this matter is that right here in the city of Washington there are hundreds of thousands of people in the very closest connection with the prosecution of this war on the part of the United States, and in positions of trust, who are not under any oath or obligation at all. That condition is very well understood, I think. There are people here, some of them drawing salaries, I think—at least, many of them in the employ of the Government—who are not under any obligation of that character at all to even display patriotism.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator believe that any person having in his character so little of ordinary manhood that he was opposed to his own Government would stop at all about taking an oath of that kind, and would it make any difference whatever whether he took the oath or not? Would not his sentiments be exactly the same?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I am not one of those who have taken any part in this debate with reference to Mr. Creel or with reference to any other individual.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say that I have no reference to Mr. Creel in my question.

Mr. FALL. And the amendment that I am proposing is not directed at Mr. Creel or at any other one person. There have been, however, various speeches which, if they meant anything or if they had any reference to anything pending or proposed, did question the loyalty and the fitness of Mr. Creel and of other employees or officials, or associates of the employees or officials, of this Government. Now, Mr. Creel and some others have not come before the Senate for confirmation, so that the legislative body has not in any way whatsoever had an opportunity to deal with them. Without reflecting in the slightest degree upon any of the Cabinet members or any of the heads of departments now in office, I may say that conditions have absolutely and entirely changed in this country since those gentlemen were originally appointed. I have no doubt under heaven that each of them is just as loyal as the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from North Dakota. As to just what views they may have entertained prior to this war as to the proper course for this Government to pursue, I do not know; I am in ignorance.

I want those gentlemen to take this oath. They have not taken an oath during war times; and I want those officials, or the members of the boards and their employees, who are here dealing with the people's money and spending it by the hundreds of millions, to take an oath or an obligation. The Senator from North Dakota took an oath when he became a Member of this body. People handling more money than the Senator or myself ever dreamed of are handling it here in Washington through the different departments, and are not under oath or under law or the obligations of law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I will ask the Senator if he does not think it would be better if he confined the proposal that he has made in his amendment to those who have not taken an oath? As I understand, under this amendment, if it should become a law, the President of the United States would have to take another oath.

Mr. FALL. Would it hurt the President of the United States to take an oath now to support the cause of the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do no think it would hurt him, but he has already taken one.

Mr. FALL. This is no reflection upon the President of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course not, and I do not intimate that it is. It is not any reflection upon Senators. They can all take another oath.

Mr. FALL. Certainly; and they should take it. I think it is applicable right now to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. But will two oaths strengthen the allegiance of anyone? If there is anything in somebody not having taken any oath, I can see some necessity for the amendment, probably, and we ought to have it; but a Member of the Senate having taken one oath, the oath that we take here, that is stronger than the Senator has prescribed in his amendment, I can not see why he would be improved by taking another one.

Mr. FALL. I provide that he shall not only take the oath that he has taken, but that he shall take an oath to support the cause of the United States. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. NORRIS. Not any objection in the world.

Mr. FALL. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. But Members of the Senate and of the House have all taken that oath already.

Mr. FALL. To support the cause of the United States in this war?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and to defend it against its enemies.

Mr. FALL. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator in all candor whether he does not think a law of this kind, requiring the Members of the Senate to take another oath to support the Constitution or to support the cause of the Government of the United States, would be considered as casting a suspicion upon the loyalty of the Senate as a whole?

Mr. FALL. Oh, no.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the public would so look at it. You say to the Members of the Senate of the United States, "Take another oath." "Why?" "Why, because we think you are not sufficiently bound by the oaths that you have taken." There is only one purpose in taking an oath, and that is to bind you strongly to some particular sentiment or duty. Now, when you ask them to take that oath over again, it must be because you question whether or not they are to-day conforming themselves to the prior oaths, or whether they are performing their duty. At least it seems to me that would be the view that the enemy would take. It would be the view that our own people would take.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska in a moment. This country found itself in a position once before where it had to provide for the taking of a new oath. Senators seem to have forgotten that.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was in case of a rebellion of certain of our States, in which the loyalty of other States was questioned.

Mr. FALL. In which the loyalty of certain citizens of the United States, even outside of those States, was undoubtedly questioned, and the ironclad oath was provided.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I heard the amendment read, I was of the impression that the Senator intended to require all those remaining in office to take this oath and to penalize those who refused to take it by being excluded from office.

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But a reading of the Senator's amendment indicates that anyone who fails to take the oath is not only excluded from office but is subjected to a fine of $10,000 or 20 years in the penitentiary, or both.

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the Senator think it would be a sufficient penalty to drive the man from office?

Mr. FALL. I doubt it, sir. If the Senator is asking my judgment—and apparently he is—my personal judgment upon the matter is that a man who is to-day holding office and is not willing to take that oath is a traitor and ought to go to the penitentiary; that any man who is now holding office and is not willing to take the oath required here, whether he is now under oath or not, should not only lose his office but lose his liberty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is not the Senator in danger of compelling people to perjure themselves by the threat of an imprisonment or a tremendous fine? Would it not be better to provide simply that anyone not willing to take this oath should forfeit his office?

Mr. FALL. I am frank to say that this amendment was drawn here in a very few moments, in pencil, at my desk. It is not, however, simply the thought of a moment, nor has it arisen simply during the course of this debate. It has been in my mind for very many months.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am afraid the Senator would defeat his own purpose if, by a threat of imprisonment and a fine, he led men to take this oath who might not take it willingly, and might not intend to keep it. In my opinion it would be a great deal better to deprive them of their offices if they are not willing to take the oath.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will suggest that as an amendment to the amendment, I will accept it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make that suggestion.

Mr. FALL. I accept the amendment, Mr. President, to strike out the penalty of not more than $10,000 fine or imprisonment of not more than 20 years, or both.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question. His amendment refers to the support of the cause of the United States.

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Just what is meant by that? Does it mean the cause of the United States in the present war?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Or the cause of the United States generally?

Mr. FALL. Certainly; it means the cause of the United States generally and in this war. But this is an amendment to the act. The first line of the act refers entirely to the present war; and for that reason I did not put in "the cause of the United States during the present war," as it has not been put in any of the other amendments. The act itself is one treating of war conditions, and this requirement of the officer is simply one treating of war conditions.

Mr. STERLING. Then it is the Senator's idea that it would be limited to the cause of the United States in the present war by the previous language of the act.

Mr. FALL. I think it would be, but I do not think it should be. I think necessarily it would be by the previous language of the act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hardly ever differ with the Senator from New Mexico on matters of this kind, nor could I differ from him as far as patriotic motives are concerned, but there are some disloyal officeholders in this country, probably, and they ought to be turned out of office.

We have 70,000 or 100,000 officeholders, as suggested by the Senator from North Dakota. Is it not a hardship to compel all those men to take an oath to support the cause of the United States? Is it not, rather, a reflection upon them? Four or five of them may be disloyal, and it seems to me it is going very far to make 100,000 take an oath of office to catch four or five or half a dozen or a dozen men.

Mr. FALL. I claim that of 100,000,000 people to-day in the United States 99 per cent of them are absolutely loyal. What is the Senator doing with this bill? He is trying to catch that 1 per cent. That is what I am proposing to do with the amendment I have offered.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill punishes those men who are disloyal; it puts them in penitentiaries.

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see any use to make them take an oath. If a man is disloyal, he would just as soon take an oath to support the country as not. It would make no difference to him whether he took an oath or not.

Mr. FALL. It is not necessary for me to take up any further time in explaining the matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that under the wording of this amendment I presume it would apply to all the soldiers, and it seems to me they ought to be excepted from the operation of the amendment.

Mr. FALL. They have already taken an oath to support the cause of the United States. They do that when they are mustered in.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But you provide a new rule, do you not—and, if that is true, why should all the soldiers over in France and on the way, upon the seas, be required to take on oath? It seems to me that they ought to be excepted, because they are fighting in the cause.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will offer an amendment excepting the soldiers, sailors, and marines in actual service, I will accept it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "of the United States" insert "except soldiers and sailors and marines in the actual service of the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is accepted. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico as modified. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. FALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 3 add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true with good motives and for justifiable ends.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, on yesterday I opposed such an amendment because I did not see any use to include any man telling the truth about any question. He could not be punished under this bill. It is merely substantive, and therefore I accept it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I think it quite appropriate to say that the language of this amendment is substantially in accord with the provisions of the constitutions of many States defining the liberty of speech and of the press. Similar provisions are found in the constitutions of Florida, Kansas, Nevada, South Dakota, West Virginia, Wyoming, Arkansas, California, Illinois, Michigan, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Utah, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. It is a principle of the American Constitution that is very generally recognized. I think it is very unfortunate that the Senate should have rejected the amendment as originally proposed.

I will read for the sake of the record the provision of the constitution of the State of New York:

Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions or indictments for libels the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

I think it is rather unfortunate for the Senate to go on record as opposed to the principle announced.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it is always dangerous to accept amendments that are suddenly thrown into the arena without any consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a minute. If this was a bill to determine whether the United States should recover damages against anyone who had slandered it, then I could naturally understand that the rules pertaining to slander and libel should apply. But inasmuch as the purpose of this law is to defend the United States against those who by word or act would interfere with the progress of this war, I do not concede for a single moment that we should be governed and limited by the rules in a civil action for slander or libel.

Let us take the same publication that was given here yesterday or the day before, which was accredited to Mr. Creel. Let us suppose that some person now, after this bill has become a law, should make utterances of that character, and it is claimed by the Government in a prosecution that the effect of utterances of that character was to interfere with this country in the prosecution of the war, all the defendant would have to do would be to say, "It is a question of fact to go to the jury whether it is true or not," not whether it did affect the Government, but whether it is true; and thus we can submit to a jury the question whether the German form of government is better than ours, and leave it to a German jury or a jury made up of hyphenated Americans to determine that question of fact. Of course, he would have to establish the fact that it was done for a good purpose, but I think the writer of that article could well establish the fact that when he wrote it it was intended to produce a sentiment that would result in benefit to the human race, and he would leave the jury to determine the truth or the falsity of a statement rather than to determine its effect upon the American people.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not believe it can do any harm. I should like to get on with the bill. There would be no harm in putting the Ten Commandments in the bill if we want to do it. I think there is a great deal of force in what the Senator says.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator wants to get on and get it into conference I have no objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not say I was going to do that, but if adopted it will go to conference.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say for the information of the Senator from Montana that I merely quoted this language. It is not my language at all. It is language which I quoted, and when I first presented it it was in quotation marks, but I afterwards eliminated the quotation marks as seemingly inappropriate to go into the text. It is not my language at all, but the language which is generally used.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendments.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is an amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. He is out of the Chamber at present. I will send the amendment to the desk that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] submits an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after the amendments heretofore agreed to, insert:

SEC. 2. That section 1 of Title XII and all other provisions of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, which apply to section 3 of title 1 thereof shall apply with equal force and effect to said section 3 as amended.

SEC. 3. That Title XII of the said act of June 15, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following section:

"SEC. 4. The Postmaster General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or concern is using the mails in violation of any of the provisions of this act, instruct the postmaster at any post office at which mail is received addressed to such person or concern to return to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed all letters or other matter so addressed, with the words, 'Mail to this address undeliverable under espionage act' plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters or other matter so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the senders thereof under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that there will be a call for a yea-and-nay vote upon this matter, and I simply desire to say that I shall vote against this proposed amendment. I vote against it for the same reason that I opposed the insertion of it in the espionage act in the first place. I am aware, however, that the Senate at that time was, and I presume it will at this time by a large majority be, in favor of it.

I realize, Mr. President, that under the conditions which now exist with reference to an act which we passed since we passed the espionage act some provision may be necessary in reference to the mailing of nonmailable matter. I am not myself satisfied to go on record in favor of the unlimited power which is here given to the Postmaster General in excluding printed matter from the mails.

As I said, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate or to call for a yea-and-nay vote, but I wish to be understood as voting against the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to submit a few observations.

The purpose of this amendment is to give to the Post Office Department the same authority that was conferred upon it in the espionage act. It is not necessary to detail to the Senate the great benefit which has resulted from that authority. Under it the postal authorities have been permitted to exclude from the mails hundreds of thousands, and indeed millions, of copies of tracts, cards, and other publications put forth by the I. W. W. and other treasonable and traitorous organizations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the Senator to say that the amendment, if inserted in this bill, would introduce into it a power already given by the espionage act. If that is so, why duplicate the authority?

Mr. KING. It merely carries the provisions of the espionage act into this bill in order to cover the offenses that are defined in this measure.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is the case, is not the present law sufficiently comprehensive to do that?

Mr. KING. The solicitor for the Post Office Department, after a very careful examination, reached the opinion that without this section the provision of the espionage act with respect to nonmailable matter would not be applicable to the offenses created in this act. In other words, in this bill certain acts, such as the printing or publishing of certain matter, are made offenses. You could not exclude those publications from the mails without this amendment. I was at first under the impression that the espionage act would cover this in the provision referred to, but in the opinion of the department it would not, and I reached the same conclusion after a very careful personal examination. It is merely to make applicable to this bill the same provision that was placed in the espionage act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to delay the passage of the bill. I have expressed already the very serious doubt I have about it and the very serious objections I have to certain features of it. Realizing that the majority of the Senate apparently want to enact legislation of this sort, it is not my purpose to attempt to delay them from carrying out that design. Nor do I care one way or the other whether there is a record vote or not, except, if there is not a record vote, I want it understood that I am not for this bill.

If the bill had been confined in its provisions to the recommendations that came from the Department of Justice to deal with evils that I thoroughly want to deal with, it would not have been subject to the same objections which some of the provisions of the Senate bill are liable to, and it would not be liable to what, I fear, may be a misconstruction of some of its provisions. If the bill as it passed the House of Representatives were being voted on I would cheerfully and willingly and gladly support it, but I do not regard it safe or necessary or wise to enact some of the provisions that are contained in the Senate committee amendment. Since they are to be kept in the bill, and I earnestly hoped that they might be eliminated, I can not support the bill itself.

Justice to the Senate as well as fairness to the country, however, requires me to say that in my judgment the bill has been very greatly improved by some of the amendments the Senate has made. I think the language has been much more carefully guarded than it was when the bill came originally from the committee, and in those respects it has been very much improved.

In fact, I have considered very carefully the question as to whether the improvements were so great as to authorize a man who really wants to do all that this country can do under his view of the Constitution without impinging the constitutional guaranties of freedom of speech to support the bill. I regret to say my judgment still is that that is not the case. A man who believes in the constitutional guaranties and freedom of speech as written in the Constitution and who views it as I do will find things in this bill so incompatible with that guaranty as to render it impossible for him at least to support it.

Of course, in making this statement of my own position I by no means reflect upon either the honesty or good judgment or intelligence of any Senator who thinks otherwise. I can only speak, as I can only act, of course, for myself; but I can not support the bill, as far as I am concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled 'An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917, and for other purposes."

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, Senate bill 3771.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

PROTECTION OF WAR MATERIAL AND WAR TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call up the conference report on Senate bill 383, to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to prevent the hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report has been printed and is on the desk of Senators. Does the Senator request the reading of it?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I do not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to state to the Senator that my recollection is some Senator objected to this report when it was presented.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] asked that it might go over in order that it might be printed. I do not know whether he would have an objection to it or not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from New Hampshire is not here.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask to have the conference report read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out all after the enacting clause, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the words 'war material,' as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, live stock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, or fuel; and shall also include supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description, and any part or ingredient thereof, intended for, adapted to, or suitable for the use of the United States, or any associate nation, in connection with the conduct of the war.

"The words 'war premises,' as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places, wherein such war material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'war utilities,' as used herein, shall include all railroads, railways, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad or railway fixture, canal, lock, dam, wharf, pier, dock, bridge, building, structure, engine, machine, mechanical contrivance, car, vehicle, boat, or aircraft, or any other means of transportation whatsoever, whereon or whereby such war material or any troops of the United States, or of any associate nation, are being or may be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas; and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains and pipes, structures and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas is being furnished, or may be furnished, to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, or any associate nation, and all electric light and power, steam or pneumatic power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used to supply water, light, heat, power, or facilities of communication to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'United States' shall include the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The words 'associate nation,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to mean any nation at war with any nation with which the United States is at war.

"SEC. 2. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material, war premises, or war utilities, as herein defined, or, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

"SEC. 3. That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

"SEC. 4. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any war material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such war material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title, and agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the object designed to be accomplished by this bill is both meritorious and necessary. The manufacture of war material is to-day the business of the Nation, whose future may depend upon the expedition with which that material is produced and transported. Interferences have frequently occurred since we entered this war—in fact, before we entered it—whereby production has been limited; actual production has been made defective or adulterated; and complete suspensions of work have been accomplished. Some of the things in process of production are vital to our success in this war. Of these the most vital is our shipping program, for without it, Mr. President, the resources of this country can not be effectually mobilized. We may produce enormous quantities of munitions, food supplies, equipment, and all the paraphernalia necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, but if we can not transport that material to the front it is as useless as though it had not been produced at all.

Secondary to our ships is the material; and, of course, its usefulness for the purpose for which we are producing it is quite as essential. I think it was yesterday morning that the newspapers published the statement of a high official of Great Britain that all interferences with speedy production in America of the essentials to this war were not only serious in character, but threatened the outcome of the conflict. Of course, there can be no two sides to that proposition. We are aware of it, and have been aware of it ever since we entered this war.

Mr. President, interferences with production by the individual acts of employees here and there, the mischievous conduct of spies and emissaries of our enemy in our factories, have been going on for some time. Their activities, perhaps, are multiplying. They have not only seriously affected production, but of the commodities produced many have been rendered worthless by reason of improper manufacture and of many defects which have been deliberately created in them.

I know, Mr. President, of no offense to-day that is more serious than this constant exercise within our great industrial plants of activities which are designed to interfere with production not only in the mass but with the quality of the things produced. Those engaged in that work are doing more for the cause of the Kaiser than any other individual activity I can mention; yet, Mr. President, all of them combined are not so serious as interferences in the mass with our production through the suspension of labor in the mass through strikes, through walkouts—I care not by what name they may be called—suspensions, Mr. President, which paralyze plants in their entirety, and in some instances all the plants engaged in the manufacture of particular commodities.

Mr. President, this bill, if I understand its purport, is designed to penalize and punish all active interferences with our production and with its qualities. Unless it accomplishes that it fails of its object. If in providing for the punishment of men who interfere with production, who adulterate production, who cause production to be defective, we shall encourage large bodies of men to stop work entirely, provided only they place their ostensible or actual reason for suspension upon a question of wages—I say, if we are to exempt from the operation of this bill such interferences with labor, the bill might just as well be abandoned. So, Mr. President, I seriously object to the acceptance of this report. The third section of the bill as recommended by the conference committee expressly declares that it shall not apply to suspensions of work by wage earners, provided the suspension be based upon a question of wages.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Was that provision in the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS. No; it was inserted in the other House. The bill as passed by the Senate was unobjectionable.

Mr. President, we have heard much in the discussions in this body during the past two or three weeks of an organization which is popularly known as the Industrial Workers of the World. It is an organization of self-confessed criminals, who not only do not hesitate to announce their purposes, but who seem to glory in them. They consist of murder, of robbery, of the destruction of property, and of similar propaganda in violation of the laws of God and of man. They are a dangerous organization. It is not a thing to be proud of, nevertheless it is a fact that this organization has grown with considerable rapidity during the past four or five years. They have their representatives in many communities in the United States. They are constantly at work spreading their doctrines and practicing their so-called precepts. They conduct their propaganda openly when they can, secretly when it is necessary; but they are always conducting it, and conducting it among those who are supposed to be discontented or disaffected. In these times, Mr. President, when labor is in great demand and when employers are competing with each other to secure workmen, the members of this organization find fertile soil for the sowing of their doctrine. Strikes ensue almost as an inevitable consequence.

They care nothing for the question of wages; they say so. They care nothing for existing conditions, except in so far as they may be an obstacle to their ultimate purpose, which is the total disintegration of society. It has frequently been announced, and announced as late as this morning, that official Germany has instructed its representatives and emissaries everywhere, not only before, but since we entered into this war, to utilize just such disturbing influences for the fatherland; they have been and will continue to be so used so long as it is possible to escape detection or punishment. It will run the risk of both because of the objects sought to be attained and also doubtless because of the reward which comes to successful effort.

Mr. President, if we adopt this conference report, we leave the field open to these men and their kind to continue their propaganda, the consequences of which will be immunity from punishment. In other words, we offer a premium to the very influences which we seek to suppress and give them license to continue their propaganda and to paralyze the productive energies of the Nation.

Mr. President, at this time, when the allies are engaged in a titanic struggle with the most formidable adversary of history, when the fate of nations is resting in the balance, when the soldiers of the American Union are holding the hard-pressed lines in France, when this Nation waits with breathless anxiety for tidings across the sea, how the battle goes, we are so legislating as to legalize and encourage suspensions of work in this country. At a time when every ship that can be built is essential not only to the cause of the United States but to the cause of civilization, at a time when every ounce of effort of every citizen should be utilized to support the boys beyond the sea and their allies we are about to say to the workmen of America, "You may suspend your work; you may stop building ships; you may cease manufacturing ordnance; you may leave the fields untilled, provided the only cause of your action, the only complaint you have, is one of wages."

Mr. President, what will our boys in the trenches think as they stand in serried ranks awaiting the shock of the enemy, bearing aloft the banner of this country and ready to do and die, as Americans always are—what must be their emotions to learn that the American Senate and the American House of Representatives at this hour are considering a conference report recommending the enactment of a law under whose terms the men at home may fold their arms, indifferent to that terrific contest, unmindful of what the end may be, that we may discuss the question of wages?

I am unable, Mr. President, to imagine why my good friends upon the Senate conference committee could ever have given their consent to such a conference report. This is no time, Mr. President, for any man to shirk, whether he is a workman, independent or otherwise. Labor has told us that this cause is its cause, and I believe it was sincere in that announcement; but, Mr. President, this bill should provide penalties for all who disregard its requirements.

Great Britain has dealt with this important subject by legislation and by agreements having the force of law. We should do the same thing instead of, as we seem to propose by this bill to do, legalizing conditions, encouraging the creation and continuance of the very things it pretends to prohibit and punish.

Mr. President, it may be that politics has something to do with this bill. Are we afraid of the labor vote? Are the Republican members of the conference committee and of the House of Representatives and of the Senate of the United States afraid of the labor vote? Are the Democratic members of that committee and the Democratic Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate afraid of political consequences possibly following the excision of this section. I do not want to believe it. I know, Mr. President, that in ordinary times it is the tendency of our common human nature to go far afield in elective republics lest those holding the ultimate power may use it against us. I hope that spirit has not overlapped our declaration of war, and that it will not manifest itself in bills like this. Mr. President, if political influence is to be recognized, let me remind you that the fathers and mothers, the brothers and the sisters of the boys across the sea also possess political power, and their friends as well; and if, after sending our soldiers across the ocean, we are to paralyze their efforts and jeopardize their existence by legislating for suspension of work here, those responsible may hear from that class of voters, as I hope to God they will.

Do we mean it when we say we must win this war? Then why except large bodies of our citizens from the operation of a statute made essential by the prevailing exigency? Do we mean what we say when we declare to the world that our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor are enlisted for our own and the cause of the allies? Then let us make good, Mr. President, by inserting no exemptions in a bill of this sort. It is not only wrong, it is monstrous. For my part, I will never vote for the report of this conference committee or for any similar legislation so long as I have the honor to be a Member of this body, while the war continues. It is wrong, absolutely wrong, fundamentally wrong, Mr. President. We must either speed up and bring all of our resources to the aid of our allies and our troops, or we must sooner or later yield to the aggressive power and the formidable forces of our enemy.

Mr. President, what would Germany say, what would the German Emperor say, if a measure of similar import, containing a similar exemption, were sought to be engrafted upon the statute books of the German Empire? They, Mr. President, are massing, and they will continue to mass, behind the army the entire political, social, and industrial strength of the Empire. And so with our allies. There are no strikes in France for wages or anything else. That glorious people are in death grips with their mortal enemy, and they are crying for help from the Nation which through their efforts came into being. England is to-day in this war in every respect. She has had but little difficulty such as I fear would arise under the provisions of this bill; she recognized the menace early in the conflict and met it by conference and by penal legislation.

Better pass no bill at all; better that the work of crippling our industries go on and permit incendiaries to ply their trade within and without them; better pay no legislative heed to the interruptions that have been constantly going on with production than to pass a bill of this sort, containing the exemption which I have condemned.

Ever since I have been a Member of this body, Mr. President, the tendency has been to except differing classes of people from the operation of our general laws. I can not recall a single measure of any great consequence, appropriation bills excepted, that we have enacted into legislation since 1913 which has not bristled with exemptions from its operations. Such legislation is unrepublican; it is undemocratic. A few upon the other side and a few upon this side have voted against such measures, but in vain. Our trade-commission law, our antitrust laws, practically all of the great attempted social and industrial reform legislation which has characterized the Democratic Congress since 1913 has been punctuated with exemptions. That is class legislation. Now, we propose to continue it in the midst of this great, this tremendous struggle, by recognizing, and I fear, by legalizing interruptions on any scale imaginable, provided the sole question be one of wages. Let me add in conclusion, Mr. President, that this legislative reason for suspension can always be urged ostensibly, whatever the other reasons may be.

Mr. President, let all questions of compensation be determined by arbitration, as has been done in the past; but I beseech the Senate not to enact this conference report without striking out section 3.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I wish the Senator would let me explain this conference report before he takes it up, because I think he is going to oppose it, and I should like to explain it to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want the Senate to hear the discussion, because it is a very important question.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum, because I want the Senate to know what was done and what it is endeavored to do, as I see it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Baird	Hardwick	Nelson	Sterling
Bankhead	Henderson	New	Sutherland
Borah	Hitchcock	Norris	Swanson
Calder	Hollis	Nugent	Thomas
Chamberlain	James	Overman	Thompson
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Tillman
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Townsend
Curtis	Kellogg	Pomerene	Trammell
Dillingham	Kirby	Ransdell	Underwood
Fall	Knox	Robinson	Vardaman
France	Lewis	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Sheppard	Warren
Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gerry	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Gore	Martin	Smith, Md.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to state that on the prior roll calls I was unavoidably absent, on account of being engaged on official business at the departments.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is temporarily absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, having been recognized, and intending to oppose the report, I am very glad indeed to yield to the Senator from North Carolina to express his views as to the matter to which I shall put myself in opposition. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to know exactly where we are and the reason for the adoption of this amendment. This is not a Senate amendment. This I regard as the most important bill that has been before the Senate. It passed the Senate some six months ago. It makes it a crime to burn elevators, to destroy war materials, to poison water, to do that which I described here the other day—to injure our flying machines—or to injure in any way any property that is used or might be used in the conduct of the war. It went to the House.

I will just read the Senate bill. It is very short:

That whoever in the United States, during time of war, shall willfully injure or destroy, by fire, or by use of explosives, or by other violent means, or shall attempt so to injure or destroy any war material, war premises, or any war utilities, as herein defined, or any building or other property of the United States, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

The bill went to the House, and the House had it over there, as I say, some three or four months. They have amended it in some particulars of which I am heartily in favor. I stand for the conference report, for the reason that we are told by the conferees that if this amendment is rejected we will have no legislation.

Now, let us see what the amendment to the bill is. I will read what is known as the Cannon amendment. Uncle JOE CANNON introduced this amendment:

Whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

A very good amendment. Then one of the leaders of the House of Representatives offered this amendment:

That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

That was in conference some time, and we could not agree. Then, as a matter of compromise, the Senate put in the words "sole and," so as to read, "with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages," so that it would read, as in the bill agreed upon:

That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that the conferees on the part of another body issued an ultimatum that unless that was agreed to there would be no legislation?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they did not issue an ultimatum. They said that they did not think they could possibly get the House to recede from what is known as section 3.

Mr. GALLINGER. But they did not try the House, did they?

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, they knew the temper of the House. This bill has been over there six months.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was not many weeks ago—indeed, a very short time ago—when my good friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who sits in front of me, suggested to the Senate that unless we agreed to a certain provision in a conference report we could not have any legislation; but we sent it back, and it came back here in the shape in which some of us wanted it, and was speedily agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am in sympathy with a good deal of what has been said, but the situation is this: We are told that the House will not agree. Now, here is what the Senate has done in the past: The Senate by a large majority in the Clayton bill, under the Cummins amendment, said that labor was not a commodity; that men had a right to stop work if they wanted to. The Senate having gone on record as to that by putting in the words that the men should only stop work for the bona fide purpose of raising wages, limiting it to that, we thought that was about as far as we could go, in view of the instructions from the House, and we finally agreed with a good deal of reluctance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not the Senator think that in this time of stress and strain it is unwise to flaunt this flag in the face of the country constantly?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it is unwise for us to have a fight with labor now. If it is necessary to conscript everybody in this country—labor and everybody else—as we have conscripted our boys, I might join the Senator in that; I would be willing to vote for a conscription act under those circumstances. But in this sort of a bill I think it unwise to make a fight right here on this matter. The leader over there who represents, as I understand, the labor interests of the country, has offered this amendment, confining it solely to stopping work for the purpose of securing higher wages. We have plenty of laws on the books for settling labor disputes by arbitration; but I think, Mr. President, in line with the speech of the Senator from Colorado, with much of which I sympathize, if we want to make these men work, regardless of what wages we pay them, let us conscript them.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, Mr. President; I think we do not ask them to work without any reference to the wages we pay them. We have a commission of conciliation and mediation in this country. We have a system of arbitration which has been employed to very good advantage. There is no disposition to force men to work for a given wage in this country and never has been.

Mr. OVERMAN. The legislation provides that we shall not force them to work.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I observe that.

Mr. OVERMAN. This amendment provides that if men want to get more wages, they have a right to stop work. That is what it is, and that is about all it is. I know that it passed the House by a very large majority, so that the House conferees did not think they could possibly get the House to recede from this amendment. I will say that there was a good deal of opposition on the part of the Senate conferees to this amendment, as there is in the Senate; but after looking over the situation, in view of the fact that it is confined solely to a bona fide effort to secure higher wages, we finally agreed on this. Those are the facts.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we have had the same proposition put up to us several times during my incumbency as a Member of this body that unless the conferees of the Senate yielded we would have no legislation. That means, in broad terms and in specific language, that our conferees must be subservient to the conferees of another body whenever they issue an ultimatum. Now, I do not agree to that at all.

When I asked that this conference report should go over and be printed, I did so for the reason that as it was read I caught this provision which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has read, and which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has discussed with great earnestness and ability.

We have no laws on the statute books that I recall that prevent laboring men from striking for any purpose. We ought to have a law on the statute books preventing them from keeping other men from taking their places when they go on strike. That we have not. I undertook, 25 years ago, when chairman of an investigating committee on the Homestead strike, in making a report signed by every Democratic as well as every Republican member of that investigating committee, to have a provision put in the law that all laboring men had a right to strike if they chose to do so, but that they had no right to prevent other men from taking their places when they were willing to do so. If that provision were in this proposed amendment, it would soften it somewhat, in my opinion, but even then it would be objectionable and unnecessary.

Mr. President, this is a very serious situation. We are in a great war. We are all appealed to every hour of every day to lay aside our prejudices and our prepossessions, to forget everything except that we are loyal to the Government, and to do everything in our power to carry on this war to a successful issue. I know that every Member of this body has done that. I make no exception in that declaration, that we are willing to do everything we can in this crisis. But I submit that unless we can have our munition factories and shipyards running, unless we can have our cotton factories running, unless we can have our woolen factories running, unless we can have all the activities that go to make up the means that must be employed to carry on this war we shall fail in the end.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] yesterday in a very eloquent manner and with great emphasis said, "We have not done a man's part in this war"; and we are not going to do a man's part in this war if our factories are to be closed, if our munition plants are to be held up, if we are to be denied the right of having the employment—the continuous employment, if you please—of those who are engaged in those activities. We are not going to do a man's part in this war for some time to come if we are to be denied those things.

What is happening in this country at the present time? I wish, before calling attention to that, to say that this amendment is entirely foreign to this bill. The Senate passed a bill. It provided means that would help us to win this war. Everybody could understand it. To inject an amendment of this kind into the body of this bill, no matter what the circumstances were that influenced our conferees, is a mistake that, if it is continued in the bill, we will live long enough to regret. The Senator from North Carolina says it was put there by the other House, and that unless it is allowed to remain there the bill will fail. I do not agree to that.

Mr. President, I have in my hand a report of the National Industrial Conference Board on "Strikes in American Industry in War Time, April 6 to October 6, 1917." I am going to ask the Secretary to read what I have marked on page 5 of that report, and then I want to animadvert upon some other matter that is contained in the same document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The serious aspect of the 1,156 strikes included in this report is clearly seen from the fact that—

The number of employees made idle was	283,402
The number of days of production lost was	6,285,519

The magnitude of the production lost in even this incomplete list of strikes would at any time be serious. In war time, when every day of production of essential materials has definite influence on the war situation, it is little short of appalling.

To visualize better the magnitude of the waste, it may be pointed out that it would require the labor of 251,400 persons for a whole month to make up for the reported loss of production; or, that a manufacturing plant employing 1,000 workers would have to operate for about 21 years of 300 workdays each in order to offset the time thus lost.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust that every Senator listened to that. In those six months—and this does not include all the strikes; it does not include a great many lesser strikes—there were 1,156 strikes, resulting in the loss of 6,285,519 days of work, at a time when we were in war, and when we are trying to prepare to do our part to save our own country, as well as the countries of our allies, from overthrow.

Mr. President, I will ask the Secretary to read the summary, which will be found on page 19, which is only two or three paragraphs, one paragraph on page 20, and the concluding paragraph on the same page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Summarizing briefly the salient features of the evidence here presented, it appears:

The first six months following the entry of the United States into the war was a period of extensive strikes. Even the incomplete returns here summarized indicate 283,400 idle workers and a loss of 6,285,000 workdays.

Strikes were most numerous and most serious in those industries particularly essential to war production.

Demands for increased wages were the most frequent cause of disputes. Strikes for recognition of union or closed-shop conditions were the most bitterly contested.

Nearly three-fifths of the disputes occurred in establishments where a majority of the strikers were members of trade-unions; the percentage of total time lost in strikes of this class was even higher.

* * * * * * *

Indications of improvement in the labor situation in recent months are apparent, but it needs only a cursory reading of the daily press to see that the war industries of this country are still heavily handicapped by labor disputes. Cooperation in efforts for the establishment of some workable program which shall minimize these disturbances, at least for the duration of the war, is the patriotic duty of both employers and employees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, no words of mine could carry to a mind not prejudiced on this question as much conviction as the words that have been read from the desk.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator will find, as I read the amendment here, that it imposes a $10,000 fine and makes it a penitentiary offense to engage in any other strike than a strike for higher wages; that is all. The amendment which was adopted here, called the Cannon amendment, is to cover the situation the Senator has spoken of, and will do so, namely, that these men can not strike. It makes it a penitentiary offense and a crime to strike; but instead of that, this third section is put in here permitting them to strike for higher wages; that is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, this is a very different matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this does not limit it to higher wages. It says:

That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. It covers a very much wider range than the mere matter of wages.

Mr. GALLINGER. It absolutely broadens it, and enables them to offer any excuse. Even if it were confined to the question of wages, it is a very easy matter for these men, some of whom have been characterized not any more severely than I would characterize them, to say that they are striking for higher wages, even when they are getting the highest wages that the world has ever dreamed of. That is what is going on to-day in this country. Why, Mr. President, if I could say to the Senate what I know as to the matter of wages in some of the munition factories in this country it would startle the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is it not true that most of those munition factories are working for the Government on a cost-plus basis?

Mr. GALLINGER. Absolutely.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate. I have gotten beyond the period in my legislative career of making long speeches. There is very much I should like to say on this subject, because I feel very deeply about it. I know that we have legislated unwisely in the past. The Senator from North Carolina called attention to the fact that in certain statutes we had made exemptions in behalf of labor; and we even went further than that in one statute, and exempted another class of our people who did not ask for exemption; but that was simply to take the edge off the exemption that we gave to labor.

I remember that in an Agricultural appropriation bill—I believe I am right—we exempted the labor organizations of this country from the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law, thereby making it a criminal offense for me to commit an act, but not a criminal offense for a man who was working on my farm to do the same thing. I opposed that as best I could, but it was impossible to stop it. It went through this body, and it went through the other body, and it became a law.

Now, Mr. President, I think we have gone far enough. This bill does not need an amendment of this kind. This bill, as it passed the Senate, is explicit in its terms. It is calculated to speed up production in this country in order to enable us to do a man's part—as the Senator from Illinois said we have not done a man's part up to the present time—to end this war successfully and honorably.

Mr. President, on some former occasions I have taken exception to this class of legislation. No man can justly say that I am an enemy of labor. God knows I have done my share of labor in my time. I will not detail it to-day; but if any man, even of my age, has done more work, certainly for the first 50 years of his life, than I did, then I do not know where that man is; and I am in the deepest possible sympathy with the laboring man. I want him to have every right that belongs to him. I want him to have the protection of the law to as great an extent as he can properly ask for it; but I am not willing that the laboring man, whether he is in a union or otherwise, shall hold up this country at the present time when we are making preparations that ought to have been made years ago so that we might do our part in this great conflict.

I remember, Mr. President, when the four brotherhoods came in here. They did me the honor to visit me in my committee room. They came here with a political pistol which they put to the head of every man in both Houses of Congress. I said to them: "Why not submit your matter to the board of conciliation and mediation?" They repudiated it. I said, "Why not arbitrate your question? The American people will do justice to you."

They repudiated that. They said to me, "We will have that bill passed on Saturday night or we will strike on the next Tuesday." I said on the floor of the Senate that I had not any idea that those men would have ever dared to inaugurate a strike in the United States and stop the entire transportation system of this country; but others thought otherwise. The President of the United States thought otherwise, apparently; Congress thought otherwise; and the demand those men made was acceded to, doing absolute injustice to a hundred times as many other laboring men in this country who did not happen to have the strength they had, because they were an organized body and could accomplish their purpose by threats and intimidation.

Mr. President, because of the words I uttered on that occasion these men marked me for political slaughter. It would not have made much difference to the country if they had accomplished their purpose; but they did not accomplish their purpose. However, the means they used were utterly contemptible, which I will not now stop to enumerate.

Mr. President, as a legislative body having responsibilities upon us in time of peace, and more especially in time of war, we will have to assert ourselves in regard to this question and say that we will not inject in every bill that comes before us a provision such as has been injected in this bill, and which really has no relevancy to the subject matter.

I was intending to refer to an investigation that I helped make 25 years ago and to call attention to some principles that were laid down by that committee, of which the late Senator David B. Hill, of New York, was a member, as well as other distinguished Democrats, but I shall not take the time to do it.

We have a duty to perform. It is our duty to pass every bill that comes before this body that is a fair bill that will help in the prosecution and success of the war in which we are engaged. I have voted for every one of the bills that has been presented here. I have voted with some reluctance for some of them, but I felt that my judgment ought to be subordinated to the judgment of the majority on this floor, and if my vote could do anything to help carry on this great war in which we are engaged, and which God only knows how it may end, it was my duty to do that, and I have done it. But I shall not vote for this report. I shall not vote for any bill that comes here under the guise of a war measure that gives encouragement to men in this hour of stress and strain to halt the operations of the Government in winning the war.

Mr. President, I hope, and I hope sincerely, and I hope feelingly, because I am greatly in favor of this bill as it passed the Senate, in favor of it so far as certain amendments put on in the House are concerned, but not in favor of the one that I have criticized—I say, Mr. President, I hope that this report will be sent back to the conference committee and that we will register our view that the bill should be shorn of the amendment which really has no place in the statute.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, as one of the conferees I desire to make a brief statement. This provision of the bill, section 3, is certainly distasteful to me, but the situation was this—and men who serve on conference committees will appreciate it: On the floor of the House, at the instance of Members, this provision was inserted:

or, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

That amendment was adopted on the floor of the House. It was not in the bill reported by the committee. Immediately another Member of the House offered what is now section 3.

I may say here that I was very anxious to have section 3 eliminated. The most we could get the House conferees to do, and I do not think I am violating any particular confidence in stating it, was that they would agree to strike out section 3 if we would strike out the provision I have just quoted, which they called the Cannon amendment, and we felt we could not agree to that. So we got a slight modification in their amendment of section 3 by putting the word "sole" in, so as to read "with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages."

I am far from being satisfied with that amendment, but we are in this situation. We found it difficult in the spy bill. We attempted to put provisions in the spy bill when that was pending to prevent the obstruction of shipments of goods abroad, and we found representatives of the labor organizations come and hamstring us before the committee on that provision, and we have had to confront them on all sides.

I am a member of the committee that has been investigating the operations of the Shipping Board, and I want to tell you, my friends, that nothing has led more to the multiplicity of strikes in the shipbuilding industry than the fact that the administration through various channels have catered to these men. Every time they struck they raised their wages, and put in conditions. They raised the wages, for instance, at the Hog Island shipyard and put in conditions so that an ordinary carpenter gets 70 cents an hour for eight hours' work from 8 o'clock on. If he works from 7 to 8 in the morning he gets double time, and if he works after the end of the eight hours in the evening, he gets time and a half for that work.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I will yield in a moment. I want to add one word more. Under that provision if he works on Sunday he gets double time, and the result is that many work on Sunday instead of Monday under those conditions. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to express my agreement, in part, with the opinion expressed by the able Senator from Minnesota. I have the honor of serving with the distinguished Senator on the Committee on Commerce, and with him I have observed the unfolding of the whole Hog Island transaction. It is an interesting story all through, and you will find everywhere the slimy trail of the serpent of greed and the big plutocratic footprints of the profiteer. I desire to ask the honorable Senator if he does not think that labor has been induced or encouraged to make demands for excessive wages because of the example of the men higher up who have been conscienceless robbing and plundering the Government in the Hog Island deal and other similar plants?

Mr. NELSON. Oh, there is some of that, of course; a good deal; but does the Senator remember how one day two prominent representatives of labor appeared before the committee and how they protested vigorously that people were lying about union labor; that they had been loyal and faithful and had not been guilty of any obstruction? They came there and were given a clean bill of health, and the next day we had that strike of 6,000 carpenters. Does the Senator remember that?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Yes; I remember that. And I want the Senator to understand that I am in no way condoning anything that has been done by labor, the effect of which hindered or delayed the work of shipbuilding at Hog Island or anywhere else.

I believe it is the duty of every American citizen to do his part completely in the matter of successfully prosecuting this war. I think the man who would take advantage of this terrible emergency to extort unjust wages and delay the building of ships that are so much needed to carry our soldiers and allies foodstuffs across the water is an enemy to his country. I have no word of condonation or excuse for such a person. But I do not want the responsibility altogether to be put upon the man who toils. When I realize, and every other Senator in this Chamber knows, that the men higher up, as Mr. Denman describes them—who contribute nothing but the "know how," when, as a matter of fact, not one of the "know hows" know any more about building a ship than a prairie dog does about the nebular hypothesis or a chimpanzee knows of the political economy of the planet Mars. The plutocratic gentlemen with a pull, who own the Hog Island plant, have succeeded in putting through a scheme by which they will relieve the Government of six or seven million dollars for which they give nothing whatever in return, while the men who toil are to be criticized and verbally crucified because they happen to ask for living wages.

Mr. NELSON. There is something in that statement. There are some of these men high up who have been profiteering and bleeding the Government with an excessive wage; but, while that is a bad thing, Senators can see what a serious thing it is to have shipyard strikes all over the country, first among the carpenters, then among the metal workers, then among the riveters, and so on.

The labor troubles in the shipbuilding lines commenced on the Pacific coast. They have a board of the Government here, the wage board I think it is called, a composite board composed of all kinds of wise statesmen who went to work and increased the wages, first 30 per cent, upon the coast. Then the boys, if I may use the term, got hungry and squared themselves off for another strike, and they increased their wages 10 per cent more. They gave that enormous increase to the men on the Pacific coast in the yards.

Now, what was the result? The result of that was that in all the shipbuilding yards on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts the men got restless. They said, "Here, this arbitration board, this wage board, has given the men on the Pacific coast these enormous wages. We have got to have the same showing." So we have had strikes here in the East without end, and there are strikes pending to-day. I have been a poor man, as poor as anybody could be, in my younger days. I have had to struggle with poverty. My sympathies are with the laboring man, but I confess the attitude that they have manifested in the shipbuilding industry during this year of the war period has utterly shocked me, and I wish that we could all manifest a better spirit.

But there is no use to disguise this thing. From the time we had the railroad legislation, to which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] referred, this campaign has gone on to give these men immunity, no matter how often they strike nor for what purpose they strike.

In time of peace we can stand perhaps an ordinary amount of strikes, and where the strikes are for the bona fide purpose of getting good wages and better hours, if they work them long hours, I can sympathize with them. But now in time of war, when every one of us ought to do our bit, I have felt that some of the labor organizations in this country are not doing what they ought to do. I say this to them in a spirit of utmost kindness. I am not unfriendly to them, but I think they ought, like the rest of our people, to take into consideration the fact that we are at war at this time and that we need the active help and energy of every citizen.

Now, what has been the result of this increase of wages in giving double time for holidays and Sundays? It appears from some of the testimony we have taken before the committee that men have taken advantage of the big wages to lay off instead of working a full week; that they would only work a part of the week. For instance, after they were given the 30 per cent increase on the Pacific coast they, in the first instance, added 10 per cent on the condition that the men would work six days in the week. But finally the men did not like that and so they removed the condition requiring six days' work a week. Then by giving them double time for Sunday they got confused about the Sabbath. They would work Sunday and keep Sabbath on Monday, and then with an ample supply of money some of them were like I have heard some of the colored boys are down South when they get a pocketfull of money Saturday night, they would not think of coming back Monday or Tuesday to go to work. So with these men, they earn as much in three or four days as they have been in the habit of earning in a whole week before, and they see no occasion to put in full time. In fact, I got the impression from the testimony that the increase of wages has led to the slackening up of work.

I think if the situation is studied from first to last, as to what has hampered our shipbuilding and in a limited way hampered the aeroplane matter in securing all the necessary timber for aeroplanes, the strikes among the laboring men have had a good deal to do with it.

I shall not take up the time of the Senate any further. As I said, I most reluctantly agreed to this amendment. I regard the other provisions of the bill as vital. If there is any one thing that our people have complained about it is the fact that throughout the country men here and there are throwing, if I may be permitted to use a slang phrase, monkey wrenches into the Government machinery. They are destroying munition factories; they are getting up strikes; they are burning elevators; they are destroying mills, sawmills and flour mills; they poison our cattle and interfere with our food supply. In fact, there is scarcely one activity in which the Government is interested but what you will find some hostile man engaged in hamstringing the Government; and, my friends, they are not all Germans as many of you think.

A great many of these most vicious men are Americans. They belong to the I. W. W. order, and they are about as dangerous and vicious a lot as we have in this country. I can readily see how a German imbued with patriotic sentiments and love for his country can go astray in these matters, but how a man who has been brought up here, educated in the schools, brought up under the institutions of this country, can find it in his heart to resort to this campaign of destruction passes my comprehension.

Now, the people are getting restless. We are liable to have lynchings in this country; we are liable to have riots and disorder; and if any legislation that we pass at this session of Congress will help to repress such disorders, help to repress the breach of the peace, help to promote the progress of the war by securing ample food supplies and munitions this legislation is exactly what we need. This is the legislation the people have pined for. This is the legislation that the Department of Justice above everything else insists upon our giving them. In fact, without this legislation the Government is helpless. The people ask us "Why does not the Government do something? Why do you not shoot these men? Why do you not hang them when they blow up a mill or a factory? Why do you not crucify them?" Why do we not? It is not because the Department of Justice has not been efficient; it is because up to this time we have not given the department sufficient and ample legislation. We have given them that in this bill, and because of the great importance of the matter, of the vital provisions of the bill, much to my regret I yielded in the conference, although I entirely agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that that particular provision in the bill is not a proper one.

Mr. UNDERWOOD obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it has been my observation that when labor is interested in any particular legislation which is pending here it has not hesitated to show that interest, but I have had no indication or intimation from any labor source that labor is urging this provision in this conference report. I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota, as a member of the conference committee, whether or not any representatives of labor have pressed this proposition, or whether it is simply the result of the efforts of some one in another body, who assumes to represent labor, who is proposing its adoption? As I say, I have had no suggestion or intimation of any laboring man or representative of labor that they want this legislation or that they ask it in this hour of the Nation's need. I do not believe that labor should be charged with urging this legislation or insisting upon it unless they have been doing so, and I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota if that has been the case?

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say that, so far as I know, no representatives of labor appeared before the conference committee; but the Senator from Washington knows that I can not speak as to what may have affected the House members of the conference committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to bring out the facts that labor has not expressed its interest in the conference report.

Mr. NELSON. I can only say that the conferees on the part of the Senate have done the very best that they could to get an agreement. Senators who have been on conference committees know that oftentimes individual members have to yield their judgment in order to secure the adoption of provisions which they regard as most important.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, what I shall say is not intended in any way to be a criticism of the representatives of the Senate on the conference committee. I realize from past experience of my own that conferees are often compelled to make compromises and must exercise their own best judgment as to what is necessary to be accomplished; but as this report stands I am against it. On the other hand, I regard this measure as one of the most important measures, if not the most important measure, that has come before Congress for action since we passed the draft bill.

If we have fallen down in this war anywhere, it has not been in our man power. This Nation has accomplished wonderful results, when we consider the fact that we were practically without an army, and to-day we have a million and a half trained soldiers ready to carry our battle flag to Europe. We have, however, fallen down—we have fallen down lamentably—in one respect; that is, our ability to transport our troops to the field of battle.

Congress appropriated to the last cent the money that was necessary to prepare for the transportation of an army; but transportation facilities have not been furnished, though we have been in the war now for more than a year. I am not speaking of what may be accomplished in the future; I hope that what I have heard said about improved conditions is true, and that the defects may be speedily remedied; but we know—there is not a Senator in this Chamber who does not know—when it is remembered that almost a year ago more than a billion dollars was appropriated we ought to have vastly more ships on the seas than we have to-day. There may have been many reasons for our failure to launch the necessary ships, but, so far as I can read and so far as I can hear, our failure to have the ships on the sea is more directly due to the failure of labor to respond to the demands of the Nation than to any other one cause. I do not think any Senator will deny that statement.

I do not charge labor with disloyalty to the flag. I know of hundreds of boys who were laborers before this war was declared who promptly volunteered and joined the Army without waiting for the draft. I know of thousands of men who are engaged in labor to-day who are as patriotic to the country as is any man in this Chamber or out of it. I am not condemning organized labor. Labor has the right to organize for its own uplift and its own benefit so long as its organization is loyal and so long as the organization supports its country and fights for its flag; but peace conditions and war conditions are different. You can not decide the question under the same circumstances from a peace standpoint that you must apply to your decision when war conditions confront your country.

So far as wages are concerned, if I had the making of the law relative to the matter, I would not allow the employer of labor to lock out his men during war times on account of wage questions, neither would I allow labor to stop war industries on account of wage questions. I believe that labor is entitled to a fair and just proportion of the prices that capital gets under war conditions; that it should have it; but it should have it in a way that does not stop the war industries of the Nation. I would require that every labor dispute with regard to wages should be submitted to just arbitration; and when the finding of the arbitrators was ended that both sides must abide by the result.

I would not apply that to peace conditions; but when the Nation's life is at stake and the war industries of the country are of even greater importance to preserve our national life than our Army in the field, can any man hesitate to say that no man should be allowed to delay the production of war materials because of a dispute about wage conditions, when such a dispute can be settled fairly and equitably and justly by arbitration?

More than that, we know that labor to-day is not suffering because of unreasonable wages; that from the beginning of this war down to this time in the war industries of the Nation the price of labor has continued to increase day in and day out. This bill, however, does not stop at the price of labor, but it provides, in section 3:

> That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

What does the phrase "conditions of employment" mean? It may mean many things; but the Senate of the United States knows that, so far as it is proposed to be written in the law and the issue in the shipyards of this country, it means an eight-hour day. Since I have been a Member of Congress, so far as Government employment is concerned, I have always voted for an eight-hour day.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If my friend will allow me to finish the sentence, I shall yield to him.

I am not opposing an eight-hour day as a peace condition; but when the question comes to us as to whether on Government work in the industries of the Nation that are needed to save our national life, men may be required to work more than eight hours a day, I have no sympathy or patience with a man who is opposed to honest labor under those circumstances.

Mr. HARDING. I thought it might illuminate the question under discussion somewhat to call the Senator's attention to the fact that, in the controversies relating to shipping production in this country, the chief condition of labor alluded to was the maintenance of the "closed shop."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I never have believed in the "closed shop" in peace or in war. I do not think a laboring man or any other man can sustain the proposition that one set of men has the right to enter into a combination to prevent another set of men from earning their daily bread; and if that is one of the conditions that is stopping war industries in this country, it is time for the Nation to wake up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have before me an article on strikes; and I find that a large number of the strikes which have occurred since we have entered the war have been to enforce a "closed shop," and that some of the labor leaders of the United States have insisted upon a "closed shop."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Never by my vote will I say that the war industries of America must stop because one man says that another man shall not labor.

Senators, you can not deny it, you can not question that our ships are not on the seas because of labor troubles; and they are not primarily wage troubles, but troubles as to the conditions of labor, which labor did not complain against until the Nation itself was in distress.

Now, I want to say that when I stood on the floor of the Senate and voted to conscript my neighbor's son and send him to the battle fields of France, in my inner consciousness I pledged myself, my vote, and my support in the future to take care of that boy if I had the opportunity to do so; and when I know that that boy is on the battle field to-day, when I know he is aiding to hold that faltering line, and that it is the lack of supplies, the lack of reserves coming up in time, the failure to get the men who are under arms in the United States to the battle fields of France that make the battle doubtful to-day, and that that lack is due to the fact that labor in the shipyards of this country has not responded patriotically to the Nation's call, I say that this bill can not go through in the condition that it now is with my vote. I think it is the duty of the Senate to reject this conference report and to send the conferees back either with direct or implied instructions that they shall not agree to the passage of the bill until this clause comes out.

I am perfectly willing to exempt the mechanic, the shipbuilder, and the miner from the draft. I have no doubt he can serve his Nation better at home than he can on the battlefields of France, and we have put an exemption of that kind into the draft law; but when the men we exempt from the draft are unwilling to respond by doing their utmost to produce the supplies, of which the Nation is in dire need, then I am in favor of telling those men that if they will not work for their country they must fight for their country. That is the only solution to this situation. The farmer's son, the lawyer's son, the doctor's son, have gone to the front, and if the laborer's son wants to stay at home to serve his country, then the Nation should see that he serves his country well, and if he is not willing to stay under those circumstances, then, in my judgment, the nearest recruiting office should be pointed out to him and it should be made certain that he puts on the khaki uniform. That is the only way to meet this question, and the right way to meet it.

Mr. President, I did not intend to delay the Senate, but I could not vote against a conference report involving legislation of this vast importance to the country without an explanation of why I vote against it. I sincerely hope that the conference report will be defeated.

Mr. CALDER, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. OVERMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, in my judgment, this measure, if enacted into law in its present form, would do more injury to the spirit of the American people than any other one thing that could possibly be done. I believe that the great majority of the workingmen of this country have no conception that Congress is even considering the enactment of a law that contains a provision like that in section 3 of the bill under consideration. I am convinced that the vast majority of the American workingmen are patriotic, that they are just as determined to do their share in this war as any other portion of our people, but, Mr. President, the very contracts the Government has been making with munition plants and shipyards—and particularly with shipyards—have encouraged men to strike.

I wonder if Senators know that most of the shipbuilding contracts, both for naval and merchant ships, contain a provision that where the men ask for more pay the increase shall be given them, provided the shipbuilder confers with the Shipping Board or the Navy Department, as the case may be, and the Navy Department or the Shipping Board concur in the increase. These men strike, and the shipbuilder simply confers with the authorities at Washington, and as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has said, in every single case the wage boards of the Government have awarded the men practically what they asked for, and the Government pays the increase.

Mr. President, I know that very often differences will occur between employees and their employers—the men who have contracted to build ships and manufacture munitions for the country—and these differences must be adjusted.

But I agree with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that a Government board charged with authority to determine these things might very properly be appointed, and then let the action of that board be final.

The other day it was my privilege to spend a few days at Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., where the New York National Guard troops are encamped. While there one evening a British officer made an address, and he spoke of the conditions of labor in England and in other countries of Europe involved in this war, and he told of his own knowledge of the experiences of an unfortunate soldier. This soldier had served nearly two years in the war. He was for one whole week on the battle front. At the end of that week he was ordered back to his base camp. Tired and weary of war, he strayed away from his camp. He was gone a week. He was picked up one day and brought back to the camp, court-martialed, and the next morning stood up against a dead wall and shot to death as a deserter. That man was away just one week, and they killed him for it.

I do not propose, Mr. President, that we shall kill men who stop work, but I propose that men who stop work in Government plants during the war shall be denied the right of reemployment while the war exists, and I join with the junior Senator from Alabama in saying that not only would I deny them work in Government plants during the continuance of the war, but I would say to them that they shall be required to take their place side by side with the American soldiers in France who are struggling to uphold the honor and the dignity of the Nation.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a few words relative to this conference report.

In discussing the report, Senators have seemed to me to proceed upon the theory that in sections 2 and 4 the language is such that employees might not agree together to stop work, or not to enter upon a strike with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment. My contention is, Mr. President, that the language of sections 2 and 4 bears no such construction, and that section 3, meant to prevent any such construction, is absolutely gratuitous so far as sections 2 and 4 are concerned; and I beg the indulgence of the Senators while I read the language of sections 2 and 4.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was just going to say that I had the same point in mind. I think the Senator is entirely correct in his position; and I will ask him further, whether or not section 3 is any new law? Is not that the law now? Does section 3 change the existing law in any respect?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think it does; but I will refer to that a little later, and perhaps to the motive behind section 3.

Reading now section 2, it provides as follows:

> That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war—

Now, thus far the language is preliminary, and an inducement to the act constituting offense, which follows:

> shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material, war premises, or war utilities, as herein defined, or whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined—

And so forth.

There is section 2; and no language of that section can be construed to prevent workmen from stopping work for better wages or for better conditions of employment; and the same thing, without reading section 4, will apply to the language of section 4.

So, Mr. President, there being no likelihood that either section 2 or section 4 could ever be construed to prevent the things provided in section 3, there is absolutely no necessity to protect employees by the enactment of section 3.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Suppose that in the course of a strike, called for the sole purpose of increasing wages, violence should occur, and property should be destroyed, would those guilty of such destruction, according to the Senator's view, still be liable under the other section of the conference report?

Mr. STERLING. I will ask the Senator to repeat that question. I did not quite catch it.

Mr. THOMAS. I say suppose that during the progress of a strike, called simply for the purpose of adjusting wages, violence should occur, and Government property should be destroyed or endangered. Does the Senator think that those responsible for such destruction would be liable to the penalties provided in section 2 of the conference report?

Mr. STERLING. I think so; and section 3 would not protect them from those consequences.

Mr. THOMAS. I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. Further, Mr. President, the Senator in charge of this conference report says that we should adopt section 3, in order to do what? In order to avoid the conflict—the inevitable conflict—with labor. Read sections 2 and 4, and let us ask ourselves the question if it has come to this, that we must inject into this bill a provision not demanded by the bill for the protection of labor in stopping work in order to avoid a conflict with labor?

Mr. President, if that is the situation, it is a fearful one and an ominous one for the United States. If we have come to that point, I should say, deplorable as it may be, regret it as we may, let us accept the inevitable, and have the conflict, and have it done with; and what will we do in that conflict? We will appeal to the loyalty and the patriotism of labor throughout the United States, both nonunion labor and union labor, and they will rally in their loyalty and patriotism to the support of the Government and the flag, and as for the rest—well, there is such a thing as martial law.

Mr. President, I do not know exactly what the purpose of section 3 is, but I know of some very significant things. I have a communication which I thought of reading several days ago to the Senate in connection with a resolution that I thought of introducing. It comes from a constituent, who says, in a letter dated the 19th of March:

> As to myself, I am the mayor of our little city, chairman of the Four Minute Men here, president of this branch of the American Defense Society, and have been trying since the war started to do what I can for the benefit of the United States; but there are many things which go against the grain, and I have been wondering if something could not be done to wake up the Senate and House to the fact that there is some one else in this country besides the labor unions who deserve consideration. Lately, in our talks at the movies, we have been trying to get workmen to enlist for shipbuilding, with some little success. Yesterday I received cards for the workmen to fill out, with information stating that certain workmen were wanted for the Puget Sound district. Now, note what follows—

He puts this in quotation marks and underlines it. This is the quotation:

> It is a union-shop district, and those who go out should be members of the craft's organization or signify their willingness to become members.

Then he goes on, of course, and denounces a policy like that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator's correspondent to say that that was a circular issued under the authority of the United States Government?

Mr. STERLING. That is from a circular, a quotation in haec verba, from a circular sent out by the United States Public Service Reserve, under the Department of Labor of the United States. I found that out after further correspondence and after inquiry by telegram.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator inform us who are the officials who are responsible for that, because they ought to be removed from office, and removed quickly, and prosecuted, if there is any law under which they can be prosecuted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will not the Senator go a good deal further than that? Is it not absolutely true that one of the great shipyards on the western coast was compelled either to cancel a contract or to employ only union labor?

Mr. STERLING. I have understood that such was the fact, and that through the direction of the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. That does not surprise me at all, when the head of the Department of Labor, in addressing a great audience of laboring men, invariably commences his address by saying: "Fellow unionists"—"Fellow labor-unionists."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, what is the name of that? I never heard of that sort of a concern. What is it?

Mr. STERLING. Has not the Senator from North Carolina heard of the United States Public Service Reserve?

Mr. OVERMAN. I say, I never heard of it.

Mr. STERLING. A bureau under the Department of Labor?

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it a bureau under the Department of Labor?

Mr. STERLING. It is an employment bureau under the Department of Labor.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is a Labor Department, with which we are all familiar, but I do not know of that bureau. I never heard of it.

Mr. STERLING. This circular is so headed and entitled. I am led to inquire, in the face of this correspondence that I have received, in the face of the contents of this circular from which I read, as to how many men besides nonunion men there are, engaged in the Puget Sound district, who might be needed in the great and important and vital work of building ships, and how many who would have joined in that work and helped out the Nation in its hour of need would have gone there had it not been that they were warned by that circular not to go unless they belonged to the craft's organization, or were willing to signify their intention of becoming members of it? Has it come to this? If so, I say, as I said at the outset, let us accept this inevitable conflict, and know where we stand, and whether or not we have a right, as against any organization whatever, to protect the United States and its liberties in this great and terrible war.

Look here: Here is a circular sent out by the United States Public Service Reserve of the Department of Labor, and here are the grandiloquent words of the circular:

> For whom the reserve is intended:
> For all men who want to work to help win the war.
> For men who are not content to be bystanders, but want to play their part in saving the world from the rule of brute force.
> For men who are ashamed to go on to the end of the war working just for themselves, while their neighbors go to the front to give their all—their lives, if need be—for our country.
> For men who are ready, when the call comes, to give up jobs which are not vitally important in war times, and take jobs where their country needs them and where they can count for victory.
> For men whose patriotism is more than mere words; whose professions that they want to do something for their country really mean business.

My heart responds to every word of that appeal.

But, Senators, it appears that out there in Clark County, S. Dak., where the man lives who sent me this letter, were the men who, in war times, were ready to leave jobs not vital to the issues of this war and go into the Puget Sound district to labor in the shipbuilding business, and they were deterred from doing so by the contents of this circular!

Oh, Mr. President, what may the adoption of section 3 lead to? The fear is it will hamper us in the enactment of much-needed legislation in regard to the labor situation. It is not necessary, as I have tried to show, for the protection of the employees in the shipbuilding or in any other Government industry or work. It is not necessary at all. They may stop work, under the law as it is, for higher wages; but if we adopt section 3, then they will come back and say: "You are estopped now from adopting any other legislation in regard to labor. Congress has committed itself to this proposition." And we will not be enabled, in the face of that, to pass a law making it criminal to conspire to strike or to incite a strike in a great Government war-material industry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if they might not well say that the legislative branch of the Government has invited them to strike?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I think so.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Mississippi is absolutely right in that respect. It is holding out an invitation to strike, as we have done before in other legislation that Congress has enacted under duress, practically.

I say now is the time, fellow Senators, in my humble opinion, if it is intended to make this an issue, to meet the issue right here, and not let things go from bad to worse, as they surely will if we trifle with the question longer.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senate to let us have a vote on this question this afternoon.

The bill passed the Senate one year ago yesterday, the 9th of April. Everybody knows it is the most important bill that has been before Congress. I want the Senate to do what it is going to do this afternoon, and if the majority of Senators are against the conference report, let us go back and try to have another conference. Therefore I appeal to the Senate to vote. If Senators vote down the report, it will go back to conference.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it is all very well, after several Senators on one side of a proposition have stated their views, to call for an immediate vote without giving the other side a fair hearing. Before a vote is taken on this measure I have a few words that I should like to submit.

We all agree to certain things. We agree that it is not desirable to have a conflict with labor, organized or unorganized; that it is not desirable to take laboring men out and shoot them at sunrise; and I wish to state to the Senate in all seriousness that it is not necessary to have a conflict with labor and it is not necessary to declare martial law and shoot laboring men.

Senators seem not to be aware that there has been going on in this country during the last few weeks a most important conference between capitalists and organized labor. The capitalists have been represented by their best men. Organized labor has been represented by its best men. President Taft has represented the public or the capitalists' side. Those men have had a full and fair conference, and they have come to a deliberate decision. They have adjusted the differences between labor and capital in this war, following the English precedent. There are no strikes in England, because capital and labor got together and agreed what should be done when a conflict should arise between capital and labor.

England at first took the other tack. England passed a law making it a criminal offense for the miners in Wales to strike. Notices were posted at the mines to the effect that men who did strike would be criminals and should be dealt with as such. The miners came out to the top of the ground and read the notices, put their hands in their pockets, and refused to obey the law. Lloyd-George had to go to Wales himself and plead with the men to come back to work as a matter of voluntary agreement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. The Senator will also remember that they have a compulsory arbitration law in England, under which striking is forbidden and punished.

Mr. HOLLIS. It is a voluntary agreement under which strikers may be punished. Labor agreed to that law. Now, that was not necessary. There is no such law applying to railroads. There is such a law applying to munition factories, but the railroad interests in England have agreed with the capitalistic interest, and there have been no strikes.

Under the agreement which has just been made between capital and labor in this country there shall be no stopping of work when there are disagreements between employer and employee, there shall be no lockouts, work shall go right along as before, and the matter shall be first mediated; if a result is not reached, then arbitrated. President Taft is to be the principal man there. I think they call him chairman of that board of mediation and arbitration.

Now, what good is it to allow labor to organize if laborers can not agree one with another to stop work? Organization amounts to nothing unless it is made effective.

This is the old fight that has been going on in the Senate ever since I have been here. When the Adamson law was passed making eight hours a day on the railroads it was supposed that the following winter we would follow it up with a law to prevent strikes. Why did we not? It is because the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate considered the matter carefully and the majority of them believed that it was unwise to pass a law to prohibit strikes on railroads, and they did not report favorably on the measure. There has not been a strike on a railroad. There is not likely to be a strike on a railroad as long as the Government is running the railroads. I hope the movement will get so far that there never will be another strike on a railroad whether under Government or under private control.

The Hog Island situation is brought up whenever we have a matter of this sort before the Senate. I wish to say to the Senate that the capitalists who are doing the work at Hog Island struck before they made their contract. Mr. Denman testified before the Senate Committee on Commerce within a day or two that those capitalists held the Government up, I think, for two months, before they received a fee big enough to induce them to go into it. The capitalists held up the work for two months, and then the laboring men are not allowed to cease work until they can have their demands for higher wages considered.

The chairman of the Committee on Commerce tells me there have been no strikes at Hog Island. The strike referred to was a strike in the vicinity of New York. That was a strike of carpenters. It was not necessary to shoot any of those men or their leaders. The President made an appeal to the men to go back to work, and the men voluntarily went back to work, and the differences have either been adjusted or are in process of adjustment.

I have not talked on the floor of the Senate about the conscription of wealth. I have never used that phrase. I was in favor of raising more money for the purpose of prosecuting the war through taxation. I said nothing about great fortunes; I said nothing about the conscription of wealth; and I do not want my friends, who are perfectly honest in their attitude, to talk about the conscription of labor. It is one thing to conscript a man to fight for his country, to be fed by his country and paid by his country, to be under the command of officers furnished by his country, and another thing for a man to be conscripted and set to work in a place like Hog Island, under a private foreman, to make a profit for capital. We can not do that, Senators. The time has not come yet when you can lay your hand on the neck of a brother man and say to him, "Go to Hog Island and work; live under the meanest conditions off the pay we give you, which we say is fair and just. Work under brutal overseers." We can not do that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I prefer the Senator would not ask me to yield. Whenever he and I have gotten into an altercation it has always led to trouble. I very much prefer that he would refrain.

Mr. REED. It will not lead to trouble.

Mr. HOLLIS. I hope not. We will arbitrate. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I have no desire in the world to interrupt the Senator, if it is unpleasant; but he has made a statement in regard to the bad conditions at Hog Island that I do not think ought to have been made, or that he would have made if he had been on the ground. I visited Hog Island, in company with some other members of the Committee on Commerce. We went into the eating house where these men were fed.

Mr. HOLLIS. To cut that short, I will agree that the conditions at Hog Island are all right. I did not mean to state that they were not. I was merely stating a case where they might be bad. Put it anywhere; I do not care. My point is this: It is one thing to draft a soldier to fight for his country under Government officers, with Government pay, fed and clothed by the Government, and another thing to take a man and put him to work under a private overseer for pay fixed by some one else, under conditions fixed by some one else, for the profits of a capitalist. That is the only point. I think likely the conditions of living at Hog Island are all right. If it is so it is about the first thing I have heard that is there that is all right.

This question came up a year ago when we passed a bill for the priority of shipments on railroads. That bill read very much like this. It provided a penalty for anyone who would obstruct or hinder the transportation of interstate commerce. I feared that it would be construed to prevent peaceful strikes. If we have got to face the question of peaceful strikes on railroads or in munitions factories, let us face it squarely, and have a bill introduced prohibiting it, and argue it out, and come to a vote and have it disposed of. But this proposition has not yet been submitted to the Senate.

It was for fear that some judge might construe this law as prohibiting ordinary strikes that this saving clause was put in. I asked to have the same saving clause put in the bill for priority of shipments by railroads and it was put in. I asked to have the same clause put in the food-control bill and it was put in by the Senate, but went out in conference, and because it went out in conference I voted against the conference report on the food-control bill.

I hope that the conflict will not be precipitated on this small amendment to this comparatively unimportant bill. If Senators think that the exigencies are such that they should undertake to say that a man shall be forced against his will to work for some one else for certain wages, under certain conditions, then Senators should vote against the conference report. If they think that that time has not yet arrived, then the conference report should be adopted, and it should receive their votes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for just a moment. I think the case ought to be stated a little differently than it has been stated by the Senator from

New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. Nobody has proposed to take an American citizen and put him under a boss, brutal or humane, and make him work. No such proposition is contained either in this bill without the clause that is objected to, nor is it contained in any other bill. No matter what we do about this bill, every laborer in the United States and every citizen will have the absolute option to take work if he pleases to take work and to quit work if he pleases to quit work and whenever he pleases to quit work. Nobody proposes anything to the contrary.

The question that is agitating the minds of some Members of the Senate is this: Can men who are engaged in working upon war supplies be permitted to combine and conspire, not for the purpose of any individual quitting work or gaining the privilege of quitting work, but to combine and conspire to stop the progress of making war materials, and by stopping the progress of the making of war materials to force an adjustment of wages by taking advantage of the hardship under which the Government rests.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. One second and then I will be glad to yield. Now, that is the question; and the further question, whether in addition to conspiring to stop themselves for the very purpose of tying up the work, but at the same time refuse and by acts of violence prevent other men willing to take up the work to proceed with it. Now, that is the question, and it is not the question stated by the Senator from New Hampshire. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HARDING. I thought it would add to the Senator's statement if it should be said that every contract passed upon by the War Department requires the employer to allow the mediation board of the Government to settle all labor difficulties.

Mr. REED. Now, I want to say this, because I do not want to be misunderstood. I said it a few days ago before this particular controversy arose: Ever since I have been old enough to take part in public affairs I have taken the side of union labor. I have a long and unbroken record on that side. I would be one of the last men in the world to do anything to injure the cause of union labor.

But, Mr. President, the getting together of A, B, and C, engaged upon the work of building a railroad or constructing a machine in times of peace for private individuals, where the injury that will result will largely fall upon the private individual who employs the labor, and where that individual has the opportunity at any time to stop the injury that comes from the strike by acceding to a demand for more wages, I say that kind of a proposition made in a time of peace is a controversy between private individuals, but at this time in the world's history such a controversy between the employees in a great factory that is working on supplies for our Army, which has for its purpose the stopping of the making of those war supplies, is not a private controversy. It is a controversy that is absolutely inseparable from the conflict that is going on upon the battle line of France. Every blow that is struck here for the purpose of arresting the production of cannon, of powder, of shells, and of ships is a blow as certainly struck in the cause of Germany as though it was struck from the German line by a man wearing a German uniform. It is no time for controversies of that kind to be indulged, and I do not believe that labor in this country demands that such a right or privilege shall be indulged. I believe that, man for man, union labor is as loyal as any other class of our citizens, and if they are not loyal, then God help the Republic.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say. I do not believe this clause ought to stay in this proposed statute. I do believe that when a provision is made by which an arbitration can be had in this time of war loyal labor will accept that arbitration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, even if the question were presented as stated by my good friend from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] it would present no terrors for me. He stated the question as if it were one of "forcing men to work" under the orders of somebody not selected by themselves. We are forcing men to fight under the orders of somebody not selected by them, and we are not even consulting them about the orders. I see nothing worse in forcing men to work for the motherland. But that is not the question as presented now in this bill. The Senator from New Hampshire does not present the question correctly at all.

Even if that were the question, I can see no great tyranny or pathos in forcing a man to work for his country when we are already forcing another man to fight for it. We are taking from one only his time, and we are possibly, if not probably, taking from the other his health, his limbs, or his life. I fail to see that the two things can be put upon different footings, one from the other. But that is not the question here.

The very utmost to which this controversy goes would be to deny by some court construction the right by agreement to quit work in certain classes of work which are important to the carrying on of the war or necessary and vital to its carrying on.

The question does not even go that far, because when the Senator from New Hampshire comes to study it further he will find that there is nothing in the law without this saving clause that prevents anybody from having the same right even by agreement to quit work.

Mr. President, I want to say that a man has a right in the Hog Island shipyard, and in the shipyards upon the Pacific and the Gulf coast, to-morrow to meet and agree with certain other people to quit work, and let the United States Government fall behind in producing more ships than the submarines are sinking. He has that "right"; yes; he has that legal right; but he has not that moral right; and he is a traitor when he undertakes to exercise the right. Duties are more sacred than legal rights.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he does not first agree to leave all controverted questions of wages to some impartial tribunal, and if he stops shipbuilding upon the part of this country in order that he may sit in judgment himself upon the question of his wages, then he is morally a traitor.

Mr. HOLLIS. Is the Senator from Mississippi aware that within the last few days capital and organized labor have agreed to just that thing? That being so, does the Senator not think they ought to be left to do it, instead of passing a law of this kind?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do; without passing a law of this sort. That is the reason I want this provision stricken out. I want the situation left as it is; to leave it to their voluntary cooperation, which means to leave it to the law as it now is, without denial or reassertion.

I say it is bad patriotism—whether it is good law or not—it is just as bad patriotism for a man not to agree to leave a question of wages before he strikes or locks out to some impartial tribunal organized by the Government of the United States, which is his servant, as it is to desert on the battle line in the presence of the enemy. Both rest on the ground that he himself, even in war times, must be the judge of what duties he shall perform. It is bad patriotism, whether it is good law or not.

I say it is worse patriotism on the part of Congress to invite men to strike in these vital and necessary industries. I say that when you put this unnecessary provision in this conference report—although the conferees, of course, did not so intend it—you are inviting men to strike without arbitration; you are inviting the I. W. W. to stir them up to it, and the I. W. W. are German agents; you are saying to them, "Congress says that, no matter what else may be the duty of whatsoever other citizen, you, as a class, have no duty not to hold up shipbuilding and munition manufacturing on the ground that you are citizens of the United States trying to help win the war; we set you aside as a special class; you may obstruct the carrying on of the war all you please, because you do it by peaceful strikes." A peaceful strike, which interferes with the carrying on of a war by your own country, is questionably "peaceful"; it sounds more pro-German warlike than it does peacefullike. But still they have that right—the legal right—they can do it to-day; they can do it to-morrow after we pass this bill, without this provision in it. The only thing about the provision is that you are inviting them to do it.

Here are the assassins of the deep going around sinking our ships—sinking any ships; neutral ships, all sorts of ships—here is all the energy pent up, the energy of Great Britain and France and the United States, trying to sink the submarines, and trying, as a secondary measure, to build so many ships that we shall, at least, have more new ships than they have sunk old ones; and here is the Congress of the United States in a conference report inviting men in shipyards to strike!

The Senator from New Hampshire says, and says very properly, that already these men and their employers have entered into an agreement, and that their agreement is not to strike without arbitration; and yet he would have us put into a solemn law, after that agreement, a formal approbation of the strike without arbitration, after they themselves have agreed not to strike during the war, nor to lock out during the war until after arbitration; and arbitration by whom? By a governmental tribunal which thus far has, as the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] has said, decided every question of wage or time dispute in favor of the workingmen.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, just a few words in reference to this matter. It has been stated that another body insisted upon this amendment, and that, in order to reach an agreement, it was determined by the conferees to put it into this conference report. There are reasons why they did so.

The substance of the argument here, in fact the full extent of the argument, it seems to me, against the adoption of the conference report is that this section is unnecessary; not that it is harmful in itself; not that it changes the law as it is; not that it would change the force and effect of either section 2 or section 4, but that it is simply unnecessary and surplusage. That is the argument of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], and it is the argument of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The only fault the Senator from Mississippi finds with it is, as he says, that it is an invitation to do something which ought not to be done, not something which men are invited to do as a matter of advice, or as a matter of welcome, or as a matter of preference, but something that the law says in this section shall not be regarded as unlawful. That is all the section says. It says that shall not be unlawful which is not now unlawful and which will not be unlawful after this act shall have been passed without section 3 in it.

Therefore the most that can be said against it is that, as the Senator from Mississippi says, it invites a course of conduct which otherwise might not be indulged in, but which the section itself does not say is proper, is advisable, or is morally justified, but simply says is not unlawful and would not be a violation of the law. On the other hand, the virtue of it is that it makes perfectly plain what everyone concedes is the fact, that neither section 2 nor section 4 makes unlawful the doing of the thing which is mentioned in section 3; it leaves it beyond any question or any doubt. That is all that it accomplishes. It does not change the existing law; it does not alter or modify the provisions of section 2 or section 4; but it does make plain that the provisions of section 2 and section 4 are not contrary to and do not denounce that which is provided for in section 3.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish the Senator from Florida would make that point a little clearer, because I do not understand the bill in that way. The latter part of section 2 makes it a crime to conspire to prevent the production of war materials. Suppose that a factory making war materials has a thousand employees, and they were to agree amongst themselves to quit work, so that the war materials would not be produced until their wages were increased, does the Senator from Florida say that that would not be a violation of that part of section 2?

Mr. FLETCHER. If there was a conspiracy with the intent to prevent the production of war materials, then it would come within the provisions of section 2; but if the employees agree together not to work solely for the purpose, and in good faith, of securing better wages and conditions of labor, then it would not be a violation of section 2.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not agree with the Senator from Florida as to the construction he puts upon section 2, and I want to understand his view clearly. The strike is the weapon of organized labor; it uses it by preventing the carrying forward of the enterprise in which the employees may be engaged. Now, it is just as clear to me as though it were expressed in the most direct language that an agreement between employees of a given factory engaged in making war materials to quit work——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment—to quit work for the purpose of coercing the employer into an agreement for higher wages would be a violation of section 2. I do not want anybody to get the idea that I am in favor of this conference report. I think it is a deadly blow not only to organized labor but to the best interests of the Government, and I intend to vote against it; but I do not want to have the impression go abroad that section 3 is entirely meaningless, for I think it has a very great deal of meaning.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I simply wish to say to the Senator from Iowa that in construing the latter part of section 2 I hardly think he goes back far enough in the meaning. The offense is not "to conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war materials," and so forth, but it is:

Whoever, with intend to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. The latter part of section 2, however, is in nowise coupled with the former part. I understood the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to say that the latter part was introduced on the floor of the House——

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. And adopted as an amendment. Now, it does not require any intent whatever. It says that whoever conspires to prevent the production of war materials, and other things as well, is guilty of an offense.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator pardon me while I read the very language here to see if there is not that very connection, so as to show that the intent must exist to obstruct the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. The intent, of course, must be to prevent, for that is the very weapon the strike involves, namely, the interruption of industry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then, the Senator holds that an agreement not to work is synonymous with an agreement to prevent and with the intention of preventing the production of material.

Mr. CUMMINS. I say that an agreement among the employees in a given factory to quit work because they are not being paid sufficiently high wages for the purpose, as in the case of all strikes, of compelling concessions to them by their employers, does prevent the carrying forward of that enterprise, whatever it may be.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the decisions of the court are perfectly plain upon that question, and are to the effect that an agreement among employees to stop work or not to enter thereon for the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages is not a conspiracy which the court can enjoin, and certainly such an agreement does not mean the same thing as is meant by the words—

With intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities—

And so forth.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate long; I know the anxiety there is to vote on this bill, and I will not enlarge upon the subject generally; but I think it ought to be stated here that nowhere among the shipyards of this country is there a "closed shop"; nor do I understand that there is any effort anywhere to bring about a "closed shop" among the shipyards. Whether that obtains as to munition factories or not I am not prepared to say.

I wish to correct another statement that has been made to the effect that the primary or principal cause for our not having upon the seas the tonnage which we hoped and contemplated would be there, and which we now feel ought to be there, is the lack of labor. That has not been the real cause. There has been some little difficulty with labor, but it can not be said that either the workers of the country or their organizations or their conduct have contributed materially to delay the shipbuilding program. There have been various causes entering into that. In the first place, we were not a shipbuilding Nation; we had to start at the beginning; we had to build the plants; we had to lay the foundations for an enormous industry, and that took time. Then we had to prepare plans and designs and make contracts. We had to engage and manufacture shipbuilding materials—steel, lumber, and various materials of that kind. All those things took time. Labor was willing to work; labor has been doing its part, in my judgment; generally speaking, the workers throughout this country have been loyal to the Government and have been doing their part. There have been here and there some leaders, some bad advisers, some unreasonable or unreasoning men among them who caused trouble and who were prompted by selfish purposes, but, generally speaking, the great body of the workers of this country have done their part and are doing their part to-day, and they are not asking more than they are entitled to receive.

There are various reasons why they should have higher wages than they formerly had, and I freely grant that they have had an increase of over 100 per cent in wages as they stood in 1914 at the beginning of the war; but in some instances five, six, or seven men live in one small room, and in some instances a man with his wife and three or four children live in one room while the man is working day in and day out at his occupation. Those are the "conditions" which might be mentioned in connection with this language in section 3—not that they insist upon the shipyards being operated as "closed shops," but as to housing conditions and other conditions they have a right in many instances to complain.

They have been doing nobly, as a general rule, in the great work in which they have been engaged, and we need them. We need every man we can get. It is estimated that in shipbuilding a man can build 10 tons a year. If we are going to build 6,000,000 tons of ships this year, what does it mean? It means that 600,000 men must be on the job. We have only about 260,000 now. There are additional men who can be obtained, and who are ready to go, I think, to these yards as soon as they are ready to take care of them. In many instances the number could be increased three or four times if they only had the houses in which to put the men. Some mistake has been made in putting the plants in already congested and crowded industrial districts of the country. They probably ought to have been distributed more than they are distributed, because labor conditions and housing conditions and all those things which make for well-being and satisfaction of workers might be found more adequate than they are in particularly congested and crowded places as we find them to-day. But we can not say that the fact of our not having more ships on the ocean is because labor has not been loyal, or because the workers have not been here and willing to work. That is not the cause.

Mr. President, I do not see any objection to section 3. There may be something in the suggestion, which I can not perceive, that it is an invitation to workers to agree not to work, in a bona fide purpose and plan to get better wages, or better hours, or better housing conditions; but it does not affirmatively authorize or encourage that course. It simply says that that shall not be regarded as unlawful. Whether it is from an ethical or a moral or patriotic standpoint the right thing to do is another question. When it comes to dealing with this subject upon the grounds that have been suggested here, that is a matter that may have to be taken up at some future time; in other words, whether we shall ever reach the point in this country where we will undertake to conscript labor. It is one thing, the old saying is, to lead a horse to water, and another thing to make him drink. You do not necessarily get more output by forcing men to work than you would get otherwise; and in my judgment that is the very last resort that we ought to make.

We can adjust these matters without that course. We are proceeding to adjust them amicably, and every contract that is made now provides for the adjustment of these differences in the various Government operations. I think the difficulty will adjust itself. There will be no necessity for coming to conscription; and for that reason, and in order to make it plain that we are not attempting to come to that, I see no real objection to including section 3 in this report.

As illustrating the attitude of labor, I wish to insert in the RECORD a short article appearing in the Artisan, a labor paper published in Jacksonville, Fla.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DRAFTED FOR SERVICE.

In this time of national peril, when in defense of our rights and liberties we, as a Nation, have been forced to enter the war against the German military autocracy, we are all drafted for service.

Each and every one of us owes and must perform some patriotic work and duty in support of our country. Some of us are drafted for service in the Army or Navy, and are called upon to risk their lives in battle, striving to prevent our homeland from being subjected to the horrors of an invading foe.

The success of our forces who go overseas will depend very largely upon the support we render them here at home. We must build ships to take them over. We must produce arms, munitions, and supplies. We must produce food supplies and conserve them so that our overseas forces and our allies may be fed. In short, we must all work for the war. The war is the chief business concern of each and every one of us and we are all drafted for service.

If we are slackers in any way, we help the enemy to kill our own men. If any of our relatives or friends are killed because we have withheld the needed equipment or supplies, then their blood will be on the hands of those of us who have withheld our support. We can not escape our responsibility to those who are offering their lives for our protection. We must labor to produce the things that are needed, and we must curtail our own consumption in order that we may the better supply our soldiers and our allies.

To prosecute the war with full national strength the Government must have first call for labor and materials for war purposes. Every workingman is drafted for service to do his part in producing war goods or in supporting war producers. He is also drafted for service in economizing and saving in every possible way so as to lessen his own competition against our own Government for labor and materials. The more unnecessary things are consumed the greater the demand for labor and materials to reproduce them, and the less labor and materials are available to the Government to prosecute the war. It is only by teaching the people to save and not to compete with the Government for labor and materials that we can put the whole strength of the Nation into this war.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it appears that the Senate is disposed to strike out section 3 as it appears in the report, which reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

I believe that if it is stricken out of the report this law will not stand for any length of time. I am perfectly satisfied that in the patriotic zeal that is stirring the Senators they are about to commit an act which they will be compelled to rescind.

Strikes have been referred to, and they have taken place, and yet nearly all of those strikes were incited by I. W. W.'s, and some of the very Senators who are now so patriotic in regard to compelling labor to work under any conditions on account of these strikes have been delaying the passage of this very espionage bill, which will do much to prevent those strikes.

This bill, if section 3 is eliminated, is a bill for the conscription of labor, pure and simple. It would then say that no laborer could quit work if his action in so doing would interfere with the various plants and occupations mentioned in the bill. The language is plain and simple. If he does any act which he has reason to believe will interfere with the production or transportation of any of the materials named, then he is guilty under this act. I see that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] shakes his head. I will read the words:

Or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation—

And so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator has not read it all.

Mr. PITTMAN. I did not think the Senator from Georgia had read it, and yet he is prepared to vote on it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, yes; I have.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think there are several Senators here who have not read it, and yet they are prepared to vote on the motion to strike out section 3. It says that any man who has any reason to believe that he is interfering with the Government by his act is guilty of a crime. Now, no man can quit work in any of these occupations without knowing that that very act does interfere with the occupation in which he is engaged. It does not require a group of men to quit in order to constitute a crime.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. Just in the interest of accuracy, if the Senator had read on a line or two farther, I think he would have found the suggestion that I understood to come from the Senator from Georgia to be entirely correct. It says:

Whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy.

He must not only have reason to believe that his act may injure or interfere with the United States in preparing for or carrying on the war, but that reasonable belief must be followed by a willful attempt to injure or destroy material, and so forth.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It must be done with the intent to injure.

Mr. KNOX. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggested to the Senator from Nevada that he had not read far enough, and I was just getting my copy of the report to call his attention to the exact language.

Mr. PITTMAN (reading from sec. 2)—

Or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material, war premises, or war utilities, as herein defined, or, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

He is forbidden to willfully quit work with the intention to interfere with any of such occupations, having reason to believe that it will have that effect.

Now, what is the result if section 3 is eliminated? The result is simply this, and section 3 emphasizes that result: Under the ordinary rules of strikes when a body of men quit they do not accomplish their purpose by quitting. They accomplish their purpose by preventing other people from taking their places. That is wrong. That is prohibited in this act. But section 3 simply says that a man may quit work, or a group of men may quit work, if it is for the purpose of benefiting their condition, even if it does injure the Government.

Now, what do you want to say, you who want to strike out section 3? You want to say that a man can not quit work if it injures the Government, no matter how inhuman such work may be. Why? Because you want to strike out section 3. The only exception to the prohibited acts is that a man may quit work himself, provided he does not try to prevent anyone else from working or in no other way attempts to interfere. Otherwise there would be no sense in section 3.

Another thing: Senators talk about interfering with the shipyards of this country. If this dealt solely with shipyards, or if it dealt solely with munition plants, then there might be some argument for striking out section 3; but it deals with practically every occupation in the United States. Every man who is running a little manufacturing establishment in the United States is included under the provision regarding "material." The product of nearly every mine is included under the head of material. Tell me this: How long would the employer be anxious for mediation if these men could not quit? Why is it that the employers to-day are willing to meet the laborers before a mediation board? It is because the men can quit. Take away from the employee the power to quit and you will find every employer in this country refusing to arbitrate the question of conditions or of wages. That must be apparent to everyone. We have provisions for mediation, but it is not compulsory. The employees are not bound by it. Take away from labor the right to quit and what protection have they against starvation wages and intolerable conditions? What control do you provide over the employer? Is there any punishment for the imposition of starvation wages and death-dealing conditions?

You are conscripting labor. Are you ready to conscript the employer? I am ready to conscript both of them, but I am not ready to conscript the employee and not conscript the employer. I am not willing to say to the employee, "If you quit work you will injure the Government, and you will be guilty of a crime," and not say to the employer, "If you do not pay these men living wages and do not let them live under conditions that they can live under, you will be guilty of a crime." I do not believe in having an act that works on one class of people and not on another class of people.

All of us want to start up and hasten and expedite the manufacture of materials in this country necessary for the conduct of the war, but why start in with the employee? Why not go to the employer? Why not say, "You are partially responsible for some of these rows; you are partially responsible for some of these strikes; and we say to you that we will not only fix wages and hours of labor, but we will fix the conditions under which they are required to work"?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. FALL. Is it not a fact that we have said to the employers engaged in work for the Government, or those in the line of Government work, that if they do not proceed with work to the full capacity of their plants we will take them over, if we choose, and operate them?

Mr. PITTMAN. Undoubtedly we have said to the employers under the direct supervision of the Government that if they do not proceed to do this work we will take them over; yet in the same voice, by striking out section 3, you wish to say, "You can work your labor as you see fit, for they can not quit." You want to permit the copper mines to say to their employees, "You have got to work for a certain wage; you have got to work for a certain number of hours; you have got to work under certain conditions; and you can not quit as a body, because if you do quit it will shut down this mine, and if you shut down this mine you will be guilty of a crime." That is exactly what this bill says. If you would deprive labor of its only protection, then, in the name of humanity, substitute some governmental protection in the same act. We need legislation that will make strikes not only impossible but unnecessary. Without section 3 this legislation is not only inhuman but is crude beyond description.

I have never known such an outrage as this bill will be if you strike out section 3 of this conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

RECESS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have been notified by some three or four Senators that they desire to speak on this subject. We can not finish the consideration of this report to-night; and therefore I am going to ask the Senate now to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m., Wednesday, April 10, 1918) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, April 11, 1918, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 10, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. William Couden, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Holy Father, Thy presence envelops us as a cloud. We can not penetrate all that life may mean; we never know all the dangers from which we are protected nor see all the opportunities which we might claim. But the mystery of our life in Thee is shot through with the light of never-failing love. We are amply blest. Yet with hope and faith in Thee we long for more. Teach us, dear Lord, to yield in all to Thee—to obey and trust, to sacrifice and wait, to work and rest. Dedicate to Thy purpose all our efforts and all that we hold dear. Continue Thy care and leading to each of us personally and to the needs of the world.

To-day comes to us a list of names who in high service have given life for our national honor and welfare. God accept them. Christ receive them. Encourage the wounded. Succor those left to carry on the conflict and all who are to go. And comfort the mourning and anxious hearts back home.

In this pregnant hour of history, when we are as those whose eyes watch for the morning, make it clear to all who love Thy appearing in our country and in the nations of our allies that Thou art our God and our Father. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3980) to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes.

COLLECTION OF SOLDIERS' INSURANCE.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and many Members of Congress have been very much besieged by letters from people who have soldiers in the Army who have either died from natural causes or who have been killed. Shyster lawyers over the country have organized, as they usually do on occasions like this, to try to fleece these people out of a part of their insurance and a part of their compensation, trying to make them believe that it is necessary to employ a lawyer and pay him at least 10 per cent or something of that kind on the collection of their insurance and compensation. I desire to state that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has reported a bill to stop that practice, and I desire to give notice, in order that they may know what is coming up, that I shall ask unanimous consent this morning for the consideration of that bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state the number of it?

Mr. RAYBURN. Eleven thousand two hundred and twenty-five.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DOWELL for one week, in order to take part in the liberty-loan campaign in Iowa.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have an editorial inserted in the RECORD. It is from the New York American relative to the work of Secretary Daniels as Secretary of the Navy. There is a part of the editorial which is partisan, which I shall leave entirely out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest that the proper medium for an editorial of that sort is the Official Bulletin. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 69, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the rivers and harbors bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Baltimore Harbor and Channels, Maryland: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $300,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I have spoken upon the Baltimore Harbor so often that I take it most Members here to-day know a great deal about the harbor of our great metropolis lying within 40 miles of the National Capital.

Baltimore Harbor is composed of the Patapsco River, which is formed by the North and South Branches of that river. These branches rise in the central part of the State and the total length of the river is about 65 miles. Baltimore lies on the river, about 11 miles from the Chesapeake Bay. The river is only tidal for a few miles above the city. There was a time when the river was navigable to Elkridge Landing, but that has long since filled up. The important portion of the Patapsco River lies below the city of Baltimore and there is a detached part of the channel 4½ miles long into Chesapeake Bay—the Chesapeake Bay section opposite York Spit. The Curtis Bay section of the harbor is on the south side of the Patapsco River, about 6 miles southeasterly of the inner harbor. It is the mouth of Curtis Creek, in Anne Arundel County. This section of the harbor has been recently annexed by the General Assembly of Maryland to Baltimore. There is another section, known as Spring Gardens, which is really an extension of the Patapsco River into that part of the harbor known as Spring Gardens, and is about 4 miles long and half a mile wide.

The river changes entirely at Baltimore. Above it is a flowing stream, sometimes not more than 200 feet wide, while below it is an arm or outlet to the Chesapeake Bay from 1 to 4 miles wide. The tide in the river is slightly over 1 foot—about 14 inches.

When the United States Government began operations in the river there was a depth of 17-feet available at mean low tide. There were, of course, pockets which were deeper, but they availed nothing, inasmuch as the greater portion of the river was only 17 feet deep. In Curtis Bay there was an available depth of 20 feet at mean low water when we got to it, but that required another channel.

To-day there has been gradually appropriated sufficient sums of money to provide a channel 35 feet deep from the sea to Baltimore Harbor and into the harbor. York Spit Channel was dredged several years ago, but in the last few years, under a bill which I introduced, Congress provided $326,000 for the widening of it to make it more available for large ships. I will introduce here a statement showing that up to this time some $9,000,000 have been expended on those channels, which certainly shows effort on the part of Baltimore's Representatives:

Financial summary.

Amount expended on all projects to June 30, 1917, exclusive of receipts from sales, etc., formerly included, amounting to $58.81:
New work	$8,764,003.40
Maintenance	398,761.12
Total expended	9,162,764.52
Total appropriations to June 30, 1917	9,553,180.00

Fiscal year ending June 30.	1913	1914	1915	1916	1917
Expended for new work	$59,847.65	$75,512.74	$229,739.76	.....	.....
Expended for maintenance	200.00	5,581.46	27,279.45	$22,100.71	$42,681.94
Total expended	60,047.65	81,094.20	257,019.21	22,100.71	42,681.94
Appropriated or allotted	355,250.00	.....	.....	.....	.....

July 1, 1916, balance unexpended	$79,097.42
June 30, 1917, amount expended during fiscal year, for maintenance	42,681.94
July 1, 1917, balance unexpended	36,415.48
July 1, 1917, outstanding liabilities	1,150.00
July 1, 1917, balance available	35,265.48
Amount appropriated by river and harbor act approved Aug. 8, 1917	354,000.00
Amount available for fiscal year ending June 30, 1918	389,265.48
Amount (estimated) required to be appropriated for completion of existing project	626,100.00
Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1919:
For new work	200,000.00
For maintenance	100,000.00
Total	300,000.00

At the last Congress the river and harbor bill carried a project for the Baltimore Harbor in the sum of $876,100, and appropriations were made in the bill of last year and this year toward carrying out that project. The amount of the appropriation carried in this bill, to wit, $300,000, is apparently small, but when we realize that we have a comfortable balance from the last bill, which will enable us to carry on the work without hesitancy and toward the completion of the project provided, we can not complain.

This project provided for surveying, deepening, and widening the channel into Spring Gardens to the Hanover Street Bridge, the dredging of a large anchor basin in the harbor opposite Fort McHenry, and the deepening and widening of Curtis Bay Channel into that section of the harbor. The improvement of the Patapsco River section, including York Spit, has been completed and maintained by dredging under previous projects, so that now we have a 35-foot channel from the city to the sea. Together with the harbor improvements made by Baltimore, we have 35 feet of water to the piers at Locust Point.

When the work of dredging under this project of the last bill is finally completed, which will naturally take several years and perhaps more if the war continues, we will have a harbor second to New York alone on the Atlantic seaboard.

We must not be content, however, with 35 feet of water when we realize the great draft of many boats which are now being constructed, especially when we realize that only last year we authorized the construction of several dreadnaughts 850 feet long, drawing 31½ feet of water, and having a tonnage of 40,000 tons. It might be possible with a 35-foot channel to get one of these boats in the harbor if in good condition, but if she was injured it would require more than that amount of water.

It is clearly apparent that unless we have more than 35 feet of water within the next 10 years we will be practically out of the running. New York has a project under way for a 40-foot channel, Norfolk likewise by virtue of its navy yard and dry dock has been authorized 40 feet, and only to-day by amendment a channel has been provided for Charleston, S. C., to her navy yard, at that place, of 40 feet. Philadelphia and Baltimore, it will be seen, in a few years will be practically out of the race as almost the only large seaports along the Atlantic which have not secured 40 feet.

Philadelphia will no doubt obtain what she desires by virtue of its League Island Navy Yard, and it is strictly up to Baltimore, in order to keep in the running, to procure a 40-foot channel from the city to the sea.

I have introduced a bill for this purpose, and while I shall not press it upon this committee to-day as an amendment, I hope and believe that the next rivers and harbors bill will at least contain a survey for that purpose. I wish to impress it upon the House and upon my people that Baltimore, in order keep astride with the other great cities, must have a 40-foot channel, and it will require constant effort and determination in order to procure it.

Mr. LITTLE. Is the gentleman advising his friends to send their shipments to Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I advise everybody who wants a thing done quickly and cheaply to go to Baltimore. Baltimore at the present time has developed into a great shipbuilding center. All along the coast down to the Patapsco River are located great shipbuilding yards. The Bethlehem Steel Co. has developed a plant in which they are expending $50,000,000 in improvements and enlargements. As gentlemen know, the House recently appropriated some $50,000,000, $5,000,000 of which will be spent in building homes for workmen. The great Baltimore Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. have extended their plant; they occupy a part of Fort McHenry Grounds, and have now gone on the other side of the fort, but outside, and developed another large plant. Along the banks of the Patapsco, below Curtis Creek, a shipbuilding company, with a capital of $3,000,000, has been incorporated and will be in operation I hope before long; in addition, numerous other plants have been established.

Like Philadelphia, Baltimore has become a great shipbuilding center. Great ordnance warehouses are being built in Curtis Bay, across the harbor from Baltimore. So we are getting along pretty well in Baltimore, and I only wanted to call attention to the fact that we appreciate the $300,000 given us, which with the balance on hand enables us to continue work. There was an authorization of $876,100 altogether.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is evidently not complaining of the way that the committee has treated Baltimore?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No; but I wish the appropriation could have been larger and more work done. There has not been much work done by the Government during the last year; but we make no complaint, for, as a rule, Congress has been fairly good to us; but every dollar spent at Baltimore has been of great advantage to the Government. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I made a speech two or three years ago in favor of the new immigration station. That new station has enabled the Government to have one of the largest hospitals in the country for the treatment of the injured during this war. It has been turned into a hospital and, with other buildings, will have 2,000 beds.

Mr. WINGO. I do not want the gentleman to misinterpret my question. I am with the gentleman because, like other Members, we realize that when the gentleman goes for something he is generally so persistent that they have to give it to him sooner or later, and the gentleman gets what he wants. He has a remarkable ability to present the merits of his proposition, and he never presents one to the House that does not possess merit, and for that reason the House is generally with him.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Well, we have to keep busy. The great western sections and the port of New York swallow up things. Only yesterday we provided for a 40-foot channel through Hell Gate for New York. I want to call attention to the fact that there are other ports on the seaboard besides New York that ought to have a 40-foot channel. There is Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, Norfolk, and I shall ask in due time for a 40-foot channel for Baltimore.

Mr. TREADWAY. Did the gentleman include Boston?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes; I included Boston to-day and also in my remarks of yesterday.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the question asked by the gentleman from Arkansas struck the nail on the head. Members of the House convey the impression that through their individual efforts they have something to do with the merits of the various propositions. If we could only get away from that view and understand that it is the merit of the proposition itself on a commercial basis for which we give these appropriations, it would be better. We have got to do that before we will ever get anything that will be fair to the country and fair to the Treasury of the United States.

As to Baltimore and the necessities of that harbor, I do not wish to criticize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM], for he is an excellent Member and looks after matters connected with his district, but this appropriation was determined irrespective of his argument, and it ought to be determined irrespective of the argument of Members of the House. If not, it is unfair to other Members, and Congress ought not to give to those who are specially favored and present matters with especial persistency. They should not have any advantage over others. For that reason I speak. I do not think it is right that Members should assume that it is their individual effort which secures these appropriations.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I merely want to say that the reason I did not take up more time of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors during the formation of this bill is that the project at Baltimore for $876,000 had already been adopted. It was adopted last year, and there was no necessity for further proof, as it then became a continued proposition.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; it was unnecessary, because the committee has full knowledge of Baltimore Harbor, and it has given what she needs irrespective of the wishes of the gentleman. Now, the same is true of most of the harbors and ought to be of our navigable facilities, and I speak of this for fear a wrong impression may go out as to what influences the committee. It may, but it ought not. We ought to be governed entirely by the commercial needs.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to interrupt, I desire to say there is no formal amendment pending before the House and at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland I would like to demand the regular order to proceed.

Mr. PRICE. I rise, Mr. Chairman, more particularly to get some information from the chairman of the committee who reported this bill. I notice on page 4 there are about 25 rivers and creeks in my district which carry a maintenance of $3,000. I would say this seems so small, so inadequate, for so many rivers that I simply wanted to know on what this estimate is based.

Mr. SMALL. In reply to the gentleman I will say that the only item in that group for which an appropriation is recommended is the one for Wicomico River, where there is an estimate for $3,000 for maintenance. As to all the other items in that group, no recommendation for an appropriation was made, either because the balance on hand was sufficient for the next fiscal year or because no money is needed for their maintenance. Take, for instance, Wicomico River. There is a balance available there of $3,694, and this sum, together with the cash appropriation of $3,000 carried in this bill, was regarded as sufficient for the present year and the next fiscal year. Every dollar is appropriated for the group of items which was recommended by the Chief of Engineers as being required for their maintenance or improvement.

Mr. PRICE. I understand, then, there is an unexpended balance to take care of the maintenance of those rivers?

Mr. SMALL. There is $60,000 altogether available for the group.

Mr. PRICE. I simply wanted to clear that up because it seemed so small that I wanted to know whether they were properly provided for.

Mr. SMALL. It is a perfectly proper inquiry on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman thoroughly understands the importance of the rivers in this part of the country. This whole eastern shore of Maryland is cut up with rivers and creeks; in fact, it is the only means of transportation that many sections of that country have; and, in fact, two-thirds of the commerce of that section is carried on those rivers and creeks. I thank the gentleman for his information and am very glad he feels it is provided for so adequately.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Norfolk Harbor and Channels, Va.: Continuing improvement, $1,540,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 20 on page 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "improvement and for maintenance, including the channel to Newport News, $1,940,000," so the paragraph as amended will read as follows: "Norfolk Harbor and Channels, Va.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, including the channel to Newport News, $1,940,000."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in the project for Norfolk Harbor and channels are included, first, Norfolk Harbor, embracing the Elizabeth River; also the Southern Branch of that river, on which the navy yard is located, and the Eastern Branch and the Western Branch of Elizabeth River. Another project in this group is Thimble Shoal Channel, while still another is the channel leading from Hampton Roads to Newport News. In the annual report of the Chief of Engineers recommendations of appropriation were only made for Norfolk Harbor in further continuance of the improvement of the deeper channel of 40 feet to the navy yard and also for the Thimble Shoal Channel. No estimate was submitted at that time for the channel leading from Hampton Roads to Newport News. This additional appropriation of $400,000 is for the maintenance and further improvement of the channel to Newport News and is offered in response to a letter from the Chief of Engineers, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, April 8, 1918.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMALL: I. Referring to the item on page 4 of the pending river and harbor bill for Norfolk Harbor and Channels, Va., I have the honor to state that information has just been received from the district engineer showing that work is urgently needed on the Newport

News Channel for which no provision was made in the estimate as submitted in the annual report for 1917. The existing project for this channel provides for a depth of 35 feet and widening the former project width of 400 feet to 600 feet.

2. No allotment to this channel was made from the appropriation of August 8, 1917, because the 40-foot channel to the navy yard was considered more important. Similarly, in the estimates for the next fiscal year it was deemed advisable to limit the funds to the work that could be done on the channel to the navy yard, no special urgency for work on the Newport News Channel having appeared at that time. Recently, however, the local pilots' association and the commander of the port of embarkation have reported that the largely increased use of this channel for war purposes has developed its inadequacy to serve these needs. The district engineer concurs in their views and recommends that provision be made in this bill for widening this channel to the new project width of 600 feet.

3. The original estimated cost of this work was $270,000. The channel has shoaled, however, since that estimate was made, and there has been a notable increase in prices, so that the district engineer now estimates the cost of this work at $400,000. In view of these conditions, it is recommended that the item for continuing improvement of Norfolk Harbor and Channels, Va., be increased from $1,540,000 to $1,940,000.

Very truly, yours,

FREDERIC V. ABBOT,
Brigadier General, Engineers,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

Mr. SMALL. Unless some further information is requested——

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does this project for which the gentleman has recommended an increase of $400,000 involve the improvement of the channel to the Newport News training station, which the Government secured under authorization made last year?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; it makes that accessible, including the great shipyard there and the supply depot. It is a very important harbor for the shipment of supplies abroad to our expeditionary forces.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is virtually one of the important points for the embarkation of our troops going abroad.

Mr. SMALL. Probably the most important save Philadelphia and New York.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand this additional appropriation it is for the purpose of improving the channel leading up to the new naval station, which was secured by authorization of Congress last year?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman is correct, and this is asked as a war exigency. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: Continuing improvement, $500,000.

Mr. SMALL Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4 strike out the period at the end of line 25 and insert in lieu thereof a colon and add the following words: "Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, make such minor changes in the location of the waterway as he may deem advisable in the interest of navigation."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I make this statement in connection with this amendment: The district engineer, in making a survey there, has decided that in the interest of economy in construction and maintenance there ought to be a slight deviation in the line as heretofore recommended in the report on the project. This amendment simply authorizes such slight deviation as may be necessary in the interest of economy and navigation.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I will not attempt to oppose this amendment, because the item of $500,000 was offered in the committee and it was opposed there, and I am satisfied to let the committee's action stand. But I do wish to make this brief statement in reference to this project, which I have opposed in the past and which I do not believe to-day is of any commercial importance, particularly in war times. As I have stated in my minority report, the commerce has dwindled down forty-odd per cent within the last two years on this project. This $500,000 proposed in the bill is to meet underestimates made by the Army engineers on this canal or waterway. And it ought to be understood that when these estimates are made and they are accepted so easily by the House we will ask what are the facts. Think of it, in just one year we are confronted with the fact that half a million dollars in underestimates by Army engineers has occurred on this waterway. The amendment seeks to have the Army engineers make changes if they choose. They are permitted to do that, I suppose, anyway. They have had before them various routes for years in order to determine where to send these barges up and down the coast and where to dig canals. I wish to call attention to the fact that here is an appropriation of half a million dollars due to underestimates and mistakes of the engineers in digging on this waterway along the Atlantic coast. But what are several millions of dollars for this part of the waterway? It will run over $6,000,000 when you put in these underestimates, and we do not know how many more underestimates we will have before it is completed. Bear in mind that within the last two years there has been 40 per cent loss in commerce, and yet as a war measure you are putting in half a million dollars. And this is only a small link in an inland waterway scheme that will reach many hundreds of millions of dollars as now proposed and is of no practicable commercial demand or use.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], who moved to strike out the last word.

I am in favor of the amendment and hope it will be adopted. I realize the gentleman from Wisconsin has made a fight for several years on what may be the canal items in this bill, and he has his reasons therefor. I have given him credit for a conscientious desire to do his full duty in the House, but I question whether it can be truly said that the opening up of the inside waterways along the Atlantic coast at this time is not directly in the line of war necessity. With the facts staring us in the face that the railroads have been unable to carry the freight of the country and to meet the requirements of war, it has seemed to me to be close to suicidal to permit our inside waterways to remain inactive as they have been.

It has been pointed out on this floor time and time again—the older Members know it well, but it may be repeated for the benefit of the new Members—that the inside waterways along the Atlantic coast need but a little digging here and a little digging there to connect them up in one continuous chain along the coast—an inside water course safe from the dangers of the ocean, capable of carrying a barge traffic, and if sufficient depth be given capable of carrying vessels of war inside, protected from storm and free to move about strategically as they see fit.

We do not build navy yards out on the ocean line. Neither do we build ships out in the ocean. We use inland areas for that purpose, and we must have inside passageways through which vessels may come and go. They are not constructed directly on the coast. They are constructed inside.

I gave you yesterday the most notable example we have in the United States to-day of progress along an inside waterway when I referred to the Delaware River. But wonderful as has been the development along that river in recent years, it is limited in its capacity to relieve the Government at this time, because we have deliberately refused to open up connecting links that would make it serviceable to the country—South and North. Gentlemen look querulously at the map and say, "You have got the great ocean to go upon." But gentlemen fail to read in the newspapers in times of stress and storm in the winter season of barges that ought to be on inside waterways attempting to make the outside passage and going to the bottom, carrying human lives along with them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The canals are frozen.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Wisconsin says canals are frozen.

Mr. FREAR. I did not say that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But there are other gentlemen from Wisconsin here besides the gentleman who spoke last. The gentleman [Mr. STAFFORD], who dreams in terms of ice, comes from Milwaukee, where they need it in the familiar beverages they drink. But no one needs to remind even the school children of the United States that in certain periods of the year ice comes over the streams of the Northern States. No one need hurl into the face of the merest tyro the statement that canals and waterways and lakes will be frozen. Why, navigation on the Great Lakes, up yonder where the gentleman from Wisconsin lives, is impeded for long seasons during the year on account of ice, and the boats are held up in the harbors, whereas boats can continue to navigate the inside waterways south of Wisconsin, if you will only open up the courses. That simple truth needs no demonstration.

One of the real hindrances to the progress of this war is the failure of this country to properly utilize and operate the navigable waterways that the Lord has given it. Gentlemen remember well the coal shortage of a month ago. They remember how congestion backed up against the port of New York. They were told then that if these waterways had been improved and these barge lines had been encouraged, the storehouses of the Nation might have been full at various points rather than at the one port of New York alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Gentlemen vote very properly——

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Wisconsin is boasting about the Lakes. Is it not a fact that navigation is safe on the canals while they are continuing to drown people on the Lakes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman from Kansas has brought that to the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman cares only for life on the Great Lakes. I care also for human life along the Atlantic seaboard.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say again I was not referring to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. The other gentleman from Wisconsin seems to be peculiarly amused when this question of saving life on the Atlantic seaboard arises.

Mr. FREAR. Before our committee Col. Keller testified briefly as follows, and it is right in line with the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no more important war proposition than this.

Mr. FREAR. He says, on page 13 of the inland waterway investigation:

> The railroad freight rate per ton from the anthracite fields to Philadelphia, where that coal might be transshipped to barges and from Philadelphia going to Norfolk by water, is within 50 cents or thereabouts of the rail rate to Norfolk.
>
> Mr. FREAR. What proportion of the haul?
>
> Col. KELLER. About a third. Now, then, that determines what the barge shall get. The man who is buying coal in Norfolk is willing to allow the barge only the difference between the railroad through rate to Norfolk and the railroad local rate to Philadelphia—that is, 50 cents. The result is that the coal does not move by water. The barges have gone out of this coal business. This is the short-sightedness of the people. They do not fight against railroad rates when in normal times these rates favor the individual at the expense of the community. When things are abnormal, however, these rates may militate against the individual as well and damage his interests. We come back to the point that there is no prospect of large traffic on inland waterways until the rail situation is very radically revised.

That is the Army engineer who appeared before our committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman quoted that. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he agrees the canals have gone out of business and are not carrying coal in the manner indicated by Col. Keller?

Mr. FREAR. There may be some canals that are carrying some coal, but I will read also in regard to the New York Barge Canal, if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman has read enough for the purposes of the argument. The gentleman has read far enough to prove what I am stating, that these very canals have been put out of business by the railroads, although they were built to serve the country at cheaper rates than the railroads were. The railroads did not encourage the canals. I will point to the Schuylkill Navigation Canal, which was put out of business, although it proposed to bring coal to the consumer for $1 cheaper per ton than it could be brought by rail. Yet the gentleman from Wisconsin insists that is not a good system, and although the railroads themselves to-day are pleading for the rehabilitation of the canals, he would not have them restored but would continue to impose these exorbitant rates upon the consumers of coal. I want no better illustration than that which the gentleman has presented. I will tell him that if we had a canal free of tolls between the Chesapeake and the Delaware Bays now there would probably not be railroad embargoes on lumber from the South that is needed in the shipyards of the North. We would get that lumber up through the canals. We can not get it outside because our ships are commandeered. The schooners that used to carry it are out of business. Barges are not built for ocean-going traffic, and you refuse to permit the inside waterways to be used because you demand that the railroads shall be the sole carriers of the traffic of the country.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion on a lateral canal like the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, that brings coal down from Cumberland.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes. Gentlemen have laughed at that proposition. They have sneered at the thought that we should utilize the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal. It is not along that coastal chain that I have been advocating here, but it is one of the many feeders of that great inland trunk line, and would aid and be aided by it. If the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal had not been chloroformed by the railroads there would have been plenty of coal in Washington last winter, when the people of Washington were begging for coal. That is the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, may I ask for five minutes to respond to what the gentleman has said?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from Philadelphia dreams on this subject of inland waterways. He is at the head of an organization that is urging generous appropriations for canals and inland waterways. He is present at all the waterway meetings and he derides and criticizes people who disagree with him upon this subject. Now, when it is pointed out to him, the absurdity of his own argument made upon this floor in regard to the shipment of coal on this very waterway, upon which we have put now over $3,000,000 on this short link, and we will put $100,000,000, and far more than that, on this Atlantic coast waterway scheme—aye, a billion dollars, if you choose, if we get it deep enough to carry large vessels—with all these facts submitted to him by the Army engineers, he says that we are glad of failure of usefulness, or substantially that; that that is the position we assume. It is not.

The fact is, I fear, that the gentleman is taking up a narrow-minded view on this inland-waterway proposition. We have got to change the rates of the railroads before traffic will seek the canals. I have insisted upon it while he has remained silent. Why does he not go before the Interstate Commerce Commission? Why does he not go before Mr. McAdoo or somebody else on this proposition?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have gone before Mr. McAdoo, and am happy to say that Mr. McAdoo has promised to utilize the waterways wherever they can be utilized to advantage.

Mr. FREAR. I hope that is true. I have seen the gentleman's picture repeatedly in publications along the vicinity of the canal, wherever he makes his appearance and conducts his investigations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not that show the demand for this improvement on the part of the people in those localities?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman, with his charming personality, is sure to get this publicity. I am discussing coal, and I am showing, Mr. Chairman, that, notwithstanding all the millions of dollars that we have put into this waterway, the Army engineer, in whose judgment you are so frequently asked to give confidence, says there is nothing in it. He says that coal barges are withdrawn because we can carry coal cheaper by rail on account of the 50 cents per ton allowed for differential. That is the reason. It is useless to put millions of dollars into these waterways, as we are now doing, unless we have some intelligent idea of the way to utilize them. The same thing applies to the Mississippi River, on which we have appropriated $170,000,000. What is the use in wasting millions of dollars on the Mississippi River when we have no commerce on the Mississippi River? Col. Keller is a very able engineer and he has a very intelligent understanding of the situation, in my view. He says you have got to raise rates on the railroads if you are to utilize these waterways.

We have disclosed and brought it home to you how much we have appropriated. We have appropriated for three rivers $250,000,000, for the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio, with a small commerce which has decreased materially since so-called improvements were begun.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood you to quote the engineers as saying you have got to reach the railroad rates before you can utilize these streams. That means you have got to reduce railroad rates?

Mr. FREAR. No. You have got to raise the rates so that it will make it possible for waterways traffic to exist. They have done it in Germany. The reason why they have made it successful in Germany is because the Government controls both railways and waterways.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not that success partly due to the fact that certain classes of freight, where expedition is not essential, are carried on the waterways? Is not that true of bulky freight and the cheaper freight?

Mr. FREAR. I would like to explain to the gentleman in detail what occurs practically only on one river in Germany, namely, the Rhine, where river commerce is over 30,000,000 tons annually; and the conditions there are so entirely different from those on any streams we have in this country that it is almost impossible to duplicate them, except where the Government has control of rivers and railways, in order to force certain commerce onto the rivers by raising the railway rates. That is about the only way we can do it, and, as the gentleman says, it is for a certain class of heavy traffic—ore, coal, and bulk freight. Of course, on the Rhine River the coal is at the opposite end of the stream than on our own rivers. The mountains furnish, through snows, some moisture the year round. With us, on the Mississippi and other rivers, in the summer time the waterways are practically useless and largely unused the year round.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Canals are not.

Mr. FREAR. But the expense of the canalization system is too great. We have put $59,000,000 into the Ohio River appropriations already for canalization and the commerce is not as great as it was before we began the improvements. On the Brazos River, down in the gentleman's own country, and on the Trinity River, into which they have put three or four million dollars, there is no tonnage whatever.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the improvements have not been completed.

Mr. FREAR. No; and if we put in as much as $12,000,000, as we have on the Black Warrior River, the Army engineer says, in effect, in this report that it is useless, that you can not compel people to build boats to carry the commerce or to float commerce when railway facilities are so superior.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not want the money spent on streams where navigation can not be developed.

Mr. FREAR. I am satisfied the gentleman does not, and Congress does not, and if we will give intelligent study to this question I think we will come to a realization of the fact that it is a misuse of the money to make such appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to be left in the attitude before the House of urging appropriations for streams where it is not possible to ever develop navigation; but in my travels I have observed that the canals and streams are enormously used, in Belgium, for example, and in Holland, and in some places in Germany, and in France, too. I believe that there are certain classes of freight that will be transported by water whenever there is an opportunity to do so.

Now, as to the Brazos and the Trinity, I do not know whether it is possible to make those streams fit for navigation. That is out of my line of study and investigation. I am compelled to accept the professional opinion of people who are trained in such matters. But it is not quite fair for my friend to cite the present amount of commerce on those rivers in connection with his argument, because neither of those projects has been completed. Of course, commerce has not been built up since the undertaking was initiated to increase the navigability of those streams. His argument would be strong enough if the work on those streams had been finished and no commerce developed, but now it is not finished, and so there is no strength in his argument. That is all I have to say about that.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin is particularly opposing this improvement.

Mr. FREAR. I am not, and I ask to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SMALL. But, for the sake of accuracy, I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin would like to be informed as to the commerce on this section of the Norfolk-Beaufort waterway, from Norfolk to Albemarle Sound. There was a decrease of only 47,848 tons in 1916 from the previous year, or a decrease of only 9 per cent in tonnage. On the contrary, there was an increase in the value of the commerce of $404,061 for the same period. I have made the calculation, and I am sure the gentleman would like to have the facts correctly stated.

Mr. FREAR. I quoted from page 542 of the 1917 report of the engineer that the loss in commerce between 1913 and 1916 was 45 per cent. Is that statement correct?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman will understand that between Norfolk and Albemarle Sound there are two waterways.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman includes the inland waterway via Dismal Swamp Canal?

Mr. SMALL. Yes. The United States have purchased the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal route and the same is now under improvement in accordance with the report of the engineers.

Mr. FREAR. That explains the discrepancy. This is from the report.

Mr. SMALL. One of these waterways has been taken over by the Government and is under improvement, and while it is under improvement it can be used very little. The bulk of the commerce still has to go through the privately owned waterway, on which tolls are charged, and it is fair to compile the commerce on both the Albemarle & Chesapeake Canal and the Dismal Swamp Canal, because both have the same termini—that is to say, both extend from Norfolk to Albemarle Sound.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. We all realize that this project is very dear to the heart of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], as it is, of course, to the gentleman from Philadelphia, who is the perennial president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association. I would like to inquire of the gentleman as to whether he can inform the House of the character of the tonnage on this inland waterway and the ton-miles of the traffic that is carried on it?

Mr. SMALL. In answer to that I will say that it is all through commerce. It passes the entire distance through. None of it is local in the sense the gentleman has in mind; that is to say, going a few miles. It is all through commerce, and it is of a diversified character, consisting of coal, fertilizers, gasoline, agricultural products, forest products, grain, merchandise, and miscellaneous articles.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the total tonnage is how much?

Mr. SMALL. The total tonnage for 1916, the last figures we have, was 524,475 tons, at a valuation of $15,032,097.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the character of the vessels used in the carriage of this tonnage, whether they are steam propelled?

Mr. SMALL. The larger part of the transportation is in barges, but a substantial part is also carried in freight steamers.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the project, the recommended depth is 9 feet.

Mr. SMALL. No; it is 12 feet, with a width of 90 feet at the bottom and a width of 150 feet at the top.

Mr. STAFFORD. Other than the gentleman from the eighteenth ward of Philadelphia, the distinguished president of the Inland Waterways Association, is there any thought of making an inland waterway deep enough so as to have it possible to transport men-of-war?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I do not want to have the gentleman's words taken down, but I ask if it is permissible to refer to a Member in the first person?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if I have any time remaining I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point of order is that the gentleman from Wisconsin is violating the rules in referring to his colleague in the first person.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take exception to the position of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the president of the Inland Waterways Association. I have not, as the report of the proceedings will show, referred to any gentleman, not even the illustrious gentleman from Pennsylvania, the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, in the first person. I have referred to him always in the third person. I would not magnify the ego by referring to him in the first person. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I accept the humble apology of the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I now apologize to the House for having committed an error in respect to the gentleman from Wisconsin, to whom I referred a little while ago. When I spoke of the gentleman from Wisconsin as having paid little attention to waterways I was referring to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who usually is very accurate in other matters. But the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], coming with special force to the aid of his colleague, entered the fray and seemed to take to himself the suggestion that I had reflected upon him. I have observed in the list of Members from Wisconsin that there is more than one Member from Wisconsin in the delegation, and several of them are of considerable prominence in this House, so that when reference is made to any one of them perhaps it would be better, the rules permitting, to designate them by name.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman say that as far as the delegation from Pennsylvania is concerned, and particularly when matters pertaining to the city of Philadelphia are under consideration?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. With humble apologies to my colleague I admit that there are gentlemen in the Pennsylvania delegation who do their best for their country and their State; in fact, all of them do, as I assume that all of the gentlemen from Wisconsin do. The trouble is that when a Member refers to "the gentleman from Wisconsin" a large part of the delegation rises with one accord. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] mistook my reference to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] as having reference to him. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], to whom I did not refer, indicated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania sometimes, because of his enthusiasm for waterways, became abusive. That statement ought not to stand without contradiction.

I have never been abusive to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I have been lenient to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I have been observant of his weaknesses. I have seen that the gentleman from Wisconsin is fair up to a certain point, and then stops without ascertaining all the facts. The gentleman from Wisconsin says the gentleman from Pennsylvania gets his picture in the papers along the Atlantic coast, but the gentleman from Wisconsin gets display headlines in the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. FREAR. May I inquire of the gentleman when this occurred?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have observed that when the gentleman makes a spectacular speech on the floor it appears the next morning in the Chicago Tribune, and as that paper has a wide circulation throughout the State of Wisconsin I assume that a Wisconsin speech in the Chicago Tribune is good for home consumption.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman will agree with me when I say that the Chicago Tribune, of all the papers in this country, has helped defeat or modify some of the bad river and harbor bills in the past, and that was done on its own motion, and it has been a matter of national concern.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has encouraged the gentleman from Wisconsin to go on and make his statements about eastern projects and projects elsewhere. It has given encouragement through display headlines. That may be "according to Hoyle"; gentlemen in Congress are permitted to do that sort of thing if they want to. There are gentlemen on the other side of the House who come in suddenly and make spectacular speeches about their colleagues and then rush off on the lecture platform. But other gentlemen are content to make speeches about waterways, waste, and extravagance, and they get the headlines in the Chicago Tribune.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. BRITTEN. In reply to my good friend from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], I would like to say that there is probably not one man in the House who is here oftener or who spends more time in the House than the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is another case of mistaken personality. [Laughter.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I have called the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has ignored the report of the Army engineers. He has never replied to it, he can not reply to it, because it is so convincing in itself. It says that the barges along this canal have been withdrawn because coal can not be shipped profitably.

As to the further suggestion in regard to the proposition that we have here—this waterway—I have not made a motion to strike it out, although, as I have shown, $500,000 additional cost was occasioned through the mistake of engineers, and, as I said, every coal barge has been withdrawn. No coal has been shipped notwithstanding the enthusiastic promises of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I shall continue to stand here and explain what these facts are, supported by the Army engineers' reports, which he has heretofore generally accepted. I have no personal feeling in regard to the matter, but I shall not permit myself to be misrepresented.

Mr. MADDEN rose.

Mr. SMALL. Can we not have a vote upon this amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to make a speech upon it.

Mr. SMALL. Then I ask unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. MADDEN. And I ask that that be made 10 minutes. I modify the request to make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] modifies that request and asks unanimous consent that debate be closed in 10 minutes.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman himself to consume that time?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I accept the modification.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that he may proceed for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, we are considering the item on page 4, lines 24 and 25:

Waterway from Norfolk, Va., to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.: Continuing improvement, $500,000.

According to the minority views, this $500,000 indicates an underestimate of the cost of the improvement, and the minority of the committee make this statement, which is published on page 12 of the minority views:

A proposed inland-waterway project along the Atlantic coast and Gulf that canalizes marshes, sounds, creeks, and dry land, at a possible expense to the Government of from $100,000,000 to ten times that amount, depending on depth, is being vigorously urged upon Congress and upon war boards as a war measure. This bill contains $500,000, because of mistaken estimated expense on one section of a canal or waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort. After appropriations of $3,244,400 to June 30, 1917, in addition to the half million dollars of underestimates, $2,397,180 more will be required for this canal waterway that lost 45 per cent of its small commerce between 1913 and 1916, according to page 542 of the 1917 Engineers' report.

I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina, in charge of the bill, if the statement in the minority views which I have just read is true? I do not pretend to know the facts.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago, while perhaps the gentleman was diverted——

Mr. MADDEN. I was not present.

Mr. SMALL. I stated in reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] in effect that that statement was erroneous, and I explained why it was. As a matter of fact, there has been a falling off of only about 9 per cent, the decrease being 47,848 tons, while there has been an increase in valuation of the commerce of $404,661.

Mr. MADDEN. So that the total tonnage, according to the gentleman from North Carolina, has fallen off 9 per cent, while the value of the tonnage which passes through the canal has increased.

Mr. SMALL. More than $400,000.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the gentleman from Wisconsin say?

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the facts are just as stated here, taken from the official report, and the explanation of the chairman of the committee is that part of this commerce which he counts in goes around by an inland canal not owned by the Government.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I want to get at the facts.

Mr. SMALL. This matter has been explained quite often, but I am sure the gentleman will not object to its being explained again. The first section of the waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet under improvement is that section from Norfolk to Albemarle Sound. There are two waterways from Norfolk to Albermarle Sound, one known as the Albermarle & Chesapeake Canal route and the other as the Dismal Swamp route, both having the same termini.

And, therefore, in taking into consideration the commerce between the two termini you must of necessity consider the commerce upon both. Now, the engineers recommended taking over the Albermarle & Chesapeake route. During the construction of that section along the Albermarle & Chesapeake Canal route naturally navigation has been obstructed and therefore not so large a commerce now goes through the Government-owned waterway as upon the other privately owned waterway; but when the Government's own waterway is completed, which will probably be by the end of the year, then all the commerce will go through the Government-owned and free waterway; so the figures I gave as to commerce represented the commerce upon both of those waterways, both the Government-owned and the privately owned, both having the same termini. When the public waterway from Norfolk to Albermarle Sound is completed all the commerce will use this route because it is free and will have ample depth and width. In the meantime, in estimating the commerce, it is only fair to combine the commerce on both routes.

Mr. MADDEN. So that while the gentleman from Wisconsin makes a charge in this report, and this charge I understand is based on the report of the engineers of 45 per cent——

Mr. SMALL. Of the Government-owned waterway, only one.

Mr. MADDEN. That 45 per cent of the tonnage on the Government-owned waterway has been lost. The gentleman from North Carolina states there was a decrease only of 9 per cent of the combined tonnage on both waterways in 1916 from the previous year. Is that right?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I assume we pay tolls on the privately owned waterway?

Mr. SMALL. That is true, because the Government-owned waterway is under improvement and can not be used by loaded barges and steamers.

Mr. MADDEN. It was constructed before we began to appropriate the money, I assume, or it would not have been carrying a larger tonnage than now.

Mr. SMALL. I will say this route selected by the Government of the United States—the Albemarle and Chesapeake route—had deteriorated while the other one had been better maintained.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman means the privately owned waterway has been better maintained?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Assuming both statements are correct, notwithstanding there is a loss of tonnage of 9 per cent?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is true. That is the very best statement that can be made—that there is 9 per cent loss of tonnage, regardless of whether you carry through one or two waterways.

Mr. FESS. That is the point.

Mr. MADDEN. If you make the calculation on the one which is owned by the Government of the United States, and upon which we have already expended $3,244,000, and upon which we expect to expend, in addition thereto, $2,397.800, we have lost 45 per cent, and added to those two items we still have $500,000 proposed to be expended through authority of the pending law, which is an addition to the two items I have named; so we will still find ourselves in the position of having expended over $6,000,000 to bolster up a constantly decaying public institution. Now, my theory is that in the expenditure of public money we ought to have in mind the development for which the money is being expended; that we ought not under any circumstances to expend these vast sums where the evidence is clear we are spending the money on an obsolete institution.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will be delighted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much money does the gentleman say has been spent?

Mr. MADDEN. Three million two hundred and forty-four thousand dollars, June 30, 1917.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And how much is to be expended?

Mr. MADDEN. Two million three hundred and ninety-seven thousand eight hundred dollars, in addition to the $500,000 herein authorized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That large sum of money having been spent on work that is still under construction, would the gentleman stop here and waste all that has been done?

Mr. MADDEN. I will illustrate. I recall very clearly a case where I installed a large amount of machinery which cost about $500,000. It was up-to-date machinery on the day it was installed. I discovered after the installation of this machinery that it did not produce the results which it was intended to produce when the investment was made. It was thought wise to scrap that machinery and substitute other machinery that would produce the desired results more economically. It was scrapped, the new machinery was installed, and the economy anticipated resulted from the change. If private interests will do such things, why should the Government not do likewise? Waste of money on obsolete facilities is never justified, not even out of the country's Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waterways between Charleston and Alligator Creek (opposite McClellanville), S. C.: For maintenance, including branch to Morrisons Landing, $5,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, or some member of it, in reference to this item of $5,000 for the maintenance of branch to Morrisons Landing, which landing is apparently on a waterway between Charleston and Alligator Creek, opposite McClellanville. What sort of branch is this, a canal or a river?

Mr. SMALL. That is through a natural waterway 47½ miles long. I will say to the gentleman that the project provides for a channel 4 feet deep at mean low water and 60 feet wide—I am reading from the report of the Engineers, page 638—60 feet wide at bottom between Charleston and a point opposite McClellanville, with a branch channel of the same dimensions to Morrisons Landing in McClellanville. The gentleman will find also on page 637, at the bottom, under commercial statistics, that this waterway while carrying comparatively a small tonnage occupies a very important relation to the local commerce of that section.

Mr. WALSH. Then, I understand $12,000 has been expended by way of maintenance upon this branch during the year ending June 30, 1917?

Mr. SMALL. The amount expended during last year was $12,179, which was expended in dredging—the gentleman will find on page 638, under the paragraph entitled "Operations and results during the fiscal year"—in dredging and restoring the branch channel leading to McClellanville, which had been filled as the result of an unusual storm on July 15, 1916. Dredging was also done to restore, as fully as practicable, project dimensions in the channel at Salt Pond Creek, Santee Pass, Grays Bay, and Sewee Bay. The total amount expended was as I have stated.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. Chairman, a further inquiry. I notice in this project, and a great many others of probably similar character, that it requires a great number of appropriations of larger and smaller sums each year for maintenance. Why can not these small connecting links in these inland waterways be so constructed or so improved that the cost of maintenance will be reduced? In other words, why can not we make a lump-sum appropriation of $50,000, or more, if necessary, to so dredge out or repair or reconstruct these small creeks or rivers of not very great depth in a way as to not require this constant appropriation for maintenance? Can the gentleman explain what there is peculiar about it?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman has asked a very pertinent and appropriate question. The matter of maintenance of channels of necessity varies, dependent upon the physical conditions. Take a channel, for instance, that is dredged 100 feet wide and 10 feet deep through a body of water a mile or 5 miles wide, and the gentleman will understand that through wave action or other action of the water there is of necessity a certain erosion on the side of the dredged channel into the channel itself, and the only way it can be removed is by annual dredging. Now, the stability of a channel depends also on the character of the soil. A sandy channel erodes very easily and fills up. Rather strange to say, a channel composed of mud is more stable than one of sand, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like just one minute more in which to answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time will be extended one minute.

Mr. SMALL. Of course, with a bottom of clay the channel is even more stable. Where the channel is sufficiently narrow or where it is an artificial channel, and erodes or shoals or fills up, there the channel can be maintained by the process of revetment. But that is only practicable where the channel is narrow and only embraces the limits of the navigable channel itself.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what is done with the dredged material? Is it piled upon the banks, or is it deposited in other portions of the creek or shallow bay?

Mr. SMALL. Now, where the material is soft the dredging is usually done by hydraulic dredges, and the material is carried by pipes to the side of the stream and deposited.

Mr. WALSH. Now, could not this annual maintenance expense and work be dispensed with if, instead of dredging that channel through the little bay or creek, 4 or 6 feet deep, a channel was cut through to a depth of 15 feet or 20 feet? And the washing in would probably continue to a certain extent, but it would result in sloping down the sides and would not shoal up the channel to such an extent.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman has asked a question which is rather one of engineering, but I doubt as a practical proposition whether Congress would be willing to authorize a greater depth than is necessary for existing commerce for the purpose simply of preventing the filling of channels.

The Clerk read as follows:

Charleston Harbor and Channels, S. C.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $110,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 5, strike out the period at the end of line 21, and insert in lieu thereof a colon and add the following: "For improvement to provide a channel 40 feet deep and 1,000 wide, extending from the sea to Charleston Navy Yard, $1,500,000: Provided, That this work shall not be undertaken until the proposed new dry dock at this navy yard, carrying a depth of 40 feet of water over the blocks, has been authorized; in all, $1,610,000."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I might make this preliminary statement: When the Naval appropriation bill was recently reported to the House it contained a provision authorizing the construction of a very large dry dock at the navy yard at Charleston, carrying a depth of 40 feet over the blocks. The Naval appropriation bill authorized a further improvement of Charleston Harbor to a depth of 40 feet. Of course, if a dry dock is constructed of the dimensions I have specified, the further deepening of the harbor is absolutely essential for the utilization of the dry dock. That matter came to the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and we brought it to the attention of the Secretary of War, accompanied with this statement of the committee, that the War Department had jurisdiction over the improvement of all harbors and channels for the purpose of navigation, whether that navigation was by vessels of commerce or by vessels of war, and that the Navy Department did not have jurisdiction; further, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had jurisdiction of such improvements and the Committee on Naval Affairs did not.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The naval bill, as I understand the gentleman, provides an appropriation to deepen the harbor surrounding the dry dock? Is that right?

Mr. SMALL. That is a different piece of work from deepening the channel.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that. I am leading up to what I want to say. Provision has already been made in the naval bill for deepening the harbor at the dry dock and surrounding the dry dock. Is that right?

Mr. SMALL. That is in the naval bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, if the expenditure is made as provided in the naval bill, the harbor will have a depth of 40 feet. Is that right?

Mr. SMALL. No. Has the gentleman been to Charleston?

Mr. MADDEN. The harbor itself——

Mr. SMALL. The navy yard is on the Cooper River, and, in fact, most of the harbor of Charleston is on the Cooper River. I can not tell the gentleman at this moment the distance from the navy yard to the sea.

Mr. PADGETT. It is about 6 miles.

Mr. SMALL. Now, this proposition is to give a depth of 40 feet from the navy yard to the sea.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I know. The point I wanted to have the gentleman tell me is this: If the expenditure is made as recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs——

Mr. SMALL. For the dry dock?

Mr. MADDEN. For the dry dock and the surrounding water, there will be a depth of 40 feet there, presumably for the purpose of building ships with 40-foot draft or repairing ships that have 40-foot draft. Now, the proposition of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is to supplement what the Naval Committee proposes to do by deepening the entrance to the dry dock from the sea, so that facilities will be afforded for the passage of ships from the sea to the dry dock and from the dry dock out to sea?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. MADDEN. So that there would not be any use in expending the money recommended by the Naval Committee unless the House also authorized this expenditure to supplement it. Is that correct?

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman is correct in that. Now, may I send up to the desk and have read a communication from the Secretary of War recommending this amendment to the bill as a war measure?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 4, 1918.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of April 1, 1918, and prior correspondence concerning the proposed 40-foot channel at Charleston, S. C., for which an item is included in the pending naval appropriation bill, I have the honor to state that I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy on this subject, calling attention to the fact that the proposed construction of a dry dock at the navy yard, Charleston, S. C., carrying a depth of water of 40 feet over the blocks, will require for its use the construction of a channel having a depth of 40 feet at mean low water and a width of 1,000 feet extending from deep water beyond the jetties to a point on the Cooper River opposite the present naval dry dock at the navy yard, and requesting that inasmuch as this proposed dredging is a matter coming under the jurisdiction of the War Department, an item for this work be recommended by this department for inclusion in the pending river and harbor bill.

The preliminary estimate made by the Navy Department for such a 40-foot channel, based upon recent costs of dredging, is $5,000,000. The item carried in the pending naval appropriation bill provides $1,000,000 for beginning this work. The Secretary of the Navy states, however, that the dry dock will require approximately 30 months for its construction, or, in other words, it should be completed by January 1, 1921, and suggests that the dredging operations be conducted so that the desired channel shall be completed not later than the estimated date for completion of the dock. The time available has not been sufficient to permit any revision of the above estimate of cost for this work, but this is not essential at this time as an initial appropriation will cover the prosecution of the work for the first year, and the necessary surveys can then be made with a view to submitting a revised estimate of cost at the next session of Congress. It is believed that an appropriation of $1,500,000 should be made now for this purpose contingent upon the authorization of the proposed dry dock.

In compliance with the request of the Secretary of the Navy, it is, therefore, recommended as a war measure that the item for Charleston Harbor and Channels, S. C., on page 5 of the pending river and harbor bill be amended to read as follows:

"Charleston Harbor and Channels, S. C.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $110,000; for improvement to provide a channel 40 feet deep at mean low water and 1,000 feet wide, extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard, $1,500,000: Provided, That this work shall not be undertaken until the proposed new dry dock at this navy yard, carrying a depth of 40 feet of water over the blocks, has been authorized; in all, $1,610,000."

Very respectfully,
BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Let me just make this statement, and then I will yield. This authorization by the proviso does not become effective unless Congress shall hereafter authorize the dry dock. It is obvious that if the dry dock is authorized, the channel ought to be provided, and this is the committee, and this is the place in which to authorize the deepening of the channel to correspond with the dry dock if it shall be authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Just half a minute. We have already provided 40 feet to the New York Navy Yard. We have provided 40 feet to the Norfolk Navy Yard. We are providing 35 feet to the League Island Navy Yard at Philadelphia, and now we are simply authorizing this 40-foot channel to the proposed dry dock at Charleston if it shall be authorized.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman coincide with the statement in this letter that this should be acted upon favorably as a war measure, and does he refer to the present war?

Mr. SMALL. It is a war measure in that it refers to war activities of the Government, to wit, the Navy Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, has the chairman of the committee finished with his argument?

Mr. SMALL. Yes. The gentleman wishes recognition in his own right?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. I desire to oppose the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

This amendment now before the House has a peculiarly strategic position. It is the initial expenditure for a $5,000,000 channel to the Charleston Navy Yard. During my short term in Congress the Charleston yard has repeatedly endeavored to get recognition as a deep-draft vessel location from Congress and from the Committee on Naval Affairs without success. Attempts have repeatedly been made to make a big battleship yard out of the Charleston yard. By "a big battleship yard" I mean a big ship-construction yard, which it is not; and when the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge says we have provided a 40-foot channel to the New York yard, and we have provided a 35-foot channel to the Philadelphia yard, and we have provided a 40-foot channel to the Norfolk yard, he is referring to big construction yards, yards capable of dismantling a battleship. The Charleston yard can not do that if it had a million feet of water.

This movement is just in line with one that was made a couple of years ago to extend and enlarge certain berthing piers down there, which were originally intended for destroyers, with a view to making them big enough and strong enough to berth a battleship.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask if it is the intention of the Naval Committee, through the Navy, to build up the Charleston yard to the extent that it can build these large battleships, like the Brooklyn and Philadelphia yards?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. It is in line with my own thought, and I was about to tell the House that no hearings have been held by the Committee on Naval Affairs on this tremendous $9,000,000 appropriation, $4,000,000 for the dock and $5,000,000 for this channel. No hearings were had before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. If a construction yard is really desired, I do not know it officially.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. As I understand it, the chairman stated that this would not be effective unless the building of a dock was carried into effect.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is true. That is why I referred to the particular strategic character of this particular amendment. It concerns two committees, and they play one against the other. They say when the Committee on Naval Affairs has recommended an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the dry dock surely we will not build a dock where there is no water. So this committee will run water up to the dock.

Mr. SEARS. As I understand it, in the naval bill this item would be subject to a point of order. In that case the argument could not be used that this House had passed it because we had provided that it would not be put into effect until that plan had been adopted.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is correct; and the dock itself is as subject to a point of order as the dredging project now before the House.

Mr. SEARS. If the point of order is raised, this would not be effective. I suppose the gentleman is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. Suppose that committee should adopt the dry-dock plan and then you could not get the channel. You would be in an awkward position.

Mr. BRITTEN. My dear, sir, both these propositions are carried in the naval bill to-day. A rule is sought making everything in the naval bill not subject to a point of order. That will cover the deepening of the channel as well as the building of the dock.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How many battleships are in the Charleston Navy Yard?

Mr. BRITTEN. None are there, and none will ever go there, unless this House provides water over which they can go. We have a three and one-half million dollar dock building in Philadelphia that will dock anything that will go through the Panama Canal, and we have an enormous dock being built at Norfolk that will carry anything that can enter the Panama Canal, and the State of Massachusetts is building a 1,200-foot dock at Boston that will carry anything that can enter the Panama Canal. These docks are in process of completion to-day on the Atlantic coast. And yet some gentlemen will have the nerve to get on the floor of the House and say that this dock, at an initial expenditure of $9,000,000, taking three years to construct, is a war measure, and should be appropriated for now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I have five minutes more time, please?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is not a war measure. If it were a war measure there would be no question about it from my viewpoint. I will be glad to join in authorizing the expenditure of hundreds of billions of dollars if necessary to conduct this war, but when gentlemen get on this floor and propose to build a dock where there is no water, and then to spend $5,000,000 to get water up to it, it is thoroughly absurd. It is just another movement to make a big battleship yard out of the Charleston yard, a movement which has been attempted time and again, and has always failed in this House on a record vote. Now, supposing we get this dry dock, and supposing we get a thousand-foot channel 40 feet deep to the dock, and then we send a battleship up there to have one of its turrets removed or one of its big guns removed, is there anything in the Charleston yard to-day that can move it? They have not the mechanical equipment there, they have not the buildings to handle big repairs. Then will come another $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 for necessary mechanical and yard improvements. This $9,000,000 is just the initial expenditure of what may be $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 or $30,000,000.

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. SWITZER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that yesterday the Committee of the Whole, against the protest of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, put into this bill the proposition to deepen Hell Gate to 40 feet as a war measure, when it will take four or five years to complete it.

Mr. BRITTEN. And I will say to the gentleman that the deepening of Hell Gate is one of the most important war propositions possible. Last year our committee went through Hell Gate on the Mayflower, and we were swept back three times, and if we had not had a very skillful and daring commander in young Commander Berry, who is now commanding the destroyer Manly on the other side, we would have been dashed against the rocks in Hell Gate. That is a very dangerous place and the obstructions there should be removed. But this proposition which we are now considering is no war measure. It is a farce. This $9,000,000 is merely a starter to an enormous expenditure to come in the future. If a battleship were to dock there to-day, they could not remove one of the big guns. They have no traveling cranes or heavy cranes capable of lifting a turret or the guns of a great battleship; they have not the mechanical equipment for the repair of great pieces of armor and armament on a battleship. The yard is absolutely useless to-day, even if they had the water, for the purpose of making extensive repairs on a great battleship.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Suppose $5,000,000 were spent in constructing the channel; would the channel stay 40 feet deep?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am glad to have the gentleman from Ohio refresh my memory about something that I would probably have forgotten. About three or four years ago the electric suction dredge that is always employed around Charleston got out of order and it was laid up for repairs for about six months. Will you gentlemen be surprised when I tell you that in front of the dock that is now there they did not have 9 feet of water at the end of that time, because of the silt that had settled in the meantime? Now, supposing we agreed——

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman just made the statement that the suction dredge got out of order.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. As a matter of fact, was it not the bulkhead of the dock that got out of order and had to be taken to Norfolk to be repaired, and they did not dredge in front of the dock during the absence of that bulkhead for six months? Those are the facts in the case.

Mr. BRITTEN. I will give the gentleman the facts. The bulkhead does not do any dredging.

Mr. WHALEY. Of course not; but the dredge——

Mr. BRITTEN. The dredge itself was out of order, and the silt settled and they did not have 9 feet of water in front of the dock.

Mr. WHALEY. The bulkhead of the dock was taken away for repairs because it was leaking, and there was no use to dredge in front of the dock, when they could not use the dock because there was no bulkhead there. The dock was out of use for six months while the bulkhead was being repaired, and no dredging was done in front of the dock during that time. But the dredge has never been out of order.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is not the bulkhead the front of the dock?

Mr. WHALEY. Why, of course it is, and you remove the bulkhead in order to get into the dock, and you close the bulkhead when you want to keep the water out of the dock.

Mr. BRITTEN. Exactly so. When the bulkhead was taken away the dock was filled with water, was it not?

Mr. WHALEY. I am claiming that the dredge was never out of order.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am telling you that in front of the bulkhead they did not have 9 feet of water.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is true that the river will silt up unless it is constantly dredged. If you are going to have a thousand-foot channel with a depth of 40 feet of water, you have got to have at least one dredge there all the time working 24 hours a day. I question whether one dredge can do it. I am not engineer enough to determine that. But this is just the initial expenditure of something that may be enormous, and the House ought to consider it very carefully. This project has been brought forward time and time again, and has always been defeated on the floor of the House. It is not a war measure, because the report of the Secretary of War says it will take 30 months, I believe, to do the dredging. It will take 30 months or three years to build the dock. After we have the dock built, it can not accommodate a battleship so far as repairs are concerned, because they have not sufficient mechanical equipment in the yard.

My colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asked a question a while ago concerning the length of this channel. The channel provided in the amendment is from the sea to the navy yard, up the Cooper River. It is not a commercial proposition in any sense of the word. It is a 1,000-foot channel from the sea to the navy yard, and the depth provided is 40 feet. It is pork of the purest kind. This is a time when Congress is willing to give millions of dollars for any war expenditure, without even inquiring into its value, but it should not waste a penny on pork. We are ready to appropriate everything that is asked. Every Member in the House and Senate is ready to appropriate for any reasonable war measure. Be fair with yourself, gentlemen, and understand that this is pork, pure and simple. Get your feet into this pork barrel. Now is the time to develop the Charleston yard and make it a great battleship yard. Let us get the dock and real water first, and then we will come in after millions for mechanical equipment; because naturally we must have the equipment after we have the dock and the water. Oh, the shame, at a time like this, when we are taxing every ounce of our energy at home, to foist upon a confiding public a quantity of pork such as would never be countenanced in peace time, when the war scare and fake patriotism could not be used to camouflage our votes.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman made the statement a moment ago that the Cooper River was greatly subject to siltage. Is that true?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman let me read from the Helm report?

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman from South Carolina can do that in his own time.

Mr. LEVER. But the gentleman has made a misstatement.

Mr. BRITTEN. I shall not object to the gentleman reading from the Helm report.

Mr. LEVER. This is from the Helm report of January 15, 1918:

> In regard to the dredging for maintenance of approaches to the water front at this yard there seems to be an erroneous impression that much silt is deposited at all points. Matter is only appreciably deposited at still points away from the strength of the current, and such matter is a slimy mud, easily removed by a suction dredge.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is very true; the report is entirely correct. There is a lot of silt there and it is easily removed. The report says so; but I have never heard anything about the character of the soil at a depth of 40 feet. They may find rock.

Mr. LEVER. Let me read something further from the report on that point:

> A small electric suction dredge, costing about $12,000 for running and upkeep per year, can easily keep this portion of the yard free and do other dredging work as required.

Mr. BRITTEN. What portion of the yard is that?

Mr. LEVER. In front of the dock.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; in front of the dock, 100 feet wide.

Mr. LEVER. And the balance of the channel.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, the gentleman does not mean the balance of the channel, does he?

Mr. LEVER. In front of the dock.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; a little $12,000 barge will take the silt away from a 100-feet-wide place, but what about the balance of the channel, 7 miles long? I say it will cost more than $150,000 to dredge the channel if we are to maintain a 40-foot depth 1,000 feet wide.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. Did the gentleman ever read the Engineer's report on the subject?

Mr. BRITTEN. Which report? They have made dozens.

Mr. WHALEY. I mean the recent report.

Mr. BRITTEN. Which one?

Mr. WHALEY. The Helm report. I have it here; and it says that for the entire business, from the navy yard to the sea, 14 miles, $160,000 will keep it open, one-half of what it costs at Philadelphia or New York.

Mr. BRITTEN. Well, I guessed $150,000.

Mr. WHALEY. The gentleman said in front of the dock.

Mr. BRITTEN. No; I said to keep the desired channel open.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be well to get a clear, concise, and consecutive statement of the situation. It is true that we are building at Philadelphia a 1,000-foot dock, with 40 feet over the blocks. We are building one at Norfolk, and the State of Massachusetts is building one at Boston in the State of Massachusetts. South of Norfolk, for something like 2,500 or 3,000 miles of coast line, we have no naval accommodations adequate and sufficient. We have a plant at Charleston susceptible of splendid development. They have there 30 feet of water, and will have a channel out to the open sea of 30 feet by September.

They speak about having no water; 30 feet is as much water as we had at many places several years ago. It would cost less to do the dredging at Charleston than it will to maintain the dredging at New York or Philadelphia, so that these matters offset themselves.

Now, what is the situation? We have 2,500 miles of seacoast below Norfolk without a large dock. We have authorized six battle cruisers. They are 850 feet in length and they draw at mean low draft 31 feet. If they are disabled, they might draw as much as 45 feet. At Charleston, if we have a 40-foot channel, there is 5 feet of tide, and that would give 45 feet in a high tide that could be available for the use of the dock.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. These battle cruisers of which the gentleman speaks, are they under process of construction?

Mr. PADGETT. Not just now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. When is it expected that they will be completed?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know; but probably three or four years.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Was not the original estimate that it would take four years to construct them?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And they have not yet begun them?

Mr. PADGETT. Not yet; but we have a number of battleships in addition to the battle cruisers. We authorized battleships of more than 40,000 tons displacement carrying twelve 16-inch guns. We are building others of 32,000 tons displacement, with 14-inch guns. We need docks for taking the battleships that are under construction and some of which are in existence. We have at Charleston a dock that is capable of taking ships of the size and class of the Utah, and that is about 22,000 tons displacement, but we have accommodations for nothing larger than that. We have numbers of ships above 22,000 tons displacement. Now, all the strategists say that if we ever have a naval engagement on our side of the water, all the indications point to the fact that it will be in the south or in the Caribbean. We have nothing south of Hatteras. Hatteras is known as the graveyard of the Atlantic so far as the danger of sinking ships is concerned.

The Secretary of the Navy earnestly urged and recommended the construction of a large dock at Charleston. I took the position with the committee, and I want to be entirely frank here, that we ought to have a dock of this character south of Hatteras, and all of the authorities agree that on the coast main line of the United States Charleston is not only the best place but it is about the only place that is available. That is about 700 miles south of Norfolk. Seven hundred miles might be very important in saving a disabled ship. When we are building battleships that are costing $28,000,000 apiece, as we are, we can not in good business judgment jeopardize them by failing to provide safety for them in the neighborhood that all of the military strategists point out is the field of battle. Those battleships draw at mean load about 30 feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. These battleships, as well as the battle cruisers, draw at mean draft more than 30 feet. It is true that you have a tide of about 5 feet rise where they could go into the yard, but that tide lasts only for a few hours; and if your ship comes in on a 35-foot high tide, which on low tide is down to 30 feet, and the ship draws 31 feet, necessarily the ship then at mean draft would go down a foot into the mud and rest upon the bottom, which would be very hazardous for these splendid ships. No one could tolerate that. So that I said in the committee, and I say here, that we need and should have a dock south of Hatteras, and there should be one at Charleston; but unless we can get the water to make that dock usable, I would not stand for the dock. I would not advocate or ask the construction of a dock 40 feet over the block, or 42 or 43 feet over the sill, to accommodate ships that can pass through the Panama Canal, because there will be commercial uses as well as naval uses also, if we did not have the water. We need the dock, and we should have the water for it. If we can get the water as is provided here, I stand for the dock; but if the House refuses the water, it would be silly to provide a dock with 40 feet over the blocks or 42 feet over the sills. Therefore the Naval Committee placed in the bill the coupled proposition of a dock and the water.

The question of committee jurisdiction arose. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction over the question of the dredging of the channels in the harbors and in the river outside of the basin at the navy yards, but it was so important that we should have the water if we were to have the dock that I was unwilling to report a proposition for a dock unless we had the assurance that we would get the water. Therefore we coupled the two in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Let me finish this sentence and I shall. The committee reported out the proposition for the dock and for a 40-foot channel a thousand feet wide. As I stated, these cruisers are 850 feet long, and if we are going to have a channel, we ought to have one with a margin for turning around. The question of committee jurisdiction arose, and in speaking with Mr. SMALL I said to him that the Naval Committee did not wish to usurp or to infringe upon the rights of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and if they would report this measure and the House adopted it, it would be stricken out of the naval bill and we would ask only for the dock. He has done that. The Secretary of War has recommended it; the Secretary of the Navy has urged it. We should have the dock. We need it. It is a necessity. We ought not to spend $4,000,000 for it, however, unless we can get the water to make it usable. That is the plain business proposition, and this is the proposition for the water. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee and I will agree that we have been at this business a good while. I know what is going to be done, and therefore there is no use of opposing it. I only want to say to my chairman that the opposition I have to this I purpose using upon the stump for all time to come, but not here, because the die is cast and this is to be built; but the gentleman and I will agree that this is not a war proposition.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not a war proposition in the sense that it can be constructed within the time within which I hope the war will end. I hope the war will end before three years. I think it will take three years to build the dock and do the dredging. However, independent of the war, as a sensible naval proposition we should have the dock, whether we are in the war or not. The idea of having from 2,500 to 3,000 miles of coast line without a dock, without an opportunity to bring in and repair or care for our ships when the ships, as I said, many of them cost us $28,000,000, shows no business judgment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is always reasonable and speaks out plainly, and therefore I want to ask him a question or two. This is not the best place, however, to be selected for a large appropriation of money for naval purposes, is it?

Mr. PADGETT. To be entirely frank with the gentleman, I think that we need and should have two navy yards and large docks south of Hatteras, one on the coast line and one in the West Indies. I think the finest place in the world is in Samana Bay on the north of the east end of the island of Haiti. I have never seen or known of such a place as nature built there for a naval station; but we do not own it at present. I cherish the hope that we will in the future; but that would be 1,500 to 2,000 miles from Charleston.

Mr. BUTLER. Again I want to say that I am not going to oppose this, but I want to get some facts for the RECORD so that we will have them. What is the estimate of the cost of this great dock?

Mr. PADGETT. Four million dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the chairman agree with me that that will not build it?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know that. I think it will. The one at Norfolk is being built within the appropriation of three and a half million dollars, and the one at Philadelphia is being built within that limit of cost. This is adding $500,000 additional.

Mr. BUTLER. These contracts were made some time ago, were they not?

Mr. PADGETT. My recollection is about 18 months ago.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, what is the estimated cost of the construction of this channel?

Mr. PADGETT. The dredging they are doing there now and have been doing under the appropriations heretofore made was 13 cents per cubic yard——

Mr. BUTLER. Amounting to about $5,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. It is estimated at a cost of 20 cents a yard. The present contract cost is 13 cents, and therefore 26,000,000 cubic yards in round numbers would amount to about $5,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, can I ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs this question? How much did Admiral Parks recommend each year to keep this channel clean?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the report—the Helm Board report—varied from somewhere between $160,000 and $180,000 out to deep water beyond the jetties.

Mr. BUTLER. We agree on this, and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it, he reported that it would take $185,000 a year to keep the channels clean when made.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not recall, but that is in substance the Helm Board report.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been our observation always that they increase these estimates by 15 to 25 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. As to the outer channel I do not know. The dredging at Charleston has been practically in front of the present large dock. As the gentleman is aware, the present dock is——

Mr. BUTLER. I never was there.

Mr. PADGETT (continuing). Set inland and the current of the stream runs out in front of the dock, and there is an eddy in front of the dock, and the deposit of the silt is in that eddy in front. This dock is proposed to be put out on the line of the current so as to avoid that deposit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask that I may have five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I have taken up a good deal of the gentleman's time with interruptions, and I ask that he may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, then, we are agreed it is not going to be a war measure, because we know this improvement can not be made in three years. Now, will the chairman agree——

Mr. PADGETT. I think it will take at least three years.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the chairman agree with me as to the wisdom of postponing this permanent construction there at this time because of the scarcity of labor in the country?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, of course, the labor question is an important question, but the consideration of having a dock south of Hatteras on our south coast is so great I do not want to postpone the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I know what is going to happen—I do not ask the chairman for any explanation whatever, but I know what is going to happen. I have been here long enough to know. Now, will the gentleman yield for another question? Does the gentleman agree with the President's 14 conditions which he submitted to the world, that we should at this time make an appropriation that will result finally in an appropriation of $25,000,000 for a great improvement after this war is over? Will the gentleman explain that to the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. I will be very frank with the gentleman; I do not think the millennium is going to come at the conclusion of this war.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think when this country has built up a magnificent Navy and has it well equipped and efficient that we are going to scrap it.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand we may not. I think the chairman and I will have little to do with it, but the President will have much to do with it. Will the gentleman advise us to look so far in the future as to begin at this time a dock which will result in appropriations of millions of dollars? Is that a good thing to do?

Mr. PADGETT. I think we ought to build this dock. I think it is necessary to have it, as I stated, independent of the war; that, whatever we may have after the war, we ought to have this dock south of Cape Hatteras.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Was the gentleman—I think he was—a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs when the first improvement was made at the Charleston Harbor for the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I was not, sir. That was several years before I came to Congress.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then the gentleman can not answer the question I was about to ask.

Mr. PADGETT. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is intended by the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Navy Department to build a great navy yard at this point?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. I think they ought to have a good yard there.

Mr. FOSTER. Where they will build battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. Not a construction yard.

Mr. FOSTER. But a repair yard?

Mr. PADGETT. A repair yard; a docking yard.

Mr. FOSTER. This dry dock will take three or four years to finish, I understand?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary, in a letter to me, which I have here, stated that he thought it could be constructed in 30 months. I think it will take three years.

Mr. FOSTER. Unless the war extends over a period of several years this would not be of any benefit during the present war, would it?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. If we are to take three years in building, of course it would not be usable under that time; but I stated a while ago that, independent of the fact that we are at war, that we should have a dock south of Hatteras, and the gentleman knows the hazardous risk of going around Hatteras. It is known in ocean parlance as the "graveyard of the Atlantic coast," and to attempt to bring our ships of great cost and value around there and over a distance of 2,500 or 3,000 miles without a dock—there is no good business proposition in that.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman know what the estimated cost for this construction would be?

Mr. PADGETT. The dredging?

Mr. FOSTER. I mean to put this in proper shape for the repair of naval vessels, including the dry dock and dredging, and all.

Mr. PADGETT. The dry dock is estimated to cost $4,000,000. That is $500,000 above similar docks at Norfolk and Philadelphia. The dredging is estimated at 20 cents a cubic yard instead of 13 cents, at the present contract, and it is estimated there are 26,000,000 cubic yards, which would cost $5,000,000. That would be $9,000,000 estimated cost. Now, then, they would have to have a large crane there to lift the big guns off and on. I should say that outside of that, $2,500,000 or $3,000,0000 would fit it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask for one additional minute.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the committee have five additional minutes if he desires to use it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may have five additional minutes if he desires to use that much time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the gentleman this question. I know he has been on the Committee on Naval Affairs for many years and is well informed on naval affairs, and I would like to ask if in his judgment we ought to begin now, with the high cost of everything and with the scarcity of labor, this construction, and if it is absolutely necessary for the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. It is a matter of so much importance that I do not like to postpone it. Independent of the war, we need something south. I think we ought to have one in the West Indies as well as one on the coast line south of Hatteras.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the gentleman's judgment that this is the best place for it?

Mr. PADGETT. It is the best place on the mainland. All the authorities agree upon that. But in the West Indies, in my judgment——

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman that the reason I have asked these questions is because I have been here several years, and I know that Congress has refused to do much with this Charleston Navy Yard.

Mr. PADGETT. There has been a great deal done there. Now, that reminds me that only recently the Secretary of War has set apart $16,000,000 under Gen. Goethals for building, just above the navy yard, and would use this channel—$16,000,000 for the construction of storage and shipbuilding facilities on account of this war.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that to be permanent, or just during this war?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, I can not say. A great deal of it will be permanent after the war is over. Of course, some would go away.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they erecting permanent buildings there now?

Mr. PADGETT. I have no information on that; I can not say. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WHALEY] know the nature of the buildings?

Mr. WHALEY. They are to be of permanent construction. The testimony before the Appropriations Committee was that these storage houses there were to be permanent, and not to be temporary structures.

Mr. PADGETT. I was not informed on that particular phase of it.

Mr. WHALEY. They are just above the navy yard—a half mile. They are reached by the same river. Ships would have to go by the navy yard to get there.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman before he takes his seat. Having in mind what the gentleman has so frankly stated to the House, if he knows, I would like to have him inform the House what the Acting Secretary of War had in mind when in the letter to the gentleman he used this language:

> It is therefore recommended——

Mr. PADGETT. That letter is to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL]. It is not to me.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Very well, to Mr. SMALL, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

> It is therefore recommended as a war measure that the item for Charleston Harbor and Channel * * * be inserted in the pending bill.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of War regards it as a war measure, and the Secretary of the Navy also so regards it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And in the same letter they state that it will not be completed in less than three years.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy said two and one-half years. I am frank to say that I think it would take three years to construct them. But whether it takes two years, or two years and a half, or three years; whether we have war or do not have war, it would be for the safety of this country. We have had enough experience, I think, in overlooking some things. I think we ought, when we see this before us, to consider it a duty and an obligation and prepare for it, independent of the continuance of the present war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am inclined to support this proposition, and I want to ask the gentleman this: Whereas several ports along the Atlantic coast, including Philadelphia and Baltimore, have 35-foot channels, and Boston has that and more, would it be unreasonable to start Charleston on a 35-foot basis?

Mr. PADGETT. I always want to be frank with the House. A 40-foot channel is needed. If you are going to have a 40-foot basin and 40 feet over the blocks in the docks, and if your ships that are liable to go in draw 45 feet if they are disabled, I think, we may just as well face the matter frankly and honestly and proceed with what we know will ultimately be required. It does not take any more money at the present time. The appropriation is only $1,500,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman's statement about having a dry dock south of Norfolk, or south of Hatteras. I think the time has come when we should establish such a dock along the south Atlantic coast. But this proposition comes before the House in an unusual way. It is provided that we shall have a dry dock if we get the water.

Mr. PADGETT. No. The Naval Committee reported the two proposals coupled together, an appropriation for both. But this other is conditioned upon the dock. If you do not get the dock, there is no use in making this appropriation; if you do not get this, there is no use in giving the other. But we need both. I hope the House will approve this, and then when we reach the other, in the naval bill, give us the dry dock.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, is it possible to get unanimous consent to fix a time for closing debate on this paragraph and the amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I want to be heard a few minutes.

Mr. FREAR. I desire to have about seven minutes. I want to read from the reports. This talk is not related to the official reports.

Mr. SMALL. Could we agree by unanimous consent to close the debate in 45 minutes?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, the time so far consumed has been consumed almost entirely in favor of the proposition, except that occupied by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. If the time is evenly divided there is no way of knowing how these nine men are to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FREAR. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. SMALL. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Chairman, that we close debate in one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in one hour.

Mr. FREAR. Reserving the right to object, will the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have the right to discuss it in this time?

Mr. SMALL. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Wisconsin, a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, will have some time.

Mr. FREAR. I ask that because of the fact that we have not yet taken part in this debate.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that this item of dredging will go through. I am a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I am one of those who have opposed advancement or increase for the Charleston Navy Yard, believing that it was not the place for a large dry dock and extensive operations. Last summer I visited Charleston, and was very much impressed with the activities of that yard; but, like the chairman of the committee, I was still opposed to a large dock there when we had not a sufficient depth of water.

I realize the fact that south of Hatteras there are no dry docks, and there should be some. As the chairman has stated, we should have one in the Caribbean Sea. We have not enough dry docks in the United States to-day, even north of Hatteras.

Now, the only place on the main seacoast for this proposed dock is at the Charleston Navy Yard. We have no activities anywhere else.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What are those activities, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. BROWNING. They are engaged there in almost all naval activities, including the building of vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. They are?

Mr. BROWNING. They were building chasers while I was there, though this is not a building yard. It is, as the chairman has said, a repair yard. They have a dock there to-day that will dock any ship of the Utah class, and all that is needed is depth of water.

Now, the Secretary of the Navy has recommended very strongly that this new dock be built. I made the motion in the committee that it be built, provided we can get 40 feet of water. There is, of course, no necessity for a dock unless we can have the water, and if we do get the water the dock should be built right there.

Now, I feel that it is essential that we should build this dock at Charleston, because there is not one nearer than Norfolk, about 700 miles away; and in that long coast line there should be a dock to repair vessels of the Navy.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman agree with me that the mechanical equipment at Charleston is entirely inadequate for extensive repairs on battleships now?

Mr. BROWNING. Probably it is; but with an expenditure for a crane to remove the big guns I think good work can be done at Charleston.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is there any mechanical equipment at Charleston with a crane that would move a big gun to repair or reline that big gun?

Mr. BROWNING. There is not; and I do not know of any other yard where there is.

Mr. FOSTER. That yard has not been equipped for this work?

Mr. BROWNING. It has not been. I hope it will be. It should be.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman advocates this item, and he is well informed. Has the gentleman in mind what this means—how much of an appropriation it will be necessary to make in Charleston to repair and construct ships?

Mr. BROWNING. I do not know what it will cost, but in my opinion an expenditure of $2,500,000 or $3,000,000 will equip that navy yard to repair ships.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is the gentleman basing his report on an estimate of a Navy official?

Mr. BROWNING. We have no estimate from a naval official on that matter.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is an estimate of his own, then?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes; it is an estimate of my own. If the gentleman has a better estimate, I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes in which to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FREAR. Reserving the right to object, the members of the committee have not had a chance to speak. We are the ones who are making the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FREAR. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, if this were a motion to make a reasonable appropriation reasonably to develop commercial facilities at Charleston Harbor, I would vote for it. If this were a proposition to make more efficient this Government in the prosecution of this war, I, like other Members here, would vote for it.

But this is neither. This is a proposition to appropriate an abnormal sum of money, although it is but the beginning of larger appropriations yet to come, artificially, first, to build a naval station, and, second, a river leading up to it. It is an artificial proposition first and last. We have first got to build a river, and then they say if we build the river they will build a dock and naval works at the end of it. Why would they not? If you will build a river to Peoria, Ill., I have not the slightest doubt that they would be glad to have you construct a navy yard, dry dock, and so forth, there.

A few years ago I had the privilege of visiting Charleston Harbor and looking over this proposition. It did not require the eye of an expert. It required just the eye of an ordinary common-sense individual, who could see and interpret a little bit that which he saw, to know that the placing of the plant there, in the first place, was not because of any naval consideration at all. I asked Navy officials why that plant had been placed there, and they all said they did not know, that they thought I ought to know more than they about it, because they understood the reason for is was in Congress and not outside.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; I can not yield. If I can get some more time I will yield.

Mr. BROWNING. They did not give me any more time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. At the time I was there I went in on a boat of 10,000 tons, and we were hung up all night long 4 miles from the town waiting for a tide that could take us in. At that time the only use to which the dock which is there now could be put was for torpedo boats; and I did find one or two naval officers who said it was their opinion that this was valuable as a torpedo-boat station, but valueless for any other purpose. Now, you can not convince me that there is any practical common sense in spending an enormous sum of money to build a river, at the end of which you are going to build a naval station; and the fact that there is not a naval station for 2,500 miles of coast does not convince me of the propriety of this. This is but 600 or 700 miles from Norfolk. I have been an enthusiastic supporter of every proposition to develop the Norfolk yard. That should be the great naval base on the Atlantic coast, and any money that is asked for that place should receive the hearty approval of Members of Congress. But this is not that at all. This is but a few miles geographically south, however the coast may curve. When you reach Charleston, S. C., you have still got your 2,000 miles and more of coast where there is no navy yard. If you will take a look at the map you can see at a glance that this navy yard should be located, not at Charleston at all, having in mind that which the chairman of the Naval Committee has just stated and that which is common to the intelligence of most of those who have thought at all on naval subjects, but that the place for the naval station is either on the Gulf coast or in the West Indies, and probably in the West Indies. Why did we buy St. Thomas a year ago, giving $25,000,000 for it? Why have we been told repeatedly that that is the place for a naval station, in the West Indies? It is true, as the gentleman said, that any naval engagement will probably be in the vicinity of the West Indies somewhere, in a key position relative to the United States and the Panama Canal. What good will it be, then, to have a sinking ship within a thousand miles of Charleston?

It would be just as well to have it within 1,500 miles of Norfolk. The difference does not amount to anything. Build your naval station, if you must, in the West Indies; and I think you ought. There are two places now where the United States needs a great naval base. One is in the West Indies and the other is at Guam, and every naval official will tell you so. The money you are going to spend on this job will artificially create something that will be of advantage to Charleston, S. C., but it will be of no material advantage to the Nation, and that amount of money would build the naval base at Guam that the United States has been needing so much for these many, many years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. May I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; my friends, this is one of those propositions that will never, never down. It has been kicking at the gates of this Chamber for years. The inception of the proposition was some years ago, when a gentleman influential in the Government desired an expenditure of public funds there at his home place. We have been scandalized at times because public moneys have been used to build useless Army posts, useless naval stations, and it has been the general consensus of opinion that the most useless expenditure we have ever made, for the most useless purpose, was that at Charleston, S. C. They see that now, so they come back and ask that, in addition to the $10,000,000 heretofore spent, you spend $30,000,000 more to build a river and build a naval station, and when they get that, then they say they will have something serviceable to the country. You never can convince me that the Navy is going to live or die dependent upon the expenditure of $30,000,000 to build a river into the interior and then a dry dock at its end. Pensacola, Mobile, New Orleans, and other places in the South have ample facilities infinitely better than Charleston, where a much smaller expenditure than this would furnish these facilities. It is Charleston, S. C., that wants this; and if the Nation wants it, I have not heard the Nation's voice.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, if this were a war measure, and if it were needed by the Government for the prosecution of this war, I would be the last man in the House to raise my voice against it. I have supported every war measure. But this proposition, as the gentleman who has just preceded me has stated, is known throughout the length and breadth of the country for the scandal that occurred when it was originally proposed. Now, Mr. Chairman, it comes here in a peculiar way. Our committee were hurriedly called together, long after the introduction of this bill, and told in a few minutes that we were to put this measure into the bill. We have never had a hearing. We have not the first understanding, except from what these gentlemen have stated on the floor, of the necessity or even desirability of this project, but we are asked to put $5,000,000 in the Charleston Harbor without any hearing and without any notice. I ask any member of the committee to refute that statement. I understand there has been no hearing in the Naval Committee. All we have to rely upon is the reports of the engineers, and those have been offered largely for commercial reasons. But let us see what the engineers say concerning the naval station at Charleston. I have here before me the report of the engineers, Document No. 947 of the Sixty-first Congress, second session, and on page 8 the engineer says, as follows:

The largest battleships can now cross the Charleston bar by entering at high water—

Remember, they had only 26 feet of water then—the channel being 600 feet wide and 26 feet deep at mean low water. The mean rise of tide is 5.2 feet. The entrance channels are straight and easily navigated.

When this was written, with the 26-foot channel, the engineer said that it was sufficient for all naval uses for the largest battleships. Now, you propose to make it 14 feet deeper, to a proposed depth of 40 feet. This is all we have got to enlighten us on the subject except the verbal statement presented to us by various gentlemen, and I do not question the gentlemen, but I know the importance and necessity sometimes at different localities of getting these projects. I say as a war measure it can not be defended, and it can not be defended, according to the statement of the Army engineers which I have read, nor can it be of value or constructed for several years to come. It will be of no use in this war.

I read from Document No. 19, Sixty-third Congress, second session. The report says:

The report referred to in this document recommended an improvement of Cooper River to a depth of 30 feet, at an estimated cost of $175,000, in the interest of the Navy, there being no commercial need at that time for the improvement. The project has not been adopted.

There has been no objection to the 30-foot project, and the Engineer's report shows that there are no terminals unless they have been recently constructed. The commerce is comparatively small, and all terminals are privately owned, according to the report.

Now, what we want to know are the facts. We never have had a chance to ascertain what the facts are regarding the new $5,000,000 project, and yet we are asked to put in a waterway costing $5,000,000, and possibly $20,000,000 for aught we know. We have no idea where the limit will be with the dry-dock proposition. For that reason I say it can not be justified. If you start now, you have opened the door for wasteful appropriations that may be made at all times. All you have to do is to say that this or that committee demands jurisdiction, and we will adopt the project whether they have an intelligent understanding of the proposition or not. The Secretary of War recommended every project needed for the prosecution of the war before he left for France and after the bill was reported. A subordinate officer now urges a plan without any hearings, and in the face of the Engineer's report that the present channel will float the largest naval vessels.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BURNETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9901) to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3803) authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments to bills of the following titles:

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases; and

S. 2917. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes."

RIVERS AND HARBORS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, in view of the lengthy discussion of this proposition, I feel it my duty to explain the attitude of the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and my own attitude as to this proposed amendment. This is a naval proposition. It is a war necessity, and not a commercial proposition. Year after year we have turned the further deepening of the channel down as a commercial proposition, but as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee I do not feel that it is incumbent upon me to demand hearings, to have the facts brought before my committee, in order to vote for a project providing adequate water after we are informed that the Naval Committee is going to have constructed a dry dock as a war necessity. That is a matter wholly within the jurisdiction of the Naval Committee. When the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War say to me as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee that such a thing is a war necessity or a naval necessity or a military necessity, I do not feel that I, as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, should go any further in the investigation of that proposition.

I do not believe that it is within the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to investigate as to whether or not there is need of a dry dock at Charleston, S. C., after the Naval Committee or Navy Department determines the necessity. Whenever the War Department determines, or whenever the Navy Department determines, to erect a dock and asks that a depth of water be provided, we will not run counter to those two great departments in that work by refusing to provide them the water to the dock. And recollect, gentlemen, that the appropriation is conditioned solely on the construction of the $4,000,000 dry dock. If the Navy Department does not do what it says it is going to do there will not be a single dollar of the appropriation expended. But if the Navy Department does construct the dry dock no member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee—of course the House committee has a right to do as it pleases—no member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee should undertake to in any way obstruct or delay the Naval or Military Departments. We feel that this is a matter entirely outside of our province. What I want the members of the committee to understand at this time is that if we vote to refuse the proposed depth of channel to the dry dock you are voting against something that the Naval Committee proposes, and does not affect the Rivers and Harbors Committee at all. It is immaterial to us except we feel that it is our patriotic duty when the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War says a thing is necessary as a war measure, that they are going to construct a dry dock to accommodate war vessels at Charleston, S. C., it is our duty as patriotic members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee to recommend the appropriation necessary to make the dock useful.

That is the way I feel about the matter. Now, as far as the length of time is concerned, the House went on record yesterday in a matter that it will take five years to complete, the deepening of the channel at Hell Gate as a war measure, and if this can be completed in three years I do not see why the time should be used as an argument against the proposition.

It was pointed out by the chairman of the Naval Committee, and by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING], who is on the Naval Committee, that this is certainly a strategic proposition; that if there is ever any great naval battle in the South Atlantic, it will be in this region, and there ought to be a large dry dock constructed at Charleston, S. C., to take care of injured or damaged vessels. But recollect that we do not claim that it is a commercial necessity. We have only based our recommendation on the proposition that the Naval Department is going to construct a dry dock.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not advocating this amendment from local considerations alone. So far as the amendment is concerned, it comes from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The chairman has explained to you the reason why the committee has offered this amendment to the bill. It was at the solicitation of the Secretary of War, who was requested by the Secretary of the Navy, as a naval necessity. If any amendment has ever come before this House free from local influence, it is this amendment. If any amendment has ever come before this House saturated with war necessities, it is this amendment. I do not care to speak to this amendment from the war requirement standpoint, but I do want to eradicate from your minds misapprehensions and misstatements which may have found lodgment there in respect to the Charleston Navy Yard. This House has been harangued each year with misstatement and misinformation in reference to the navy yard at Charleston, and I propose for five minutes to tell you the history of that yard.

In 1901, under an act of Congress, a commission was appointed by Secretary John D. Long, a Republican Secretary of the Navy in President McKinley's Cabinet, to seek the most available site on the south Atlantic coast for a navy yard, and that commission selected Charleston. The commission was headed by Admiral Rogers. The commission selected Charleston because it was strategically the place on the south Atlantic coast to put a navy yard. Year after year attacks have been made upon that yard on the ground that it is a political yard. The Members of this House have never seemed to realize the fact that it was put there by a naval commission composed of naval officers; that it was placed there because it was the most available and desirable place to have a yard.

Two years ago, in order to wipe out any misunderstandings, to take away any feeling that this yard was a political yard, this House, under an act of Congress, appointed another commission, and that commission went down on the south Atlantic and Gulf coasts and examined every harbor, and it made its report to this Congress. This was the Helm Commission, a commission being composed of naval officers. This commission reported as follows:

> After carefully weighing all the advantages and disadvantages, including costs, of the various sites between Hatteras and Key West, Fla., the commission is of the opinion that on this coast line Charleston Harbor most nearly meets the physical requirements of the Navy Department for a first-class navy yard.

The Members of the House ought to bear in mind that we have 2,500 miles of Atlantic seaboard, 1,200 miles from the Canadian line to Cape Hatteras. That composes the north Atlantic coast. In those 1,200 miles there are five big navy yards, there are five harbors with 40 feet of water—Portsmouth, N. H., Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Norfolk. There is a navy yard with deep water for almost every 250 miles. After you pass Cape Hatteras there are 1,000 miles of seacoast to the end of Florida, Jupiter Inlet. In that whole coast of 1,000 miles there is only one navy yard, and that is the Charleston yard. Charleston is 415 miles from Norfolk and 488 miles from Key West, Fla., almost exactly in the middle of all that stretch of coast. There is not a single naval officer who has ever appeared before any of the committees of the House, or who has ever talked to me, who has not said that the next fight we will have on the ocean by any country attacking this country will be in the Caribbean Sea.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHALEY. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. I would be very glad indeed if the gentleman could take the time to explain why he thinks the next naval engagement will be in the Caribbean Sea? I ask the question for this reason: Yesterday when we were discussing the proposition of deepening New York Harbor, a gentleman for whom I have the highest regard made the statement that all naval officers agree that if there ever was a great naval battle fought in this country it would be at New York, in Long Island Sound. The gentleman and the chairman of the Naval Committee are somewhat at variance. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs says all naval authorities agree that it will occur in the Caribbean Sea.

Mr. WHALEY. I am quoting to you the naval officers' opinion. I will give you an admiral's opinion.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to know why it is that they have their fighting points so far apart?

Mr. BRITTEN. Is it not probable that the next great naval battle will be fought where the appropriation is desired?

Mr. WHALEY. Perhaps it will be fought out in Illinois, on the Lakes, I do not know. They have a training station out there, but they always send the boys to the ocean to do the fighting.

Mr. BRITTEN. And that is where the best boys come from, too.

Mr. WHALEY. I admit that some of them do, but not all. As I was saying just now, on the North Atlantic coast you have five deep-water ports and you have five navy yards. In those navy yards you have 14 large dry docks. On the South Atlantic coast you have not a single deep-water port, with the exception of the port of Charleston, which to-day has a channel 30 feet in depth from the sea to the navy yard. You are building battleships the draft of which was never contemplated when any navy yard was established. The deepest draft when this yard was established was considered to be 23 feet, and the commission that established this yard said that it was necessary to dredge one shoal in that river to deepen it to 25 feet, so as to carry the largest battleships in the Navy at that time. That was in 1901, but we have progressed in the building of battleships just as we have along other lines. We are delving a little deeper and expanding in our thoughts, in our actions, in our construction of battleships. The result is that the depth in 1901 and the depth in 1910 is not the depth necessary in 1918, nor the depth that will be necessary in 1921.

Therefore, when the Helm Commission made its report on this navy yard, and said it is strategically the ideal place to put a capital shipyard because of Charleston's expansive harbor, its fine river, its protection from storm, its freedom from bombardment, its ease to defend, and its accessibility to the sea, they joined in that report in saying that at a reasonable cost a depth of 35 to 40 feet could be secured in this river and this harbor, and, gentlemen, it ought to be put in this river and harbor. Now, with reference to cost and maintenance, the commission showed that the cost was reasonable. At that time only $2,000,000 were received for the river and harbor; but, in addition to that, as it has been necessary in every navy yard in this country, we must have a turning basin opposite this yard. The result is, of course, additional cost. Now, they further showed in this very report, which is very illuminating, that the maintenance of this river to a depth of 40 feet is less by one-half than it is at New York, Philadelphia, and one other port. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] has harped upon the presence of silt in the river. It is not silt in the river which has to be dredged from the mouth of the dock. Every engineer who has examined into it says so. The only one I know of who does not hold this view is the gentleman from Illinois. It is the mud from the sides of the canal that lead into the dock which requires dredging. Now, in building the dock, not the yard, but the dock, they put it 700 feet from the channel of the river, and they cut through a mud bank. Now, my friends, the water flows over the sides of that canal twice a day, with the result that the erosion of the sides of that canal gets into the bottom of the canal, and necessarily that will keep up unless you dredge it until the sides reach the angle of rest, whatever that may be, under the circumstances of any given case. They have recommended time and again that the simplest and easiest way to stop the filling in at the mouth of the dock entirely is by building a sea wall along the two sides, which can be done at a reasonable cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, as I understand the situation this amendment by the committee is opposed upon three or four different grounds. One ground suggested is that this committee met hastily and did not have hearings. Why, that is a reason for the passage of the amendment and not against it. It shows that there is necessity; it shows that it is a war measure. The Secretary of War sent letters to our committee and said that it is a war measure and that he urged our committee to adopt an amendment of that kind. He would not have asked its adoption at the last moment, after the bill had been reported and when it was impossible to have hearings, unless there was urgent need.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. So that instead of its being an argument against the proposition it is one for it.

Now, let us take the next proposition. Gentlemen say this is not a proper place at which to establish this yard. Well, now, upon what do they base that argument? They say that it is 6 miles inland upon this river. That is the statement and the argument of men without expert knowledge, and certainly it is in direct contradiction of a series of reports of all those who have investigated the matter and who, after a comparison of this port with other ports, say that Charleston is the best of all the ports south of Norfolk and between Norfolk and Key West for the purpose for which it is proposed to establish this dock.

On the other hand, what are the arguments in favor of the proposition? There is first the naked, bald statement of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, the two experts on whom we ought to rely, because they are charged with the responsibility, and they say that this should be done. There is next the fact that, while to the north between the Canadian line and Norfolk each 250 miles there is a dock of this kind, south of Norfolk and down to Key West there is none at all, and there is that long stretch of coast in which a battle is likely to occur absolutely destitute of any place to which a battleship could go in case of being disabled or in case of disaster.

We say that one should be supplied, and we say that the natural place to supply it is midway between Key West and Norfolk—halfway, the natural distance. Now, gentlemen, let us go to the broader question. Every man upon the floor, I suppose, will join in this statement. From the fateful 6th of April, 1917, down to to-day every patriotic Member of this body has been ready to support the United States in anything which would help protect us against the common enemy and help to win this war; and shall we, without expert knowledge—shall we, in face of the statement of the Secretaries of War and Navy——

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY (continuing). Say that it is not necessary to do this thing; that it is not a war measure? I believe not. I believe we are unready to do that thing. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FREAR. The Secretary of War did not sign that letter, the gentleman will admit. He is not in this country at the present time. He presented statements to us of what he thought was necessary in reference to war measures, and we supported all of those. The statement I read from the engineers was to the effect that vessels can be brought in even at the 26-foot depth, and we have agreed to the 30-foot depth in the past.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Of course, the Secretary of War when he is not in this country can not sign letters individually. The Secretary of War is like any other man at the head of an executive department. When he goes away he leaves in charge a man next to him, and Mr. Crowell, Acting Secretary, signed this letter, and it is to be supposed that he had the same expert advice which would have been had by the Secretary of War had he been personally present. I can see nothing in the distinction to say it is not signed by the Secretary of War personally, but is signed by a deputy; but I say on broad grounds and on patriotic grounds, on the ground that since the 6th of April we have been voting for everything that has been proposed to us as a war measure, to save our fleets and provide for them if they are disabled between Key West and Norfolk, I ask you to vote for this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, coming 100 miles from the seacoast and having no port anywhere nearer than that distance, I think I can claim that I approach this question without any interested motives.

It might be that everything that was said by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WHALEY] could be taken as colored somewhat by the locality in which he lives, and the same might have been said of the distinguished gentleman from New York when he was so urgently advocating the depth of the channel at Hell Gate.

Again, I have heard certain gentlemen here criminate and recriminate in regard to the merits of this bill, saying it was founded on graft, and then saying, too, that it was a monumental pork issue. Now, that is not the question before this House. The question before this House is this: Is it needed at this time, and is the expenditure a proper one? If it is, we should vote for it irrespective of location, irrespective of the wishes of the gentleman who advocates it, and regardless of any locality or sectionalism.

Now, what are the facts? It seems we have no navy yard capable of doing this sort of work, all the way from Norfolk down to Key West. Certainly, there must be a station somewhere, and this seems to be halfway distant between the two points. Now, one would infer, other circumstances being equal, that this is the point for that station. But I hear my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, my fighting Quaker friend [Mr. BUTLER], for whom I have the greatest of all high regard, say that this is not a war measure. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no more patriotic citizen in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and I say with all sincerity that there is no more patriotic citizen within the confines of the entire Union than the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. [Applause.] But he is mistaken about this view. This is a war measure. I saw that Lloyd-George said only yesterday that this battle in France which is now being waged, called the great battle of the Somme, might last for eight months. I hope and pray with all of you that we may be successful in that issue. I hope the time will never come when we will have to fight here on these shores, but if the war continues, and there be not any immediate successful issue, we may have a war upon the seas. We must have the war upon the seas, and if we have the war upon the ocean, it will be at our door. And if we have vessels that cost $28,000,000 each, as said by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, then this money being expended is a picayune. Four million dollars is only one-seventh of the price of one dreadnaught.

In other words, we are about to expend a portion of money here—for what? For the repair and upkeep and taking care of these dreadnaughts if it becomes necessary. More than that, I understand that there is not only one vessel of that kind being built but there are a number of them, and there is no place in the southern waters where there is draft enough to accommodate them.

They say Charleston is not the place. They say we ought to spend money in the West Indies, if you please. They say that it ought to be farther south. But we have already expended $10,000,000, I understand, on this location, and why waste the $10,000,000 already expended by not increasing this appropriation for opening this channel? It seems to me, then, from that point of view, that this is the thing to do at this time. More than that, I have heard some gentlemen say here that nobody could convince them that this was the proper site. Now, I approach this matter entirely with an open mind. I listened to the argument presented by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and very carefully gave full attention to it; I listened to the argument of the gentlemen on the other side who oppose this measure, the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], and also the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]. I was willing to be convinced, and am still willing to be convinced; but there are some people who, when convinced against their will, remain of the same opinion still. That is the trouble. I am willing to take the word and the authority of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I am willing to take the word of the gentleman who is at the head of this Committee on Rivers and Harbors. More than that, I am fully willing and anxious to take the opinion of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, because I believe that they have honestly recommended this as a war measure and that we need it now. [Applause.]

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment appropriating the money for Charleston. I do not know who has the power to-day to tell whether this is a war-emergency measure or not. Four years ago no one would have dreamed of the great conflict that is being waged across the ocean. And after it started I did not find a man here in Washington who predicted that it would go longer than a year. Now, that war has continued for nearly four years, and it is yet undecided. I feel that it will require the power of this great Nation to win that conflict and possibly the finality of it may be decided on our shores. It was my pleasure last summer to visit Charleston, and my conclusion then was that large sums of money should be expended there for greater activities at that yard. I did not then know of the conclusion of the Helm commission. I realized that some day a great battle would be fought in those waters; that we would have to fight to maintain the Monroe doctrine. That war will come after this war is concluded, no matter how it is concluded. Some day, unless we have the military and naval strength that will deter the enemy, we shall have to battle in those waters to maintain the Monroe doctrine; and we ought to safeguard ourselves in order to do it successfully.

If we could turn the hand of that clock back a few years there would be many things that we would do that we have left undone—that would have helped us in this terrible conflict. I am surprised at the utterances of some of these gentlemen in not being willing to visualize a little bit to-day, realizing the many missteps that we have made in the past. I want to follow the leadership of the military authorities and the naval authorities. I think this country would be in better position and that the war across the ocean would have been concluded ere this if we had done that before.

I am not going to make a mistake to-day. I shall vote for this appropriation. If a war should take place and a battle ensue in the Caribbean Sea, we would have $200,000,000 worth of battleships there to fight for our liberty. We need these places, not only at Charleston, but we should have another great naval station a considerable distance down toward the West Indies.

Now, I hope my friends on this side will not be governed by any prejudicial view against this project. I have heard these prejudices expressed for a long time. I am happy to say I have not been infected by them, and I trust they will look to the future safety of our great country and act accordingly. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield? Did not the gentleman on several occasions vote against a dry dock and the extension of piers down there because he did not think that the Charleston Navy Yard should be built up as a great repair or construction yard?

Mr. FARR. I have no knowledge of ever having voted against this project. But if I did, I made a mistake, and I am happy now to remedy that mistake and do something for the future safety of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if no other gentleman desires to speak, I will call for a vote.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I believe I was amongst those for whom time was reserved.

Mr. SMALL. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it did not need the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WHALEY] to convince me that this amendment ought to be adopted. But I want to compliment him upon the very clear presentation of the case which he has made. I am somewhat familiar with the situation at Charleston. I have observed from the commercial aspect of it that Charleston is recovering lost ground. A new railroad bringing coal from northern fields has come to Charleston. In many other ways the city has been going forward.

Charleston, situated geographically as it is, has as much right to be considered for a great navy yard or for a great dry dock as any other point along the coast. I am glad the gentleman from South Carolina has told in such clear terms the relationship of Charleston to the other cities along the Atlantic seaboard. What he says about the northern dry-dock situation is substantially true. I think, however, that he errs as to the depth of some of the channels leading up one or two of the rivers to which he has referred. Philadelphia, for instance, does not have 40 feet, although I wish it had. It is gradually acquiring an assured 35-foot channel, and yet it is 100 miles from the sea, and, as I indicated yesterday, is the busiest shipbuilding river in the United States. Baltimore has 35 feet assured. The problem for these two cities in the future will be to attain that 40 feet which Boston has in sight, and which was guaranteed to New York yesterday, and which will now come to Charleston eventually, if this amendment is adopted.

But as one coming from a Northern State, intensely interested in this question of the development of the Atlantic coast, and as one who has traversed that coast from Maine to Key West, I want to agree not only with the gentleman from South Carolina, but with the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that there ought to be a great naval dry dock south of Cape Hatteras.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FESS. As a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Which I am not.

Mr. FESS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought he was.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have not that distinction.

Mr. FESS. Well, as a distinguished Member of the House who knows what that committee has done, why did not the committee put this amendment in?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the reason, apparently, which is indicated in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, which was read at the Clerk's desk at the beginning of this debate.

Mr. FESS. It was rather a matter not of this committee but of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is a matter of the two committees, one of which, the Committee on Naval Affairs, had proposed to attain this object by action in the naval appropriation bill, and the other, apparently, was the effort of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to retain its jurisdiction by making provision here. As it presents itself to me there is a compromise here that will be satisfactory to both committees.

Mr. FESS. And the omission of the item by the committee is not necessarily an argument against it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think not. This question would undoubtedly have come up in the naval appropriation bill, and by passing it now as a river and harbor measure I think it will be waived when the naval appropriation bill comes forward. I merely suspect that; I do not know.

Mr. PADGETT. The understanding between the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and myself was that if this committee passed it here it will go out of the naval bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That was the understanding I had from the discussion thus far.

Mr. FREAR. Does the gentleman know of any other item in the bill, by amendment or otherwise, where there is no report from the engineers and no hearings on the item? I will say that there is not to my knowledge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know. Norfolk is the last point, the southernmost point, on the Atlantic seaboard where dry-dock accommodations can be had. Now, gentlemen, picture to yourselves a vessel in distress coming up from the Caribbean Sea, coming in from the ocean, coming around from the Gulf, that has no place to go until it reaches Norfolk.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The coast of Florida is more than 500 miles long. In November last I took a trip along the inland waters of Florida from the St. Johns River, Jacksonville, down to Key West, and I say to you that it is a reflection upon this Nation that there is no point along the coast of Florida, along its entire 500 miles of length, into which a vessel in distress at sea drawing 20 feet of water can go; not one; nor are there places anywhere along the coast from New Orleans yonder on the Gulf all the way around to Norfolk to which a naval vessel which is leaking or in bad repair can go to be placed in dry dock for repairs. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in closing this discussion I just wish to say this: A provision for this dry dock at Charleston has been reported in the naval appropriation bill and will be considered when that bill comes before the House. No one can foretell with absolute certainty whether that provision in the naval appropriation bill will receive the approval of the House, although I believe the approval of the House will be given for the authorization of this dry dock. But if the dry dock shall be authorized in the naval appropriation bill and become an accomplished fact, is there a single Member of the House who would vote against deepening the channel from the sea to the navy yard in order to make the dry dock usable? No one would think of voting against an authorization for the deepening of the channel if the dry dock had been provided.

Now, this provision for deepening the channel does not become effective unless the dry dock shall be subsequently authorized, and if the dry dock is never authorized, the money will never be expended; so that upon those conditions it seems to me every remnant of objection to this amendment authorizing the deepening of the channel in Charleston harbor from the sea to the navy yard ought to be removed. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRITTEN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Savannah Harbor and Savannah River below, at, and above Augusta, Ga.: For maintenance, $100,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the appropriation of $100,000, but I desire to call attention to a practice which is not just to the Army engineers.

In Document No. 337 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, dated August 13, 1917, is a report upon Savannah Harbor. In that report the engineers oppose going on with the proposition which was offered at that time and under consideration. The engineer in charge, Col. Mills, makes this statement, that it is first necessary to complete the work that is being done in the harbor at Savannah before undertaking further extensions that he says will impose additional burdens upon the Federal Government in the way of outlay for construction in the first instance and subsequent expense for maintenance.

We are undertaking to prosecute certain other improvements in the harbor. Now, this statement was made by the engineer, and the report was made on August 17 last. Accompanying the report is a statement of the harbor commission of Savannah, signed by 11 members, saying that they did not want this extension attempted at this time; that they preferred to have the other work done. Yet the committee has sent this matter back to the Army engineers, asking them to give a new report, and this inside of a little over six months, in the face of the protest of the Savannah commission itself that it is not necessary, and in the face of the report of the engineer that we ought not to incur this unnecessary expense at this time. The House knows what the purpose of such an action is, to send it back to the engineers after they have given careful consideration and are supported by the people of Savannah themselves, to ask them now practically to make a different report. I say, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to support the engineers, if we are going to give them the assistance which we assume to give them here, and which has been claimed upon this floor, we ought not to take such action.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is the gentleman referring to anything that is in this present bill?

Mr. FREAR. No; I am not. I am referring to a practice that I think ought to be stopped, and if not stopped it ought to be exposed. When the engineers have reported upon a proposition of this kind, when they come in and say that certain work ought not to be proceeded with, and when they are supported by 11 members of the Harbor Commission saying the same thing, I say we ought not to send this back to them, upon the request of local interests, in order to have the engineers change their position.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is the gentleman asking the Committee of the Whole to take any affirmative steps?

Mr. FREAR. I am stating the action that the committee took against my protest, and which was favored by the gentleman who asks me the question. I am stating a fact which has a far closer relation to this bill than a good deal of the conversation that has occurred here on the floor to-day, and I think it is a very important proposition that the House should understand that when the engineers have just brought in a report, and they are supported in their action by the people of the locality, by 11 members of the Harbor Commission, we ought not to send the matter back to the engineers asking them to give a reexamination, which practically, of course, invites them to change their position.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Has the gentleman stated that certain of the members of that commission have changed their minds on that subject?

Mr. FREAR. Some of the members have done so within the past six months, because I think there are one or two interests that desire to have some special service given to them; but the engineer himself who made the examination says it is an undue expense to place upon the Government. Yet we send it back for reexamination.

Mr. DUPRÉ. You mean that the Committee of the Whole does?

Mr. FREAR. No; the Rivers and Harbors Committee, of which the gentleman is a member, and he voted to do it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Why revamp all these matters on this floor?

Mr. FREAR. Because the more we expose that practice the sooner we are going to defeat it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And, in the language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the greater headlines somebody will get.

Mr. FREAR No; but we are going to expose these things, and I assume that the gentleman has voted for all these propositions, and he can. I have no objection; but I want to show what an unfair position it is in which to place the Army engineers.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I regret very much that the gentleman has had any objection to my voting for what I believe to be proper.

Mr. FREAR. No; of course the gentleman can pursue his own course.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to put into the RECORD a table having to do with the bill we are going to consider to-morrow.

During my absence in Nebraska the Provost Marshal General did me the honor to write a letter to members of the Military Committee, in which he challenged the correctness of some figures I had put into the RECORD showing the way in which the classification of men under the proposed law would affect the different counties in the State of Nebraska. The statement he made was that I had misinterpreted those figures.

The first column in the table shows the total number of men classified. The second shows those that were classified as he interpreted it, and who had accepted that classification, and the third column showed those who had appealed. The Provost Marshal General held that from the men who had appealed should have been deducted those who were put in the second column as class 1. In the letter he placed a table showing the classification of all the counties in the fifth district, and I think his own figures will convince anyone who examines them that the Provost Marshal General is in error in his contention. For instance, in the county of Clay his own figures show that 1,178 men were classified and that 264 were placed in class 1. He figures 22 per cent, therefore, in class 1; but the trouble with his figures is that in the next column it is shown that 343 men appealed from the classification of 264 in class 1.

In the county of Franklin, in the same district, 800 men were classified; and, according to his own figures, 152 were placed in class 1, and he figures 19 per cent; but the following column shows that 294 men appealed, apparently from a total of 152, which, of course, is absurd.

In Frontier County, in the same district, out of a total of 765 registrants, apparently only 114 were put in class 1, or 15 per cent, but from that 114 his own figures show that 322 appealed.

In the county of Hayes, in the same district, his figures show 283 registrants and 77 in class 1, which, he says, is 27 per cent only who were put in class 1, but 187 have appealed.

I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the entire statement of the adjutant general of the State of Nebraska, showing the percentages of men who were supposed to be in class 1 in every county in the State, and showing that he is entirely in error in his contention by his own figures. If the appeals of those men who are pending are not granted, they also must be added to those listed in class 1. I wish to show that the adjutant general's own tables are proof positive that I was correct in my statement. I wish to put in the RECORD the full statement of the adjutant general of the State, including these tables, whose figures confirm my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the statement and tables indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement and tables are as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE LETTER FROM THE OFFICE OF THE PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL.

1. Mr. SHALLENBERGER'S figures are incorrect. (See Exhibit A.) They are in some cases two or three times higher than the actual figures. The reason for this is that the returns were sent in under two heads, viz, total persons in class 1 and total class 1 cases pending. The former number was taken from column 8 of the classification list; the latter number was taken from column 15 of the classification list, and, of course, signified a duplicate number of persons and not an additional number; that is, those numbers of class 1 who appealed were, of course, included within the figures representing the total of class 1—e. g., if there were 150 placed in class 1 by a local board, and if there were 50 appeals, the persons making these appeals were part of the 150 in class 1.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, not understanding this, has added together the two figures; i. e., class 1 persons and class 1 persons appealing. Obviously in those districts where the numbers of appeals pending was large, the figures would, of course, be grossly exaggerated; for example, there are 9 boards in which the number of appeals pending are between 100 and 1,000, hence in these boards his erroneously high figures make it appear as though almost the entire body of classified persons were placed in class 1. For example, in taking the principal countries named in his speech:

(1) Seward County, with 1,287 classified, did not have 1,262 in class 1, but only 722; i. e., not 98 per cent but 56 per cent in class 1.

(2) Chase County, with 361 classified, instead of having 283 in class 1 has only 164; i. e., not 80 per cent but 45 per cent in class 1.

Thus in 9 out of the 20 boards cited by him the figure for class 1 is reduced, when corrected to sometimes one-third, or even one-fourth, of Mr. SHALLENBERGER'S figures.

The gross inequalities thus emphasized by him do not exist.

Nebraska—Fifth congressional district.

Local board of city or county.	Code No.	Total registrants.	Boards' action on first draft.					Boards' action on classification.
			Number called.	Exemption claims disallowed.		Certified for service.		Number classified.	Class 1.		Pending.
				Number.	Per cent.	Number.	Per cent.		Number.	Per cent.
Adams	26-2-1	1,925	429	104	51	230	54	1,785	622	35	107
Chase	26-2-4	398	102	4	11	56	55	351	164	45	19
Clay	26-2-5	1,239	379	17	10	134	35	1,178	264	22	343
Dundy	26-2-6	429	160	1	2	61	38	375	71	19	9
Franklin	26-2-8	853	150	15	28	72	48	800	152	19	294
Frontier	26-2-9	830	293	25	17	130	47	765	114	15	322
Furnas	26-2-10	932	423	11	6	135	32	846	84	10	4
Gosper	26-2-12	422	170	7	8	62	36	380	59	16	201
Hall	26-2-13	2,206	500	62	26	219	44	1,943	484	25	12
Harlan	26-2-15	781	186	36	37	83	42	715	157	22	15
Hayes	26-2-16	324	150	13	23	68	45	283	77	27	187
Hitchcock	26-2-17	493	242	26	31	74	31	335	85	25	4
Kearney	26-2-20	837	373	56	50	167	45	703	207	27	81
Nuckolls	26-2-25	1,698	364	13	8	114	31	1,019	365	36	259
Perkins	26-2-28	311	65	3	8	21	32	295	69	23	1
Phelps	26-2-29	936	350	20	9	148	42	855	285	33	104
Red Willow	26-2-31	979	264	10	7	95	36	892	150	17	5
Webster	26-2-37	942	250	6	6	89	36	839	170	20	48
Range of variation					2-51		31-55			10-45

County.	Men classified.	Class 1 men.		Class 1 men's classification pending before district boards.
		Number.	Per cent.	Number.	Per cent.
Adams	1,785	622	34.83	107	40.83
Antelope	1,206	156	12.93	0	12.93
Arthur
Banner	142	19	13.37	1	14.07
Blaine	144	31	21.52	1	22.22
Boone	1,132	292	25.79	7	26.41
Box Butte	776	236	30.41	53	37.42
Boyd	574	75	13.06	0	13.06
Brown	455	113	24.83	1	25.05
Buffalo	1,938	423	21.82	2	21.92
Burt	1,161	220	18.91	20	20.65
Butler	1,275	225	17.67	35	20.38
Cass	1,593	394	24.73	99	30.94
Cedar	1,408	388	27.56	12	28.40
Chase	361	164	45.48	119	78.39
Cherry	1,174	344	29.30	8	29.98
Cheyenne	768	302	39.32	3	39.71
Clay	1,178	264	22.71	343
Colfax	1,041	217	20.84	28	23.53
Cuming	1,250	324	25.92	14	27.04
Custer	2,056	363	17.65	15	18.38
Dakota	596	196	37.88	0	32.88
Dawes	833	217	26.05	14	27.73
Dawson	1,402	194	13.83	2	13.98
Deuel	313	84	26.83	3	27.78
Dixon	960	210	21.87	0	21.87
Dodge	2,035	600	29.48	36	31.25
Douglas	1,828	538	29.43	13	30.13
Omaha:
Division No. 1	2,981	1,867	62.56	40	63.90
Division No. 2	3,001	752	25.05	9	25.35
Division No. 3
Division No. 4	4,303	1,681	39.06	69	40.67
Division No. 5	3,272	1,137	34.75	30	35.66
Dundy	375	71	18.93	9	21.33
Fillmore	1,113	210	19.16	70	25.28
Franklin	899	152	19.09	294	55.75
Frontier	765	114	14.90	322	56.98
Furnas	846	84	9.92	4	10.40
Gage	2,443	794	32.50	1,014	74.00
Garden	459	147	32.66	16	36.22
Garfield	231	54	20.68	9	24.13
Gosper	380	59	15.52	201	68.42
Grant	186	66	35.31		35.31
Greeley	728	126	17.30	5	17.99
Hall	1,943	484	24.90	12	25.52
Hamilton	1,241	248	19.98	45	23.61
Harlan	715	157	21.95	15	24.05
Hayes	283	77	27.20	187	98.28
Hitchcock	335	85	25.37	4	26.56
Holt	1,417	253	17.64	4	17.92
Hooker	128	20	15.62		15.62
Howard	832	221	25.39	19	26.53
Jefferson	1,303	347	26.63	148	37.98
Johnson	834	191	20.50	51	26.66
Kearney	763	207	27.12	81	37.74
Keith	444	157	35.36	2	35.80
Kaya Paha	306	107	34.93		34.93
Kimball	320	80	25.00	1	25.15
Knox	1,599	576	36.22	243	51.50
Lancaster
Lincoln, division No. 1	2,935	674	22.96	9	23.26
Lincoln, division No. 2	1,757	284	15.90	4	16.12
Lincoln	1,515	364	23.97	23	25.49
Logan	159	47	29.56	4	32.07
Loup	154	39	25.37		25.32
McPherson	128	34	26.56	2	28.12
Madison	1,876	322	17.16	12	17.80
Merrick	873	174	19.93	15	21.65
Morrill	874	217	24.82	13	26.30
Nance	753	107	14.20	5	14.87
Nemaha	989	276	28.16	82	36.53
Nuckolls	1,019	365	36.13	250	60.89
Otoe	1,573	383	24.53	191	36.67
Pawnee	769	193	25.39	4	25.93
Perkins	295	69	23.38	1	23.70
Phelps	855	283	33.45	104	45.61
Pierce	889	175	19.67	25	22.60
Platte	1,743	417	23.88	50	26.74
Polk	877	192	21.87	4	22.35
Red Willow	892	150	16.81	5	17.37
Richardson	1,622	330	20.90	7	21.30
Rock	311	62	19.93	1	20.25
Saline	1,447	301	20.80	80	25.95
Sarpy	747	175	23.42	1	23.68
Saunders	1,697	657	38.71	665	79.90
Scotts Bluff	1,593	255	15.94	4	16.19
Seward	1,287	722	56.09	540	98.05
Sheridan	839	195	23.35	8	24.31
Sherman	747	134	17.93	5	18.62
Sioux	391	89	20.45	7	22.25
Stanton	707	145	20.65	2	20.93
Thayer	1,131	243	21.75	15	23.07
Thomas	154	55	35.71	1	37.01
Thurston	831	293	35.98	167	56.07
Valley	811	184	22.68	10	23.92
Washington	985	244	24.77	6	25.38
Wayne	939	247	26.55	14	28.06
Webster	853	170	20.23	48	25.97
Wheeler	173	34	19.31	5	22.18
York	1,483	293	19.72	100	26.35
Total	193,491
Class 1, not appeals		27,351
Class 1, appeals				6,330
Total registrants placed in class 1 by local boards		33,681	32.5

32.5 per cent of registrants liable for service are in class 1.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask my colleague from Nebraska whether or not he still is of opinion that he is not in error in his former statement where he gave the figures from the county, I think 1,280 and some odd, and 1,270 were put in class 1. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he has verified his figures, and whether or not he was not mistaken?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The figures are in The Adjutant General's report. It is the county of Seward; and that report shows that there were 1,287 classified; 722 were put in class 1, or 56.09 per cent. Five hundred and forty men have appealed, and The Adjutant General has put the figures in percentages, 98.5. These figures are his, and I want to put them in the RECORD to show that I used the official figures. It is a marvelous thing; but if you go over the figures you will find that the Provost Marshal General's contention is impossible. Take the county of Gage, in the district of my colleague, Mr. SLOAN, and in that county there are 2,443 registrants; 794 put in class 1—32.5 per cent—according to the figures of the adjutant general of Nebraska. One thousand and fourteen men have appealed. Does it mean that only 794 were put in class 1 by the local board in that county? No; it means what the adjutant general has indicated—that 794 men have accepted and 1,014 have appealed. If the 1,014 are denied the appeal, then the entire amount is in class 1.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to clear this one thing up. I want to ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether he has taken any steps to investigate the board that would make that sort of a return?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have not; but while in Nebraska I called on a number of counties and asked for the reason of this tremendous difference in classification, and I was informed that it resulted from the interpretation and understanding of the law by the draft boards. One county would only put 10 per cent of the total registration in class 1, while another county, according to these figures, would put 90 per cent in class 1. It results from the action of these local boards.

I want the House to understand that the classification list I am inserting in the RECORD is furnished me by the adjutant general of Nebraska after I wired the governor for it. I asked the report to show the total number of registrants and the number of them placed in class 1 by local boards. The percentage figures, which were made by the Nebraska office, plainly show that he furnished me the total placed in class 1, placed those who accepted their classification in the second column, and those who appealed in the third, and by the final percentage figures the total percentage of those registrants of draft age who would be in class 1 unless appeals were granted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sapelo and Darien Harbors, Cowhead and Satilla Rivers, Club, Plantation, and Fancy Bluff Creeks, Ga.; and St. Marys River, Ga. and Fla.: For maintenance, $4,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 25, strike out "Club, Plantation."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, that is to correct a clerical error. Club and Plantation Creeks should not have been in that group because they are provided for otherwise. I will ask unanimous consent to print a letter from the Secretary of War suggesting the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes outside of the regular order, because I have a matter that I want to call to the attention of the House in relation to the charges against the aviation section of the Army.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this foreign to this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. That matter is coming up to-morrow, and I do not think it ought to be taken up at this particular time.

Mr. CALDWELL. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmulgee Rivers, Ga.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $40,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not want to be persistent about this matter, but there is continuously published in the newspapers criticism of the Army of the United States in relation to its endeavor to create an air service. The matter has got to be so important to the public, and the public is so greatly disturbed about it, that it is absolutely necessary that something be done to clarify the situation as it stands. Now, it so happens that I am chairman of the subcommittee on aviation.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman made a personal appeal to have five minutes for this, and I hope no objection will be made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman may be justified in coming to the defense of the Aviation Service, but it seems to me rather unusual to inject a controversy of this sort into the river and harbor bill. Undoubtedly some other gentleman might desire to justify the criticism that has been made. If that is so, controversy would run along here for quite a little time.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will say to the gentleman that the other day the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] took some time of the House on a matter foreign to the bill, and I made no objection to it.

Mr. GILLETT. But that was in general debate.

Mr. WALSH. That was general debate, and the gentleman had a right to do it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have not taken much time of the House at this session.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee says that he is willing that the gentleman should proceed, and I will not object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose if gentlemen desire to answer the gentleman from New York there will be no objection on the part of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CALDWELL. In order that we may know whether the Army has fallen down in its endeavor to build up an air service or not, we must consider the condition of the country at the time it undertook to make an army in the air to supply us with the necessary equipment and compare that with the accomplishments.

When war was declared there were in the Nation about 156 men who could fly, and not one of them was skilled in the kind of flying that must be learned in order that they could take part in military combat. As compared with that condition, we find that to-day America has in its Army alone 2,700 qualified pilots and 9,100 graduates of ground schools, besides the thousands in the flying and ground schools. Each day the men in the flying schools fly over 156,000 miles, or more than six times the distance around the earth. Of these, large numbers are now actually flying on the battle front in France, and it is considered by our enemy and our allies that they are the most daring and the most efficient fliers in the world. [Applause.]

Shortly after war was declared every business organization in America that could make or thought it could make aircraft was invited to Washington for consultation, and after a careful and exhaustive examination of their plants and equipment it was found that, even though Great Britain and France had stimulated aircraft production in America in every way that limitless money could induce by offering to pay any kind of profit that the American manufacturer demanded, it was freely admitted that we could not construct more than 630 airplanes in America in a single year, and it was not expected that these factories could be expanded so as to make them able to produce more than 1,500 planes in 18 months. To illustrate the kind of stimulation that the allies had furnished for the development of this infant manufacturing industry it might be well to relate the story often told concerning the Curtiss plant. It seems that the purchasing agent of Great Britain, being ordered to supply a large quantity of aircraft, called the Curtiss factory on the telephone and asked Mr. Curtiss how many planes he could make in a year, and on receiving the reply asked if he could not increase his output. Mr. Curtiss replied that he could if he had the money, and the English agent said, "How much do you need?" Mr. Curtiss replied, "One hundred thousand," meaning dollars. The English agent said, "All right; I'll mail you a draft." When Mr. Curtiss opened his mail the next morning he nearly dropped dead, for the draft was for 100,000 pounds instead of dollars.

The fact, however, that the reports of the newspapers and of the Senate committee seem to overlook, demonstrates that the manufacturers of America have thought more of their country than they have of European money, for to-day they are actually manufacturing more than a thousand airplanes every month, and the production is increasing every day. [Applause.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. While the gentleman is going into a defense of this I simply want to ask my colleague if there has not been a tremendous fall-down from the promises made to the Committee on Military Affairs when the appropriation of $640,000,000 was being passed?

Mr. CALDWELL. Not from the promises made by any Army officer that I recall, but from the promises made in the newspapers and by men who took up the matter after we had appropriated the $640,000,000 and the idea of an army in the air had become popular.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did not the Secretary of War make a direct statement as to the number of airplanes expected to be delivered in France by the 1st of July?

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not remember any such statement having been made to the committee.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How many combat planes have we now?

Mr. CALDWELL. We have in France to-day 185 combat planes, of which 5 were manufactured in the United States, put in boxes here, and sent to France. In addition to that, we have 1,220 training planes in France——

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. All but five of these machines are of foreign make and purchased by us under agreement with the allies. They are now being used by the American aviators in France.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. How many fighting planes did the gentleman say?

Mr. CALDWELL. One hundred and eighty-five.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Are they equipped with Liberty motors?

Mr. CALDWELL. Not all of these, as I understand it, but surely five of them are.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman does not distinguish between fighting planes and combat planes. I do not think there is a single fighting plane in France made in the United States. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. CALDWELL. There is no difference. I am not mistaken. The gentleman probably refers to the single-seater. None have been built here because Gen. Pershing has requested that we do not build any here.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think it proper to make all this public?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; I do think so, because before I got these figures I told the Army officer who gave them to me that I expected to make them public in a speech and that I did not want any information that would be improper to tell for fear that our enemy might learn facts of military importance, and he told me that he was giving me figures that were old enough, so that even if Germany knew them it would do no harm to the Army, because the situation was improving so rapidly. In addition to this, I feel that in view of the criticism that has come of the activities of this line of preparation that it is necessary to give the people facts upon which they can form their judgment as to the justification of the criticism and the character of the men making it.

There are three kinds of criticism. First, criticism coming from strong, energetic, patriotic Americans who are straining in the traces and anxious that we should enter this war in the big, American way. That kind of criticism is healthy and sought by all public officials who are anxious to do their duty. There is a second sort of criticism coming from people who have strangely mixed motives, either partisan or political, personal or biased, or selfish or mercenary. Some aim to obtain political preferment by tearing down through unfair criticism the administration that is responsible at this time. Some seek to injure those against whom they have personal spite or who have failed to grant favors requested. And still others have machinery and equipment that they would like to sell the Government at an exorbitant profit regardless of the adaptability of the appliances. To this kind of criticism we should give but little heed, except that it creates a reservoir for much of the third kind of criticism, namely, that coming from those who are disloyal and seek to defeat our country by disseminating insidious propaganda tending to destroy the confidence of our people in the Commander in Chief of our Army.

It is admitted that the airplane program is not as far advanced as it was hoped a year ago it would be at this time. But the delay has not been very great when the obstacles encountered are considered.

When we began to coordinate the industry of the country for the purpose of producing aircraft in quantity our first unforeseen obstacle came in the discovery that the most essential wood used in airplane construction (spruce) was available in such limited quantities that we could not supply our allies with the timber they required without going into new fields and adopting new and radical methods of curing the timber. There was in sight about 14,000,000 feet of spruce timber at the time we started our plan of production, and the allies required 28,000,000 feet. Our men have gone into primeval forests, constructed new mills, and during the past year have actually cut about 30,000,000 feet of lumber and will provide 100,000,000 feet this year.

The next unforeseen obstacle was the disloyal operations of the I. W. W., which had a strong working organization among the loggers and lumbermen of the Northwest. To combat this our Army officers organized the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen, and have, I believe, effectively put out of business in the lumber region the pernicious, disloyal, and un-American I. W. W. We have to-day 10,000 men in uniform armed with axes fighting for American liberty. [Applause.]

It was then discovered that though there were many factories in America that were thought by their owners to be capable of constructing aircraft, after examination the owners refused to take contracts because of the great change necessary in their plant and equipment. Although at the beginning there were only three airplane factories in the United States and a half dozen or more shops making experimental planes, to-day more than 400 manufacturing companies are working on contracts or subcontracts in the construction of aircraft and their accessories, employing more than 100,000 men. [Applause.]

It was later discovered that there was not enough linen in the world to cover the airplanes being constructed for the Army, and after much patient labor by many of our most skilled experts a substitute was finally devised, and the Government has acquired practically all the long-fiber staple cotton crop, at a cost of about $14,000,000. We have purchased 34 tons of linen thread, to make up the deficiency of the amount required in our program. Strange as it may seem, the market is well supplied with the silk thread required. In the construction of the fusilage a different kind of wood is used, but cut into thin strips called in the art "laminated wood." If these strips we have already prepared for this purpose were laid on the ground, as they say in Ohio, "side by each," they would cover more than a thousand acres. [Applause.]

The next obstacle encountered seemed almost insurmountable, for the great Liberty motor, concerning which I will later make some remarks, would not properly function with any lubricant except castor oil. On inquiry it was found there was not castor oil enough in the world to meet our requirements, and there were not enough castor beans in America to sow the fields. To meet this almost overwhelming obstacle we sent a ship to India and brought back a load of castor beans, and have actually planted 100,000 acres of land in the United States from which we expect to manufacture all of the castor oil that our program may require. [Applause.]

We are about 90 days behind in our manufacturing schedule, and some of this has been made up from foreign purchases. Most of it was caused by two sources: First, when we laid out our program the allies, knowing what our equipment was, suggested that we devote our energy to the manufacture of training planes and the preparation of our men to fly therein, with the understanding that as fast as they were sent abroad the allies would supply them with combat machines and training on the front. We have kept our share of the program in that we have manufactured more training planes than we could use here, building up a reserve supply, and have manufactured all of the advanced training planes that we have had use for. We have sent 26,000 men abroad, of whom 7,000 are mechanics, and we have shipped 11,000 tons of material to France. Second, by change of plan under orders from France.

Of these, 3 squadrons of 18 planes each are now actually operating under the American flag and under American control, yet our Army holds only a 4-mile sector, and there are a great number of our men flying with England, with France, and with Italy in foreign machines and under foreign control in preparation of joining American units after they have had experience with the veterans of the allies. And I am authorized to state that we have not a single flying officer ready to go over the front that is without a combat plane and its equipment. [Applause.]

In the training of our pilots the casualties have been remarkably small. We have lost 26 officers, 42 cadets, and 17 enlisted men through accident. In other words, we have had one fatality for every 300,000 miles flown. Flying in an Army airplane has become safer than automobiling in the crowded city streets.

We have already constructed, tested, and have ready for service 264 Liberty engines, concerning which there has been so much criticism; 18 of them are now being used by the Army and a larger number by the Navy. Forty engines have been sent to our allies; quantity production has started and they will be delivered in increasing numbers. That the motors are a success is proved by the fact that our allies have asked us to send them as many engines as we can spare.

The Liberty motor produces a horsepower at less than 2 pounds and 100 horsepower more than any other motor being used on the battle front to-day, with approximately 100 pounds less weight. There is no question but that the Liberty engine will fly the combat plane recommended by Gen. Pershing faster than any other engine now available, and I feel sure that when the war is over the Liberty engine will stand out as one of the great accomplishments of the war, and I am only sorry that the man who conceived the idea—Maj. Souther—could not have lived to see its success. The delay in turning out quantity production is amply justified in the efficiency of the machine developed. The same applause will come here that came on the test of the Browning gun which had been adopted by the Ordnance Department following the Lewis gun controversy. I am sorry to say that a great portion of the criticism of the Liberty motor has come from men interested in other types of engines, which they had hoped to have adopted by the Government, notwithstanding the fact that they were not so powerful as the engine we have developed; and certain men, for partisan and personal reasons, have repeated these criticisms, thus giving them credence.

I know, of course, that a great many of the statements that I have made will be challenged in the Senate and by certain Members of this House who have too much partisanship. I have been extremely careful in giving figures and making declarations of fact, and I am willing to stand on the statements I have made. I am satisfied that time will show that I was not only justified in making these statements but that the critics of the administration will be put to rout by public opinion when the facts are known.

We are to be congratulated that we have had at the head of our Air Service men like Maj. Gen. George O. Squier, Col. E. A. Deeds, and Col. H. H. Arnold, who have had the character to do the right thing in the face of complaints from high places and to withstand pressure exerted in behalf of those who sought favor at the expense of efficiency and urged hurry instead of care. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Indian River, St. Lucie Inlet, Miami Harbor (Biscayne Bay), and harbor at Key West, Fla.: For maintenance, $20,000.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 6, by inserting, after line 8, the following paragraph: "Key West Harbor, Fla.: For improvement by deepening to a depth of 26 feet, where necessary, and by removal of what is commonly known as the 'middle ground' to a width of 800 feet, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 185, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $150,000."

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment which I have just sent up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that a committee amendment? I wish to reserve the point of order. It is rather ambiguous whether it is a harbor improvement or for the removal of water hyacinths.

Mr. SMALL. It is not a committee amendment.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I send up a substitute. There is no use of wasting time, because I am not offering this simply to talk.

Mr. STAFFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that the gentleman is offering two amendments at one and the same time, one an amendment and the other a substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood.

Mr. SEARS. I am offering a substitute to my amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not do that. The gentleman can not offer a thousand and one amendments at one and the same time.

Mr. SEARS. Then I offer the substitute and I withdraw the first amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to withdraw the amendment just read, and he offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 6, by inserting, after line 8, the following paragraph: "Key West Harbor, Fla.: For improvement by deepening to a depth of 26 feet, where necessary, and by removal of what is commonly known as the 'middle ground' to a depth of 800 feet, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 165, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $150,000: Provided, That authority to enter into a contract in an amount not to exceed $232,700, the full amount of the estimate, if satisfactory bids are received, or to purchase, contract, or hire a suitable dredging plant and do the work therewith, is hereby given if it is found that an advantageous contract can not be made."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I would say for the gentleman's information that this is for the improvement of Key West Harbor, and I have simply followed the recommendation of the Board of Engineers, quoting their language, in order that this work might be done as they decided it should be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman embodies in his amendment an authorization for the purchase of a dredging plant, as I understand it.

Mr. SEARS. Well, that was the recommendation of the Board of Engineers, which I will read to you at the proper time, so they could proceed with the work if they could not get a contract which was advantageous to the Government. In other words, the Government would do the work.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve the right to object so that the gentleman can explain it.

Mr. SEARS. I will strike that part out if the point of order is reserved. I will strike out the dredging part and offer it as an amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to speak for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suggest the gentleman ask for 10 minutes.

Mr. SEARS. Well, I want to say this, Mr. Chairman, before making the request, I have sat here and listened to gentlemen talk about war and everything else and I have made no objection, but patiently listened. I can not present this matter fairly to the committee in even 15 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Did not the gentleman prior to the beginning of general debate suggest that he would waive his time in general debate and take time under the five-minute rule?

Mr. SEARS. I did, and it was practically agreed to. I made the statement when general debate was up that I would not take any time of the House in general debate, because I only proposed to take time on this amendment, and the chairman stated that he hoped nobody would object.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. I objected because the gentleman does this whenever the river and harbor bill is up. He refuses to take time under general debate but proceeds to ask for time under the five-minute rule, and I shall object to any further time beyond 10 minutes.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the gentleman objected, because I have tried to deal frankly and fairly with colleagues. I would like to talk about this in general terms, but, on account of my limited time, I have to be not only specific, but speak very, very rapidly. Key West Harbor, as you know, is located at the southernmost point of Florida. There has not been a single dollar appropriated for it since 1913. In 1911, $25,000; in 1912, $63,000; and in 1913, $15,000 was appropriated. Not a single dollar, in a single river and harbor bill, has been appropriated for maintenance or for any other purpose since 1913, and practically nothing for the three years prior thereto, notwithstanding the fact that in 1909 the commerce was 129,125 tons and value $15,878,120, and in 1915 the commerce was $26,026,547 and 946,736 tons. In 1917 the commerce was over $37,051,579 and 1,028,374 tons, and this notwithstanding the fact that some steamers had to be withdrawn from Key West Harbor because practically every time one of them would enter the port it would run aground, and it would take two or three days to get it off. Now, I do not want you to take my word for it, and I will therefore read you what others say. First I want to call your attention to page 8, part 1, of Report of Chief of Engineers, United States Army, 1917, in which you will find Key West has been established as a permanent sea-coast defense. On June 13, 1917, the Secretary of War submitted a report to Congress, and it was published in House Document No. 185, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session. You can get this report, and each of you can verify what I am going to say. I will read to you these indorsements, but I will have to do so briefly and as rapidly as possible. The first indorsement is signed by W. M. Black, brigadier general. On page 2 of said document you will find the following or second indorsement:

After due consideration of the above-mentioned reports, I concur in the views of the district officer, the division engineer, and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore report that the improvement by the United States of Key West Harbor, Fla., with a view of removing the Middle Ground is deemed advisable to the extent of widening the channel opposite the wharves to a width of 800 feet and a depth of 26 feet at mean low water, at an estimated cost of $232,700. The first appropriation should provide $150,000 and authority to enter into contract for the full amount of the estimate, if satisfactory bids are received, or to purchase, construct, or hire a suitable dredging plant, and do the work therewith, if it is found that an advantageous contract can not be made, the balance of the estimate to be appropriated as needed.

The above is dated June 11, 1917, after war had been declared and after the House had passed the rivers and harbors bill last year. I tried to get this report at that time, but it had not been printed, and I lost my amendment

The third indorsement is by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army:

Key West Harbor lies on the west front of the city of Key West, Fla. There are two improved channels, one from the south and one from the northwest.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Florida is making a very interesting statement, and I would like to have order.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman, and I want to apologize for speaking so rapidly. I have a proposition full of merit.

The existing project now in force provides for a channel through the northwest entrance 17 feet deep at mean low water and of sufficient width for navigation, and for deepening and widening the main ship channel so as to afford a channel 30 feet deep at mean low water and 300 feet wide, and for removing certain shoals from the anchorage. There is now available a depth of 18 feet through the northwest channel and a depth of 30 feet and a width of not less than 300 feet through the main ship channe. The total expenditure on this work to June 30, 1916, has been $741,096.94. A draft of 26 feet can be carried at low water to the wharves along the city front in the inner harbor. The mean tidal range is 2.6 feet at the northwest entrance and 1.4 feet in the main ship channel. Opposite the city front is a submerged reef, referred to as the Middle Ground, which restricts the width of the inner harbor, particularly in front of the Mallory wall. Key West has been growing in importance as a commercial port, and vessels regularly engaged in trade, as well as those making occasional stops, have been increasing in size. The larger ones now find difficulty in maneuvering to and from their berths because of insufficient width. Groundings are not of infrequent occurrence, and, as the bottom is generally of rock, these groundings are fraught with more than ordinary danger. It is believed that some additional width is required to keep pace with the expansion of commerce and that the project proposed by the district officer is well adapted to meet the needs of the locality. The board therefore concurs in the opinion of the district officer and the division engineer that it is advisable for the United States to undertake the additional work contemplated by estimates (b) above at a cost of $232,700.

The remainder of this section is practically the same as the recommendation of Gen. Black, and is signed by Frederic V. Abbot, colonel, Corps of Engineers, now Brigadier General, Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. That is the third indorsement.

The fourth and following indorsement is by Mr. George E. Brown, superintendent, Engineer Department at Large, in same document, and is included in the report of Lieut. Col. W. B. Ladue, Corps of Engineers:

7. The field work of the preliminary examination was executed by Mr. George E. Brown, superintendent, Engineer Department at Large, from whose report the following is quoted:

"Complaints relative to the difficulty and danger experienced by vessels maneuvering in this portion of the channel have frequently been made in the past when the vessels using it were neither so great in number nor of so great draft. Vessels of comparatively small tonnage and moderate draft have experienced difficulty, delay, and damage in many cases by the insufficiency in width of channel of the area in question.

"Opposite three of the most important of the commercial wharves (Mallory, P. & O. Steamship Co., and Porter Dock Co.), and a scant 500 feet distant from the front of the Mallory Wharf, is the point of Frankford Bank at a depth of 19 feet at mean low water. For an available depth of 24 feet at this point the width is further reduced to 400 feet. When vessels are lying at these wharves—and they almost invariably are—the situation is further complicated by less available space in which the moving ship can maneuver without causing damage to other vessels or the risk of grounding themselves. The bottom throughout the length of this channel in front of all wharves with a depth exceeding 20 feet is bare rock.

"All vessels are compelled to turn in landing at or leaving the wharves; except under the most favorable conditions of wind and tide vessels of comparatively small tonnage are almost invariably delayed, and in many cases have been damaged, in making this turn; frequently they ground here, and in some cases have lain aground for several days—in one case for a week—and release themselves finally only by lightening ship by the removal of cargo or other weight.

"The improvement of the Main Ship Channel has permitted the entrance of larger and deeper draft vessels to the outer harbor. The benefits to shipping are not increased in corresponding degree by reason of the fact that these do not have access to the wharves for discharging or loading cargo or taking on fuel or to the inner harbor for shelter for lack of swinging room.

"The channel along the wharves is considered inadequate for safe and economical navigation by the masters of vessels now using it. It imposes prohibitive limitations to prospective expansion. Two new vessels are now building to be added to lines giving regular service to the port, one of which is considerably larger and deeper than any of the vessels previously used; the owners state that the channel is not adequate for the accommodation of this vessel. The port is being investigated and (contingent on its further improvement) is under consideration for a general coal and fuel-oil station for commercial shipping. Among the advantages claimed for it as a fuel port for bunkers are that it is only 6 miles off the regular course for all ships sailing from the Gulf to ports in the Eastern Hemisphere and that ships may load at all seasons to summer load line when bound to southern European ports as against the winter load-line limitation when bunkering north of Cape Hatteras during the winter season. It is stated as a fact by the interests who have investigated this question that the time saved and the extra cargo carried will offset the increased price of local coal. Because of the shorter haul, oil can be supplied here cheaper than at other ports where bunkering would be confined to local shipping.

"The commerce of the port is steadily increasing. During the year 1915 there was an increase of more than 50 per cent over the preceding year. Commerce during the current year has exceeded that for 1915 from present indications.

"The area proposed for improvement by the parties to the several communications is, in my opinion, unnecessarily large for present needs. It is my opinion, corroborated by the masters of vessels with whom I have consulted, that the removal of the southerly projection of Frankford Bank and the extensions formed by isolated shoal spots, will be adequate for the immediate requirements of ships now operating or under construction for this port. The depth should be 26 feet at mean low water. The removal of the southerly projection of the Middle Ground, while admittedly desirable for a commodious anchorage and for easy access to the Northwest Channel, is an undertaking of larger proportions than present necessity would warrant.

"Considering Key West and the territory immediately contiguous to it, with relation to commodities of purely local origin and destination, the productive possibilities now seem limited. Considered in its relation to transit freight and passengers and through shipping, its possibilities are very great. The present expansion of this business, in so far as it relates to shipments to the island of Cuba, has been limited only by the ability to provide equipment with sufficient rapidity to handle it. Large quantities of freight in transit to other Gulf ports are carried by vessels calling at Key West. This is not shown in the tabulation of commerce submitted for the port, yet the fact that deep-draft ships are enabled to make this a port of call, loaded to maximum draft, permits of the profitable operation of these ships.

"The deep harbor of Key West has made possible the salvage of many vessels that have suffered damage or disaster. Improvements offer possibilities of benefits not only to local commerce but to a vast quantity of general commerce navigating these waters.

"The channel in the inner harbor is inadequate for the class of vessels now operating. It imposes distinct limitations on prospective expansion. It is believed the consistent growth indicated in the past two years will steadily continue. I believe this improvement to be urgent and necessary to future development of the commerce of this port and recommend its favorable consideration."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN and Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlemen? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SEARS. Fifth indorsement is dated December 1, 1916, and is as follows:

The narrowness of the inner harbor, however, particularly at the point of the submerged bank opposite the Mallory Wharf, causes considerable difficulty in the handling of the large vessels now frequenting the port.

6. The improvement particularly desired by parties interested in this project is the removal of a strip along the eastern side of the lower end of Frankford Bank, opposite the city front, to a depth of 25 or 26 feet at mean low water, and of width sufficient to give ample space for large vessels to maneuver to and from the wharves. More broadly viewed, the removal to a depth of 26 feet, of the entire lower end of Frankford Bank and of the Middle Ground proper, south and east of a line extending northeastwardly through buoys N8 and C15 NW., is desired, with a view to greatly increasing the anchorage area opposite the town, and opening up the southern end of the Northwest Channel. Some of those favoring the improvement ask the removal of the entire area of both banks south of latitude 24° 34', as shown on the Coast Survey chart.

* * * * * * *

13. The width of the channel opposite the city water front is not sufficient for the safe maneuvering of large vessels. When a vessel is lying at the face of the Mallory Wharf the available space for large vessels to pass is inconveniently narrow, particularly when the tide is running strong. So long as the commerce of the port was small, and was handled in small vessels, this condition caused no serious complaint; but with the increase in size of ships and in the volume of the freight movement, the difficulties of navigation here have steadily increased. Vessels frequently ground on the submerged bank, with loss of time and sometimes more or less serious damage and expense for tug hire and lighterage. Forwarding agents claim that they have frequently been forced to decline proffered charters because the vessel offered could not reach the wharves with safety; and that large vessels that might touch at Key West with freight or to fill bunkers avoid the port on account of the lack of adequate channel room. Recently the Mallory Steamship Line put a fine new steamer, the Henry R. Mallory, on the Texas run. This steamer is 439 feet long and draws 23 feet, and is the first of several new boats of about this size which are to be put in this service soon. On November 7, on her first voyage, touching at Key West, she grounded heavily on the shoal opposite the wharves, and in consequence of this mishap the owners have decided not to send her to that port again while present conditions continue.

14. Key West is an important port for deep-sea export and import. Located at the entrance to the Gulf of Mexico, this port is a natural port of call for vessels in the Gulf trade and occupies an exceptionally favorable location for a large bunker business in both coal and oil. Key West is the continental United States port nearest to Cuba, and with the completion of the Florida East Coast Railway to Key West and the establishment of a daily railway car-ferry service to Habana the tonnage and value of imports and exports through the port in the Cuban trade have greatly increased.

* * * * * * *

16. I therefore report that in my opinion the harbor of Key West is worthy of further improvement by the removal of a portion of the southern end of Frankford Bank with a view to widening the channel of the inner harbor opposite the wharves, and recommend that a survey of the locality and the preparation of a plan of improvement, with an estimate of cost, be authorized.

W. B. LADUE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

I now desire to call your attention to the sixth and seventh indorsements, dated April 26 and 27, respectively, 1917, as follows. These may be found on pages 18 and 19:

8. In my opinion, the harbor of Key West is worthy of further improvement at this time to the extent of widening the channel through the inner harbor to 800 feet along the commercial water front, as shown by line D—E—C, the depth to be 26 feet at mean low water, at an estimated cost of $232,700; the first appropriation to be $150,000, with authority to enter into contract for the full amount of the estimate if reasonable and satisfactory bids are received, or to purchase, construct, or hire a suitable dredging plant and do the work therewith if it is found that an advantageous contract can not be made; the balance of the estimate to be appropriated in a single sum when needed.

W. B. LADUE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

OFFICE DIVISION ENGINEER, SOUTHEAST DIVISION,
April 27, 1917.

To the CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY:

1. Forwarded.

2. I concur in the views and recommendations of the district engineer officer in paragraphs 6, 7, and 8.

JOHN MILLIS,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

Both of above were made after war was declared. All of the preceding indorsement may be found in the document first referred to.

This is taken from my statement before the committee and may be found on page 6 of same:

In that connection I will say the importance of Key West is a matter which the members of the committee and Members of Congress should now recognize, and we should make this appropriation to prepare for the future. We have been criticized because we did not do so in the past. I happened to find a report, dated March 24, 1913, Sixty-third Congress, second session, made by Capt. Hayden, of the United States Navy. On pages 10 and 11, paragraphs 6 and 20, you find as follows:

"6. The remarkable and unique location of Key West, its naval command of the Straits of Florida and the Yucatan Channel, and thus of the entire Gulf of Mexico, its commercial and trade importance as the nearest railway terminal to all of the West Indies and Central and South America, all combine to make its future importance such an absolute certainty that immediate action to build the proposed inclosed naval basin and breakwater would seem imperative.

"20. It is very likely that our next great naval battle will be fought in these waters about Key West, or between Key West and the Panama Canal. That battle is going to convert about half a billion dollars' worth of dreadnaughts into junk and make the loser sue for peace at any cost of treasure, territory, and prestige. The efficiency of this naval base at Key West may determine the result of that battle."

The above, perhaps, has nothing to do with river and harbor improvements. However, you are all familiar with the part Key West played in the Spanish-American War, and I am satisfied the memorandum made by Capt. Hayden in 1913 impresses you of the importance of Key West from a strategical standpoint.

Years ago only small ships plied into Key West. They did not encounter much difficulty and could properly take care of the commerce at said harbor. However, this commerce has grown to such an extent the small boats are no longer able to take care of it and it is not safe for the large vessels to touch at said port.

Now, Mr. Chairman, last year I read to the committee a letter from Secretary Daniels, calling to their attention and to the attention of my colleagues the importance of Key West, from a strategic standpoint, the same being, in part, as follows: "The Navy Department fully appreciates the importance of Key West as an offensive and defensive base, and all the department's plans include Key West." Let me say the Naval Board believes Key West may be to the United States what Heligoland is to Germany, if we will simply take advantage of same and make the necessary improvements. But ships are being taken away because of the lack of improvements. We have there a naval base, coast artillery, and wireless. There are several thousand young men in training there. There is also an aviation station located there. And yet when I try to get some one to say this is a war necessity, they do not seem to realize it. A few days ago I went down to see the Assistant Director General about the shortage of cars, the citizens of my district being unable to get cars. Last year, because of conditions of Key West Harbor and shortage of ships, there were hundreds of cars at Key West waiting to be unloaded. There are to-day, no doubt, many cars there waiting for ships; and yet you say that this appropriation is not necessary. I want to say to my colleagues that some day this country will wake up to the importance of Key West and give to that site the appropriations that I believe it is entitled to. [Applause.]

We have just passed an amendment to the bill, presented by the chairman of the committee, in which he says that the item, although it will take three years to complete, is a war measure. I say to you again, my colleagues, I believe if I had time to read these reports to you in full I would convince you of the importance of Key West, and if there is a war measure in the present bill, Key West should be included, and I make this statement in all sincerity. I have always voted for every proposition I believed was right, whether it affected my district or not, and all I ask at your hands is the same fair treatment. I have never asked my colleagues to vote otherwise. I simply say to you that I believe my amendment is a most meritorious one; that it is a war measure, if there is such a thing as a war measure, and therefore I trust that you will vote for it. [Applause.]

And I want to say further that I shall never crawl to some board, and this is without any spirit of criticism, not elected by anybody, to get the indorsement of a project, in order that I may include it in a bill. If the indorsements such as I have read to you, 10 in number, from the Secretary of the Navy and all these officers, except the first, Lieut. Col. Ladue, made after we went into the war, indorsing the proposition, telling you the necessity and urgency of it, are not sufficient to convince my colleagues, it would be useless for me to go to some board that had never been to Florida and try to convince them. Let me briefly divert just here to tell you that during the latter part of February of this year a Government collie went ashore at Key West, remained aground all night, and only floated by assistance of tugs. I apologize for taking up this much of your time. As I said before, if you believe it is a meritorious proposition, that the commerce should not be held back, and that the same recognition to Key West, at one end of this great country of ours, should be given as we gave to that great city of New York, at the other end, I believe you gentlemen in the spirit of fairness will grant this appropriation for which I ask. [Applause.] I have not referred to the many letters I have received and the valuable information contained in them because I have not the time. However, I want to again remind you of the letter from the Mallory Steamship Co., which I read to you last year. I trust you will look it up as I have not time to read it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did the gentleman state how many steamship lines enter Key West?

Mr. SEARS. I did not. I forget the exact number, and can not tell without looking it up. I do not know as to lines, but for year 1916 there were about 5,000 American ships and 200 foreign. This includes arrivals and departures. There is quite a number. I believe, in going to Galveston and other Gulf ports, quite a large number of ships also pass, and most of those vessels could come in if this improvement was made. The principal commerce is from New York to Galveston, Cuba, and Central America.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are stops made at Gulf points and at Key West on the way around?

Mr. SEARS. They are, if they can stop.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know that commerce passing there is very large. I was wondering if the gentleman had any statistics on that point.

Mr. SEARS. It was $37,051,539 and 1,028,374 tons in 1917.

A few moments ago I called your attention to the fact that the prophecy I made last year has come true. That was if relief was not granted the Mallory Line would be compelled to withdraw their large steamer, and this has been done. I also called your attention to the grounding of a Government collier.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think there was another vessel in distress there a short time ago because of lack of water. What is the depth of the water?

Mr. SEARS. Nineteen feet for about 400 feet and about 26 feet for 300 feet, as I recall.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is contemplated by your amendment?

Mr. SEARS. This whole expenditure contemplates a width of 800 feet with a depth of 26 feet, and will not cost more than $232,700, as I understand the report of engineers.

Again, let me say, if with car after car waiting to be unloaded and waiting for ships; with boats being forced not to come to the harbor on account of lack of proper and necessary improvement; with Government vessels going aground and running the risk of being ruined; with Key West recommended by naval experts as the place for a torpedo-boat destroyer and submarine base; with Key West designated a place for permanent seacoast defense; with all the Government war activities and holdings there; with her importance as a coaling and oil port; and with others not mentioned, does not constitute a war measure, then I would like to see one. I am satisfied my colleagues will support the amendment, because it is entitled to their support, and I hope and believe the able chairman of the committee will not oppose same.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made an interesting speech and a pleasant impression, and if that were controlling the committee might be inclined to vote for his amendment.

But, unfortunately, this is the condition affecting this amendment: This is a new project. In the formulation of the last river and harbor act, approved August 8, 1917, no new projects were included in the bill except such as were intimately associated with the prosecution of the war, and so recommended by the Secretary of War. The committee adopted that same policy in the formulation of this bill.

Now, gentlemen say that that is somewhat arbitrary. They say it is delegating an unusual discretion to an officer of the Government. But I think that if gentlemen were to consider very carefully they would decide that it was as fair and consistent a method as could be devised.

Now, let us see what would happen if the committee were to adopt this amendment, putting this new project into the bill, which does not come within the policy adopted by the committee in the formulation of the bill. Quite a number of new projects were insistently urged before the committee. I need mention only one. I see before me the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUFKIN], who came before us more than once with a delegation asking for the adoption of a new project for Beverly Harbor, Mass. We did not disparage the new project for Beverly; neither do we disparage the new project for Key West. In good time they will be adopted, and they will be constructed.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. We have been told that since 1913, since Key West has been able to get recognition from the River and Harbor Committee, of which the gentleman is chairman. I believe it will carry, but when can I assure them that it will be done?

Mr. SMALL. If the gentleman will tell me when this war will close I could more intelligently answer his question.

Now, as I was saying, we have in the consideration of this bill passed that part of the bill where it would be in order to offer an amendment adopting the new project for Beverly Harbor, Mass., and any Member could object to returning to the bill in order that an amendment might be offered to include it. Not only that, but there are others. In other words, if you depart from the policy of the committee, you open up a condition which may endanger the passage of any river and harbor bill at this session.

Now, here are the reasons for this policy: We are in a time of war. We are constantly told that we must not engage in any activities other than for the war, which require the employment of capital, the purchase of material, or the use of labor, and this policy was adopted. It is obviously fair, it was wise and just, and it has been applied without sectionalism, without any personal predilections, and without any partisanship to the entire country. The application of this policy affected Massachusetts and Florida and Louisiana and all other sections of the country, so that the gentleman who represents the Key West district in Florida is not alone in the position that he occupies in not having this new project adopted.

I hope the committee will not agree to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was this project approved by the engineers?

Mr. SMALL. Oh, yes. It has gone through all the processes, and has received the final approval of the Chief of Engineers, and has been sent to Congress by the Secretary of War in the regular way, just as the project for Beverly Harbor and others.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What stands against it from your committee viewpoint is that it has not been recommended as a war proposition?

Mr. SMALL. As a war measure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman if the committee has considered the fact that several vessels have been in distress and, I believe, one wrecked, by reason of the fact that they did not have a sufficient depth of harbor at that place?

Mr. SMALL. I have no personal knowledge of that, but I will say this, that Key West has 30 feet in the main channel and 17 feet in the northwest channel. This is simply to widen the channel in front of the wharves.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SMALL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 46, noes 23.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks for tellers.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-six Members are present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Dies	Garland	Ireland
Austin	Donovan	Garrett, Tenn.	James
Borland	Dooling	Godwin, N. C.	Johnson, S. Dak.
Brumbaugh	Doughton	Good	Johnson, Wash.
Byrnes, S. C.	Dowell	Goodall	Jones, Va.
Campbell, Pa.	Drukker	Gould	Juul
Carew	Dunn	Griffin	Kahn
Chandler, N. Y.	Edmonds	Hamilton, N. Y.	Kearns
Classon	Elliott	Harrison, Miss.	Kelley, Mich.
Cooper, Ohio	Estopinal	Hayes	Kelly, Pa.
Copley	Fairchild, B. L.	Heaton	Kettner
Costello	Fairchild, G. W.	Heflin	Key, Ohio
Crago	Flynn	Heintz	Kiess, Pa.
Curry, Cal.	Foss	Helvering	Knutson
Darrow	Fuller, Ill.	Hensley	Kreider
Davidson	Gallagher	Hicks	LaGuardia
Davis	Gallivan	Hollingsworth	Larsen
Decker	Gandy	Hood	Lobeck
McAndrews	Polk	Sanders, N. Y.	Talbott
McClintic	Porter	Saunders, Va.	Taylor, Colo.
McCulloch	Pou	Scott, Iowa	Templeton
McLaughlin, Pa.	Powers	Scott, Pa.	Tinkham
McLemore	Rainey	Sherley	Towner
Mann	Ramsey	Shouse	Van Dyke
Meeker	Rankin	Slayden	Vare
Mondell	Reavis	Smith, C. B.	Voigt
Montague	Riordan	Smith, T. F.	Volstead
Moon	Roberts	Snyder	Walker
Morin	Robinson	Stedman	Webb
Mudd	Rose	Stephens, Nebr.	Woodyard
Neely	Rowland	Sterling, Pa.
Norton	Rucker	Stevenson
Parker, N. Y.	Sabath	Strong

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill, H. R. 10069, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called, when 302 Members, a quorum, answered to their names, and he reported the names of the absentees to be entered on the Journal and RECORD.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I think the demand for tellers is first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from North Carolina demands tellers on the amendment of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BOOHER and Mr. SEARS.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to have the amendment reported again. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment of Mr. SEARS was again reported.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 99, noes 76.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mobile Harbor and Bar, and channel connecting Mobile Bay and Mississippi Sound, Ala.: For maintenance, $160,000; continuing improvement of Mobile Harbor and Bar, $100,000; in all, $260,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, line 10, strike out the numerals "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$200,000"; and in the same line strike out the numerals "$260,000" and insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$360,000."

Mr. GRAY of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides for Mobile Harbor and Bar and the channel connecting Mobile Bay and Mississippi Sound. The bill as reported carries $160,000 for maintenance and $100,000 for further improvement of Mobile Harbor and Bar. These appropriations were based upon the recommendations in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers.

On March 22 the Chief of Engineers sent a communication to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, making a recommendation to the effect that the appropriation for Mobile be increased $100,000, so that the total appropriation, instead of $260,000, will be $360,000. I will send up a letter from the Chief of Engineers recommending this increased appropriation and will ask to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, March 22, 1918.

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMALL: 1. I am just in receipt of a report from the district engineer at Mobile, Ala., indicating that the amount carried in the pending river and harbor bill for that port should be increased, if practicable. The present amount, $260,000, was based upon the estimates made by the district engineer last July to cover simply the operation of the Government dredging plant for the next fiscal year, it being considered impracticable either to build an additional dredge at this time on account of the state of the shipbuilding market, or to have work done by contract on account of the limitation imposed by law forbidding contracts at a cost in excess of 25 per cent over the cost of doing the work with Government plant.

2. The district engineer now reports that there has been a large increase within the last few months in the cost of operating the Government plant. The cost of fuel, for instance, has gone up about 100 per cent, and the cost of other supplies and of repairs and wages has also increased to a marked extent. He, therefore, recommends that the estimate for Mobile Harbor be increased by $100,000 in order to make adequate provision for the operation of the Government dredges and the prosecution of the improvement as rapidly as this plant will permit, until another appropriation can be made available by Congress at its next session.

3. In view of these circumstances, it is recommended that this item in the bill be amended so as to increase the amount of the appropriation from $260,000 to $360,000.

Very truly, yours,

FREDERIC V. ABBOT,
Brigadier General, Engineers,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, as stated, this amendment simply covers the increased estimate sent in by the Chief of Engineers, made necessary by reason of the conditions set forth in his letter. I ask for a vote.

Mr. GRAY of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRAY] offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. GRAY of Alabama: Strike out all on page 7, line 10, after the word "bar," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$700,000; in all, $860,000."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a question of how much shall be appropriated for the maintenance and further improvement of Mobile Harbor and Bar. The amount carried in the bill plus the amendment which I added for $100,000 additional, based upon a later estimate, is all that the engineers say they can profitably and wisely expend until June 30, 1919, and any sum more than that is unnecessary and has no recommendation and will not be expended. No one disputes the importance of Mobile——

Mr. GRAY of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. GRAY of Alabama. How does the gentleman know they can not expend it; just a mere opinion of the engineers?

Mr. SMALL. I know it because the Chief of Engineers, after a careful investigation, reports that it is all he can possibly expend, and as the money has to be expended under his supervision he is best qualified to express an opinion.

Mr. GRAY of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield further right there?

Mr. FREAR. Was not that statement also made by Col. Newcomer before our committee?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; and repeated by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. GRAY of Alabama. I wanted to ask the gentleman: Suppose that the Government could get two other dredges at some point on the Gulf and put there at Mobile. Does the gentleman presume that it could not be wisely spent if they could get the dredges from some other place?

Mr. SMALL. Why, in answer to that, if we are going to make appropriations based on suppositions on the hiring of dredges or getting them from some other sources, or if we are going to speculate as to what might be spent, we would have no stable basis upon which to predicate the appropriation. This estimate was made in the same manner as all other estimates for improvements throughout the country.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. When was the $260,000 estimate made?

Mr. SMALL. That was submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. BURNETT. Made when?

Mr. SMALL. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917. It was printed and submitted to Congress at the convening of this session in December last. The estimate will be found in the first volume of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. BURNETT. As a matter of fact, they have moved up the estimates $100,000 in a few months?

Mr. SMALL. Based entirely, if the gentleman heard the letter from the Chief of Engineers, on the condition stated there.

Mr. BURNETT. Did not the same condition in the December——

Mr. SMALL. That is based entirely on the increased cost of labor and material.

Mr. BURNETT. What does the district engineer recommend?

Mr. SMALL. He recommended a larger sum.

Mr. BURNETT. How much?

Mr. SMALL. His recommendation was over $700,000. However, I am coming to that. It was originally contemplated when this new project for Mobile Harbor was adopted that the Government would construct a new dredge, but since our entrance into this war it has been deemed a wise policy by this committee that we should not construct any new dredges.

At a time when the United States Shipping Board was straining every nerve in the securing of labor and material for the construction of merchant ships for our use during the period of the war, it was deemed unwise and unpatriotic to embark the War Department in the construction of new dredges. And a good part of that appropriation—and I will not attempt to go into details—is for the construction of a new dredge, and I might say that a dredge now costs about twice as much as it did in 1914. Now, coming to this appropriation that is recommended, it is based upon what can be expended during the next fiscal year by the use of the Government plant at Mobile. This is all they can spend, based upon the best estimate of the cost of labor and material for the operation of the Government plant. And we ought not to appropriate any more than can be spent. Some gentleman has said, "Could not we hire dredges from some other station on the Gulf?" No. We examined the Chief of Engineers, or his representative, upon that point, and he reported there was no dredge which could be secured.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. So, Mr. Chairman, expressed in a nutshell, this amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRAY] seeks an appropriation for a larger sum than is estimated, and there is no appropriation in this bill, either for maintenance or further improvement, in excess of the amount estimated by the Chief of Engineers for each improvement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude with this comment: The River and Harbor Committee formulated this bill along lines which they believed represented the best sentiment of the House and of the country. It has been formulated further along lines which had the approval of the Secretary of War and of the President. The President in several conferences which I and other members of the committee had with him, after mature reflection advised as strongly as he could the construction of this bill along the lines which were followed by the committee. The Committee of the Whole has just adopted a new project for Key West, contrary to the policy of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; that is to say, it had not been recommended as a war necessity. We are going to ask at the end of this bill that a separate vote be had in order that the House may determine what its policy shall be. If the House wishes a large bill, then let it vote for a motion to recommit this bill to the committee, and we will with pleasure construct a bill adopting a number of new projects, if you think it will meet with the Executive approval.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. We, as members of the committee, have not formulated this bill without a struggle. If I might make a personal reference, I will say that there is no Member of this House who has been more besieged by his own constituents for new projects than the chairman of this committee has been. But believing that this policy was wise, that it reflected the sentiment of the House, I resolved that I would be a good soldier, and I told my constituents the policy which we had adopted, and that they must abide by it.

But if this policy does not meet with the approval of the House, if you wish us to formulate a bill relieved of these limitations, it is only for the House to say so. Then if we come to a yea-and-nay vote on a separate proposition, and you want to go outside the policy and adopt the project for Key West and other amendments to this bill, you can say so, and then rerefer the bill to the committee, and we will follow the final judgment of the House in the formulation of this bill.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Has not the gentleman stated in the committee that any such bill would not meet the approval of the Executive, and have not letters been received from the Secretary of War opposing such amendments?

Mr. SMALL. I doubt the propriety of quoting the President. He never told me that he would not approve the bill, and if he had told me I doubt the propriety of quoting him.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I yield to the gentleman. The other gentleman began speaking before I had yielded to him.

Mr. DUPRÉ. That was characteristic of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMALL. I did not intend that the House should draw that inference.

Mr. FREAR. I understood that the gentleman had yielded to me, or I would not have addressed him.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman from Wisconsin always obeys these amenities. I was about to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question, since certain things are being stated about what happened in the committee, whether he would be permitted to say how unanimous and enthusiastic the vote was not to include any new projects in the bill?

Mr. SMALL. I do not think it would be within the rules to discuss what occurred in the committee or how the members of the committee voted. The committee voted to report this bill by a large majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Does the gentleman desire me to get further time or will he get it in his own right?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I trust that the gentleman from Tennessee, in the chair, will give me some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I trust that I violate none of the proprieties, so carefully observed by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], when I say that upon the roll call on the final report of this bill I was the only member of the committee who voted against a favorable report thereon. When I found that my colleague from Wisconsin had not even registered his vote against it I felt quite sure that I was right in voting against a favorable report. [Laughter.] I did not vote against a favorable report on the bill because there was any item in it to which I objected. I voted against it because I objected primarily to the manner in which the bill had been constructed.

There have been denunciations in the past, in which, I think, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] possibly has indulged, and certainly in which I have engaged, against lump-sum appropriations. Well, I can not see the difference, and I do not care to look into differences that do not make a difference, that have not substance, between a lump-sum appropriation put over at the point of capitulation in the Senate to the garrulity of those old gentlemen who occupy these high places and this bill that has been reported from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of which I happen to have the honor to be a member. [Laughter.] I do not see any difference between a lump-sum appropriation bill written in the law and one that is practically and truly written in the law when we have a representative of the Chief of Engineers coming to our committee and saying, "Well, I approve of this; I approve of that." And I use the personal pronoun probably erroneously, and certainly not offensively, because certainly the gentleman who represented the Chief of Engineers, and through him the Secretary of War, was as fine a type of the Corps of Engineers as I know. But what I resent—and that is the primary basis of my objection to this bill—is that the representative of the Chief of Engineers should come to the committee and say, as he did:

> My corps is under pledge to the Secretary of War not to put into this bill anything that we do not think is necessary to the prosecution of the war and its early and successful prosecution to a finish.

Apparently the House has been disagreeing with this gentleman, disagreeing with the chairman of my committee, disagreeing with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], disagreeing with the conclusions of the committee, for it has decided that the amendment that was not proposed in the committee by the gentleman from New York, my friend DEMPSEY, should prevail. They have decided that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] should also prevail, and of course I have heard of the combination of North and South before. I am not talking about any other combinations. It looks to me as if, considering the Mobile item here—and I can not forecast what will be its result—possibly the suggestion of the chairman, that this bill be recommitted, might not be altogether indefensible. [Laughter.]

I voted against the bill in committee, and I think if I had something to say and I could get some of my colleagues to agree with me on the committee, I might report a bill here that my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] might approve. [Laughter.] It has been truly appealing to me to see him taking up the cudgels for river and harbor improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I hope my friend from Illinois will secure me a few minutes more.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana may have five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman from Illinois responded to my suggestion as handsomely as I thought he would. He has been the friend of river and harbor legislation—God save us from our friends—in the past. [Laughter.] And now he is the champion of improving this bill.

He certainly was the Deus machina yesterday that brought the Dempsey amendment to favorable consideration. I hope that the people of Illinois will recognize his merit in future senatorial aspirations. [Applause.] The Constitution limits the people of a State in voting for Senators, and it also limits the people of a State in voting for Congressmen beyond the borders of the State; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is at large, and I hope that the people of New York will remember his gladsome services in the development of that harbor. [Laughter.] For my part I will say that I bore the adoption of that amendment with considerable Christian fortitude. [Laughter.] And I did not mind when Key West was recognized this afternoon, though I felt constrained, under the ethics of the situation, to vote against both of those propositions. But I would suggest hereafter when we have a rivers and harbors bill to frame—and possibly we may have to reframe it now—that we have a composition in bankruptcy among the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in getting the bill put before the House. You never can tell how the House feels about a bill. Sometimes it thinks a bill is too large, and certainly in the last day or two it has shown that it thinks this one is niggardly, inadequate, and unworthy, and that is the reason why I voted against the measure. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I know the House has been delighted with the statement made by my friend from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ], who is a very genial member of the committee and of the House. To my mind, though, the Members of this House have more to think of than the few quips and turns which he gave in this discussion.

The Army engineers have made an effort to hold this bill within limits. I wanted to express my approval of it. There are things in the bill that I do not like. I can not believe they are justified, even from the ordinary understanding; but the efforts of the Army engineers to hold this bill within limitations ought to be supported by this House. I watched as Members went between the tellers, and nearly every man who has supported "pork" propositions in the past went through here laughing and chuckling because the committee bill was being broken down. I do not say all did, because there are some men who are undoubtedly just as honest in purpose as I am. [Laughter and cries of "Oh, no!"] Well, many of you, I want to tell you, can not defend your records; I care not what you say.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Not against your criticism, in your judgment.

Mr. FREAR. That is all right. I will not question the honesty of anyone; but let me say this: I do not care what your action may be; only one man on that side of the House has risen in an effort to prevent the passage of these amendments. Break down this bill if you choose, get the "pork" into it if you choose.

If you feel that you are engaging in any service for the benefit of this Government at a time when we are sending men all over this country trying to raise money to finance the war, when you support projects like one and the other that are being urged here against the report of the Army engineers, you have a right to so vote, but I can not understand how you do it. I have no more interest in this than has the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ]. I can not express here what occurred in the committee as to the understanding of the probabilities of this bill being enacted into law. I hope that it will be; that is, if it is gotten through in a fair way. I would that we could get the bill through in some fair form. But let me say to you, gentlemen——

Mr. DUPRÉ. I think the gentleman is justified in saying that. I say that in all kindness.

Mr. FREAR. I just want to say this, in conclusion, that I have tried to defeat these bills in the past and I have succeeded once or twice in exposing some of the scandalous conditions in them. I have been opposed very frankly and very bitterly at times on this floor. In fact, a few moments ago a gentleman expressed himself very intensely because he was not getting enough in his case for his State. But it makes no difference. I feel that I am doing what is right, and that must be the guide for every man. Gentlemen on the Democratic side, I want to say to you that you and your party have got to go before the country soon. Let it be understood that only one man rose on the Democratic side to oppose these amendments. We are trying the best we can to keep this bill within reasonable confines. You can sweep us off our feet. You can bring in your amendments here unquestionably, but it is a dangerous thing to do, to vote against the report of the Army engineers, who have sought to provide a bill here in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of War and that it be kept within war limits.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Have not the gentleman's friends on his side been largely responsible for such amendments to this bill as have prevailed?

Mr. FREAR. Not only that, but I will say that I am not the guider of the consciences of the gentlemen on this or the other side, many of whom have voted for some of these amendments.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How about being the guardian of the consciences on the gentleman's own side?

Mr. FREAR. Of course, no party lines ought to be drawn. Let me say this, that when the chairman of the committee is the only gentleman on that side rising to oppose this $500,000 increase in appropriation, and these amendments are going through, one after another, you of the dominant party must accept the full responsibility. You did not give anything extra for New York—that was a question of phraseology, voting for it to be put through at this time—but you are here putting in new and unjustified appropriations, adding to the bill until it is likely to fall from the increased weight.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Not now. You can break down the bill, possibly, as the chairman of the committee says; you can send it back, but I warn you that you will not want to go before the country on such a proposition.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRAY] simply provides a larger appropriation for a project that now has the unqualified approval of the Board of Engineers as well as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The present bill carries an appropriation for this work, and the sum called for in the amendment is well within the estimated ultimate cost of this approved and adopted project. The very fact that the present bill carries an appropriation for this work is conclusive evidence of its importance and that it is regarded as a war necessity.

The only reason assigned by the engineers for not recommending a larger appropriation at this time is apprehension on their part that a sufficient number of dredges may not be secured to complete the work during the next fiscal year. If the necessary dredges can not be had, then the appropriation will not be used. In view of the importance of the work, sufficient funds should be provided for the vigorous prosecution of the same if dredges can be secured for this purpose.

The same condition obtains here that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] points out obtained at New York, and which caused the House on yesterday to vote an increased sum over that recommended by the Board of Engineers. It is a matter of great importance that the 30-foot channel at the port of Mobile be deepened at the earliest possible time. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRAY] has called attention to the large shipbuilding operations now being carried on at Mobile, and to the further fact that a new company is now preparing to expend from twelve to fourteen million dollars for an additional large shipyard there. The letter from the Shipping Board read by the gentleman from Alabama clearly shows the interest that the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation feel in the deepening of the channel at this port.

The Shipping Board has already let a number of large contracts for the building of ships at Mobile, and additional contracts will be let. An unlimited amount of fine shipbuilding timber is available to the yards at this port, within a distance of 240 miles, with all-year river and rail connection therefrom. Two large lumber mills in my district, about 200 miles by river from Mobile, are now supplying large quantities of timber for ships being built at Mobile, and some of this timber is being carried on barges down the Warrior River.

I desire to call attention to the further fact that an inexhaustible amount of bunker steam coal in quality equal to that supplied to vessels at Norfolk and Philadelphia is in close proximity to Mobile and can be transported there by both rail and water. Labor conditions are excellent, and this fact, coupled with the ready availability of coal and timber, emphasize the supreme importance of deepending and widening this channel at once.

The district engineer is not in accord with the Board of Engineers as to the amount of money that can be wisely expended during the next fiscal year, and his report indicates that the amount asked for in the amendment now under consideration can be wisely expended. In view then of the excellent shipbuilding facilities at Mobile, its nearness to timber and coal, I feel confident, if the required appropriation is now made to complete the channel, that sufficient dredges will be forthcoming to do the work. Dredges from other places, not so well provided with labor and facilities for building ships as Mobile, can and will be diverted.

Vessels with a draft of 30 feet are now under construction at this port, which fact strongly argues the importance of pushing to early completion the work of deepening and widening the channel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, can we not have an understanding as to when we shall have a vote on this paragraph and all amendments thereto? I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in two minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Will not the gentleman allow me five minutes?

Mr. SMALL. Then make it seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall close in seven minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Two minutes to be used by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and five minutes by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If they are building ships with 30 feet draft at Mobile and you have only a 26-foot channel, how are they going to get them out of there? And, also, I would ask if there is any wisdom in the determination of the Shipping Board to build ships of such a draft at such a place?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The 30-foot draft applies to the loaded vessel; unloaded there will be no trouble in getting out through the 26-foot channel.

It is of the greatest importance, however, that ships should be loaded at a great supply port like Mobile, and not be required after completion to leave empty.

This bill commits Congress to a 30-foot channel at Mobile, and if you will now supply the necessary funds for this work the dredges, in my judgment, will be forthcoming to complete it at the earliest possible time.

I invite the attention of the Members to the following data in reference to Mobile, which I incorporated some time since in the hearings before the Naval Committee:

Mobile's claims for consideration as a site for large shipbuilding yards are based upon the fact that she possesses in preeminent degree all the qualifications necessary, viz, strategic location, defensive works, abundance of skilled and unskilled labor, and near vicinity to raw materials used in construction, as well as being favored with a mild climate, which permits of outside work all the year round.

Mobile not only enjoys water transportation from the coal and iron districts of Alabama, but is the nearest Gulf port to all the great manufactured iron and steel centers of the country.

The surrounding country is not subject to inundation, and traffic is not disturbed by weather conditions at any period of the year.

Mobile possesses the following advantages:

Located 30 miles from Gulf; safe from sea attack; entrance to Mobile Bay protected by two forts.

Mild climate, permitting outside construction the year round.

Surrounding country not subject to inundation.

Undisturbed by rise and fall of tide (1.4 feet average tide).

Two sources of transportation, viz, rail and water.

Five railroads operating from coal and iron districts to Mobile, also reaching directly and indirectly the greatest manufacturing cities of the United States.

All-year navigation on rivers, guaranteeing iron, coal, and timber supply to Mobile should railroads fail in crisis.

More skilled machinist labor than any Gulf port.

More ship carpenters, calkers, etc., than rest Gulf ports combined.

More foundries and boiler works than any other Gulf port.

More iron, coal, and timber located upon Alabama's inland waterways, reaching Mobile, than is available to any other Gulf port.

Cheapest inland water transportation of any Gulf port.

Lowest basis of rail rates enjoyed by any Gulf port, and lower rates from iron and coal districts of Alabama than other Gulf ports west of Mobile enjoy, guaranteeing cheapest raw materials.

Over 27 feet of water at mean low tide from Gulf to Mobile, and with very little work, estimated at not exceeding 50 days of dredging, the entire channel can be made available for vessels with a draft of 30 feet.

Fresh water.
Summed up, Mobile has the best location on the Gulf; has advanced over all other Gulf ports in quantity and quality of its skilled labor (machinist and shipbuilding), and is nearest port by rail and water to great iron, coal, and timber supply of Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the proposition involved in this amendment is, if this $850,000 is authorized and is not used it remains in the Treasury. If, on the other hand, dredges can be obtained and the money is not authorized, then the work has to stop. The Government takes no chances, loses no money, and yet the work itself takes a very serious chance if the authorization is not given. In addition to what my friend from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] has said, I want to emphasize this fact. There are plants for the construction of ships at Mobile, some of which ships will be of 30 feet draft, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks how they will get them out. They can get them out empty, but the Government does not want them sent out empty, and that is one reason for deepening this channel. At that great port there are millions of tons of coal, millions of feet of lumber, and other things that can be shipped every year, and these ships that are now being built there ought not to be forced to go away from the great coal-producing section of the south and of the country to other ports to be loaded. That is the common sense proposition involved here. The Government takes no chances on the expenditure of the money, but the Government does take a chance, it seems to me, if the authorization is not made, because, if the dredges can be obtained, then they will soon run up against the proposition that they have no money to continue the work on the channel.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. For a question.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is not the gentleman's argument equally applicable to the development of the Charleston Channel?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know. I did not hear the discussion on that item.

Mr. DUPRÉ. The gentleman was not concerned about that.

Mr. BURNETT. I am concerned about everything that is in the interest of winning this war and getting the ships and getting them loaded and getting them out to help win it.

Mr. DUPRÉ. In Alabama?

Mr. BURNETT. Anywhere; it does not make any difference where. I have not a cent in this bill. The great river that I live on is an inland river, with obstructions in the center and no navigation to Mobile Bay. I have no pork in the bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] can not shake his gory locks at me and yell about pork, because there is not a dollar of pork in it for me; but I am arguing for a just cause in the interest of getting ships built quickly, ships gotten out quickly from the place where they are to be made and put into use and laden with coal when we carry them out. Mr. McAdoo recognizes the congested conditions in all the north Atlantic ports, and he himself has said that there should be a considerable shifting to the ports of the South in order to relieve the congestion in the north Atlantic.

Now, gentlemen, how can you shift that condition, how can you remove that congestion, unless you afford ample port facilities through which our exports may be made from our section of the country as well as every other section of the country? Recommendation has been made, as I understand, to divert a large amount of foodstuffs that are being produced in the Middle West to the ports of the South in order to relieve congested conditions elsewhere. We remember the congestion in the transportation of coal last winter. We recollect how the cry went up all over the country that there was not sufficient means of transportation to carry coal to keep the women and children of this country from freezing; and yet here is a proposition right at the foot of the great coal-producing section of the country, and you propose to tie it up and hem up a port there, so that it will not be able to allow the ships to go out or in laden with products for which all of this country is crying. Mr. Chairman, this seems to me to be peculiarly a question of war emergency. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] holds as a sword of Damocles over us the threat that if we are going to put amendments on this bill it will be recommitted to the committee. Well, those kind of threats never have scared me. If this House believes that there has been a mistake made by the committee, or even by as high officials as the Board of Engineers back of it, it ought without hesitation to correct that mistake. Is there not a report of the district engineer, the man on the ground, the man who knows more about it, probably, than the Board of Engineers who are sitting here in their chairs in Washington? I hope the recommendation of that engineer will prevail in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And all other cases, because I have read some the gentleman would not like.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. GRAY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GRAY of Alabama) there were—ayes 17, noes 49.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if it is not about time for us to rise.

Mr. SMALL. I think so.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am very glad to see the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Illinois are in accord.

Mr. SMALL. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the requests of the gentlemen? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. I want to say for the information of the committee that as I understand it this bill will not be taken up to-morrow, but on Friday.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10069, the rivers and harbors appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal on to-morrow that Senate joint resolution 123, known as the quota or amendment to the draft law, be considered in order until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that what is called the quota bill, Senate joint resolution 123, be taken up to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and shall be the continuing order until it is completed. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how much general debate he proposes?

Mr. DENT. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Committee on Military Affairs asked for five hours' general debate, and the Committee on Rules have tentatively agreed to a rule on this proposition with three hours' of general debate. On account of the number of gentlemen who wanted to speak on it I am going to ask that a compromise be made of four hours' general debate.

Mr. GILLETT. I think that will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask that now?

Mr. DENT. I will ask that now.

Mr. SMALL. Reserving the right to object, just a moment, we expect to go on with the river and harbor bill on Friday morning. Suppose this draft bill is not completed to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. If this request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is agreed to, they will go on with the quota bill if it extends beyond to-morrow.

Mr. DENT. We certainly ought to finish the bill in six hours, because it will not take long, I will state to the gentleman from North Carolina, to read the bill. It is not very long.

Mr. SMALL. Could not the gentleman couple with his request for unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. DENT. I would not like to do that in view of the fact that the members of the Military Committee who are not here have not been consulted on this proposition, and they expect to be here at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of business on the Speaker's table, that Senate resolution No. 123 shall be taken up for consideration, with four hours for general debate, and that the resolution shall be the continuing order until disposed of. Is there objection?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object to this bill which the chairman says is important, but at the same time I think the river and harbor bill has some rights in the House. We would like to take it up on Friday.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that in my own judgment this bill will be disposed of in one day. But the gentleman knows that no Member of the House can predict what is going to happen.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman amend his unanimous consent so as not to continue longer than 2 o'clock on Friday?

Mr. MADDEN. You can not do that.

Mr. DENT. I would not like to do that. I am sure the bill ought to be disposed of long before that.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman makes the request I will have to object, because I think the most important thing before the country is the bill the gentleman is asking to take up for consideration, and it ought to be disposed of without anything else intervening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, in view of what I consider to be the importance of this bill in connection with the war, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLER of Washington, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for April 11, 12, 13, and 14, 1918, on account of taking part in the liberty-loan campaign.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating the program adopted by the interallied Socialists at the conference held in London last February.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating the platform agreed to by the interallied Socialists in London last February. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, how long is this?

Mr. LONDON. It is from 4 to 6 pages. I think it will make about 2 pages of the RECORD. It is a very important document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, who stated that this is a very important document, what particular bearing or importance it has in the present emergency in which this country finds itself now?

Mr. LONDON. It has the greatest bearing, because it is a statement by the Socialists of France, England, and Italy on the objects and aims of the war, showing their support of the war and indorsing the main principles of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a proposed clause of legislation reappropriating for the fiscal year 1919 the balance of the appropriation for Mount Rainier National Park for 1918 which may remain unexpended at the close of the year (H. Doc. No. 1033), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BURNETT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 204) to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the District Court of the Northern District of California and its officers, and making an appropriation therefor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 482), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10609) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 483), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. POLK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11364) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 481), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 11361) to confer on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels, and for other puposes; to the Committee on the Mechant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11362) to amend the shipping act approved September 7, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a United States Shipping Board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval auxiliary and naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its Territories and possessions, and with foreign countries; to regulate carriers by water in the foreign and interstate commerce of the United States; and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. LONERGAN: A bill (H. R. 11363) to amend paragraph 2 of section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 11365) to make The Star-Spangled Banner the national anthem of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 11366) authorizing the Secretary of War to provide for medical treatment and hospital care of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees in the Military Establishment while on furlough, necessitated by disability originating in the line of duty; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SEARS: A bill (H. R. 11367) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: A bill (H. R. 11368) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for a certain-described tract of land; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BAER: A bill (H. R. 11369) to provide for the national security and defense and further to assure an adequate supply of food by authorizing the Department of Agriculture to aid in the control of flood waters of the Red River Valley of the North in the States of Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota, thereby increasing the areas of land suitable for the production of foodstuffs; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ROBBINS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 278) proposing the removal of certain Government departments from the city of Washington; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Resolution (H. Res. 306) for the consideration of S. 3388; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. LUFKIN: Memorial of the General Court of Massachusetts, requesting Congress to provide for public ownership and operation of coal mines; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. TAGUE: Memorial of the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring free transportation for all soldiers and sailors in the service of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of the General Court of the Commonwealth of the State of Massachusetts, requesting the Congress to provide for public ownership and operation of coal mines; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. POLK: A bill (H. R. 11364) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; committed to the Committee of the Whole House.

By Mr. BARKLEY: A bill (H. R. 11370) granting a pension to Christie Jones and Goldfish Jones; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 11371) granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Emory; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11372) granting a pension to Thomas Epert; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 11373) granting an increase of pension to Obadiah McGuire; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 11374) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Nichols; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOMINICK: A bill (H. R. 11375) for the relief of Hassie Cantrell; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. EMERSON: A bill (H. R. 11376) granting a pension to Charles W. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ESTOPINAL: A bill (H. R. 11377) for the relief of Laurence L. Faure; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 11378) granting a pension to Charles H. Johnson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11379) granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Waugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 11380) granting a pension to Charles Francis Gilroy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 11381) granting an increase of pension to J. M. Pike; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 11382) granting an increase of pension to Absalom A. Lusk; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McARTHUR: A bill (H. R. 11383) granting a pension to Mary R. Mellinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 11384) granting an increase of pension to Charles S. Shepard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11385) for the relief of Albert Hamilton; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. ROMJUE: A bill (H. R. 11386) granting an increase of pension to Addie Burns; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11387) granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. McKay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STERLING of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11388) granting a pension to Hannah E. Cline; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN: A bill (H. R. 11389) granting a pension to John L. C. Ellis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WOOD of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 11390) granting a pension to John S. Salisbury; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11391) granting an increase of pension to William Burgess; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial of the Committee of Six of New York City, favoring the passage of Senate bill 2917, for increasing the number of chaplains in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the mass meeting of the loyal citizens of Chicago, commending President Wilson for placing the American troops under Commander Gen. Foch; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the district conference, International Association of Rotary Clubs, Hutchison, Kans., favoring the construction of swimming pools at various Army training camps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of E. C. Johnson and 18 other citizens of Union, Mo., protesting against the lowering of the price of corn by the United States Food Administration; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of St. Johns Valley Farm Club, protesting against the lowering of the price of corn by the influence of the United States Food Administration; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the Macedonia (Mo.) Farm Club and J. H. Guese and six other citizens of New Haven, Mo., protesting against the lowering of the price of corn by the United States Food Administration; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, opposing legislation looking to the reemployment of convict labor in the manufacture, etc.; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. CAREW: Petition in opposition to the zone system as applied to second-class mail matter passed by the executive committee of the Authors' League of America (Inc.); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CARY: Memorial of American Peat Society of New York, relative to the development of the natural resources of nitrogen; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Also, petitions of the junior class, Seneca (Wis.) High School, and River City Lodge, No. 108, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, Portsmouth, Ohio, protesting against zone system of postal rates on periodicals and newspapers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, opposing the Tavenner bill, H. R. 8665; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of Mendota Woman's Club, of Mendota, Ill., protesting against zone system and demanding its repeal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of New York Produce Exchange, favoring continued use of the pneumatic-tube mail-distributing service in New York City; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Western Springs Woman's Club, Western Springs, Ill., protesting against zone system and demanding its repeal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition in opposition to the zone system as applied to second-class mail matter passed by the executive committee of the Authors' League of America (Inc.); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ELSTON: Memorial of Berkeley Center (Cal.) Civic League, urging confiscation of all food products held by the brewers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: Paper to accompany House bill granting a pension to Elizabeth H. Waugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HADLEY: Petition of King County Pomona Grange, No. 13, State of Washington, petitioning for price to be fixed on all commodities produced by labor; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of E. E. Hopkins Camp, No. 18, United Spanish War Veterans, South Bend, Wash., favoring the bill to pension widows and children of officers and enlisted men of the Spanish-American War, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese rebellion; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolutions of Pawtucket (R. I.) Typographical Union, No. 212, urging passage of Sherwood old-age pension bill; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. McKEOWN: Petition of the district conference, International Association of Rotary Clubs, Hutchinson, Kans., March 8, 1918, favoring the training of National Army men in swimming; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Petition adopted by the International Order of Good Templars, favoring total prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MORIN: Petition of the Women's Missionary Society of the Good Hope United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pa., urging the enactment of a law prohibiting the liquor traffic for the duration of the war and the period of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAKER: Letters from Sherwood & Sherwood, James Graham Manufacturing Co., W. W. Montague & Co., Heyman-Weilman Co., and H. S. Crocker Co., all of San Francisco, Cal., favoring Senate bill 3692, regarding the manner of payment of income and war excess-profits taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, letters from River City Lodge, No. 8, of Portsmouth, Ohio; Mrs. Harry A. Davis, of Fig Tree, Cal.; the La Pine Commercial Club, of La Pine, Oreg.; and the Pennsylvania College for Women, of Pittsburgh, Pa., protesting against the zone system; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, letter from the Western Springs Woman's Club, of Western Springs, Ill., protesting against zone system and demanding its repeal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 11, 1918.

(Legislative day of Saturday, April 6, 1918.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Henderson	New	Sherman
Beckham	Hollis	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Swanson
Fernald	Kellogg	Penrose	Tillman
Fletcher	King	Pittman	Trammell
Gallinger	Knox	Ransdell	Underwood
Gerry	Lodge	Shafroth	Vardaman
Hale	Nelson	Sheppard	Wadsworth

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to state that the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily absent on official business of the Senate, and that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is absent in connection with the liberty-bond loan. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FRANCE, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDING, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. MARTIN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on Senate bill 383.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN, and Mr. VOLSTEAD managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

S. 2917. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes";

S. 3528. An act to suspend for the period of the present war sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes; and

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KIRBY. I present a petition from citizens of Logan County, Ark., a county that has sent more men to the battle front than any other county in the United States. I desire that this petition be published in the RECORD. I do not ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAGAZINE, ARK., March 26, 1918.

Resolved, That we, citizens of Magazine and vicinity, in Logan County, Ark., a county which has given more soldiers to the ranks of those fighting for world democracy than any other county in the United States, assembled for the purpose of organizing another "win-the-war" club, the members of which wish to prove their loyalty to the Government by pledging themselves to carry out the program for food production and conservation especially, earnestly petition President Wilson and the Congress of the United States to further aid food production and conservation, transportation and efficiency of men workers at home as well as soldiers in the ranks, by giving us at once and completely the entire prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all kinds of intoxicating liquors, and that they further protest to England against the use of grains which we may furnish that country for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor. We are glad to do all we can to help feed the armies of the allies and their civilian population, but we protest against denying ourselves and making all possible sacrifices for the benefit of English or American brewers.

H. G. THOMASSON,
Chairman.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Terrence McDonald Garrison, No. 38, of Amesbury, Mass., praying for the preservation, restoration, and repair of the naval brig Niagara, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of Federal Employees Union No. 57, of White Earth, Minn., praying for a greater increase in salaries to all Federal employees than is proposed by the flat raise of $120 per year, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Association of Business Men of Minneapolis, Minn., and resolutions adopted by the Association of Office Men of St. Paul, Minn., at a meeting held in Minneapolis on March 21, favoring the enactment of legislation authorizing a receipt to be taken of all registered mail matter, showing to whom, when, and the place where delivered, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Forward Club, of Lemongrove, Cal., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislatures of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the repeal of the bankruptcy law, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the American Defense Society of the State of California, praying for legislation providing punishment for German propagandists, pro-German sympathizers, and all persons who by public utterance or publication interfere with the successful prosecution of the war, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VARDAMAN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 4208) authorizing postage rates on aeroplane mail, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KIRBY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1092) for the relief of C. G. Wilford, submitted an adverse report (No. 384) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2632) for the relief of Charles Leon, submitted an adverse report (No. 385) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WADSWORTH, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 280) for the relief of Alfred Sjostrom (Rept. No. 381);

A bill (S. 304) for the relief of Peter McKay (Rept. No. 382); and

A bill (S. 1090) for the relief of the Alaska Steamship Co. (Rept. No. 383).

Mr. MCKELLAR from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 141) amending the act of July 2, 1909, governing the holding of civil-service examinations, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 387) thereon.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 3808) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 386) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 4311) to provide for a commission to codify and suggest amendments to the general mining laws; and

A bill (S. 4312) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 4313) granting an increase of pension to Fred Burnstead; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 4314) granting an increase of pension to William Morgan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 4315) for the relief of William P. Clements (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4316) granting a pension to Mary McJenkins;

A bill (S. 4317) granting a pension to Reed Coleman;

A bill (S. 4318) granting a pension to Ben B. Sell (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4319) granting an increase of pension to Joshua Boreing (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4320) granting an increase of pension to George W. L. Nesbit (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4321) granting an increase of pension to William Hill (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4322) granting an increase of pension to Alexander P. Settle (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4323) granting a pension to Lilly M. Dover (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4324) granting an increase of pension to Moses Hull (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4325) granting an increase of pension to Larkin J. Vanhook (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4326) granting a pension to James L. Graham (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4327) granting a pension to Robert T. Burton (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4328) granting a pension to Nancy C. Patrick (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4329) granting a pension to David Gregory (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4330) granting an increase of pension to Ephraim B. Guffey (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4331) granting an increase of pension to David W. Britton (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4332) granting an increase of pension to William Brummett (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4333) granting an increase of pension to John R. Davis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4334) granting an increase of pension to Wilkerson McHoward (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4335) granting an increase of pension to George Washington Tarter (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4336) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Smiley (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4337) granting an increase of pension to Leo V. Burchett (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4338) granting an increase of pension to Isaac R. Storm (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 4339) for the relief of Charles Lynch; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4340) granting an increase of pension to George W. Quimby (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing that hereafter when the needs of the Postal Service require the employment on Sundays or holidays of assistant postmasters and other supervisory employees, they shall be granted compensatory time in the same manner as provided by the law for clerks and carriers in first and second class post offices, intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WAR MATERIAL AND WAR TRANSPORTATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BECKHAM. Has the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a general pair with that Senator. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LEWIS (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. President, I fear I had forgotten. Has the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. LEWIS. I recall that last evening he asked me to pair with him. He is against the conference report; I am for it. I beg that my name be stricken off and that I remain paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand he would vote as I have voted, and I will therefore allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I note his absence; but inasmuch as he made a speech against this report yesterday, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. In his absence and not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] on legislative business of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague [Mr. STONE], who is detained on account of illness, and vote "nay."

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] is detained on official business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained on official business.

Mr. TILLMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). My pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] having been transferred to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], I was at liberty to vote.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Thompson
Fletcher	McKellar	Ransdell	Tillman
Gerry	McNary	Shafroth	Trammell
Henderson	Martin	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hollis	Nelson	Shields
James	Norris	Simmons
Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Swanson

NAYS—34.

Baird	Hale	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harding	New	Thomas
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Page	Townsend
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Underwood
Cummins	Kellogg	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Fall	Kirby	Pomerene	Warren
France	Knox	Reed	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Sherman
Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—36.

Ashurst	Goff	Lewis	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Gore	McLean	Smoot
Borah	Gronna	Nugent	Sterling
Broussard	Hardwick	Owen	Stone
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Sutherland
Colt	Kendrick	Robinson	Walsh
Curtis	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Watson
Dillingham	King	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Fernald	La Follette	Smith, Md.	Wolcott

So the report was rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House and request a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. NELSON conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF ALIEN ENEMIES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being Senate bill 3771.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside to enable me to call up another conference report. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the conference report on House bill 9504, and that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering that report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina on what bill is this conference report made?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the conference report on the bill providing for an amendment to the law so as to include women as alien enemies.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I now ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 1, line 9, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and empowered," so as to read:

That for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary—

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 7, after the word "necessary," to insert "which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record," so as to read:

And to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 17, after the word "force," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 21, after the word "authorized," to strike out "in such manner as he may deem most appropriate"; and in line 22, after the word "to," to insert the word "utilize," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, page 2, line 23, after the word "executive," to insert the words "or administrative," so as to read:

Coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices—

And so forth.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this bill has come on for consideration rather unexpectedly, for I think most Senators anticipated some discussion on the conference report which has just been rejected. It has been the expectation of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to speak upon the bill, and I think especially with regard to the amendment which has just been stated. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before the Senator from Iowa does that, I will ask that this amendment be passed over, and let us get through with other amendments to which the Senator, I think, will not object. Let us have all the other amendments to which there may be no objection, except this amendment, agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are other amendments to which there is objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am willing that this amendment and any other amendment to which there is objection may be passed over, but I should like to get those amendments adopted as to which there is no objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not remember the other amendments to which there is objection.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is any objection to any amendment, I will ask that it be passed over.

Mr. CUMMINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. CUMMINS. So that we may be sure of the situation, I desire to make an inquiry. There are amendments to be offered, practically substitutes for sections 2 and 3, I think, and I desire to ask whether, in the event this amendment of the committee were adopted, the proposed substitutes that may come in will be in order?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; of course.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want the amendment now suggested to be passed over; but I have no objection to going on with the other amendments, although I intend to call for a quorum so that the Senator from Georgia may at least be advised that we are working on the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have sent for the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask that this amendment be passed over for the present and that we go on with the next amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 24, after the word "officers," to insert the words "now existing by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 4, after the word "thereto," to strike out:

And to employ by Executive order any additional agency or agencies and to vest therein the performance of such functions as he may deem appropriate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 11, after the word "be," to strike out the word "available" and to insert "expended only," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, any moneys heretofore and hereafter appropriated for the use of any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer shall be expended only for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the amendment just read seems to me to be inexpedient if the bill is to become a law. Emergencies in times like these are very apt to arise whereby funds available for purposes for which they are appropriated should be expended otherwise, and the necessity for such expenditure may be quite as exigent as is the necessity for giving the President power to combine and consolidate various bureaus. One of the features which hamper war preparations is the fact that Congress carefully specifies the purposes for which and the methods under which expenditures shall be made. That has been the common practice ever since the Government was instituted, and yet, Mr. President, there are many objections to such a system of expenditure. I think by holding the President responsible for these expenditures, in the event he consolidates an agency and finds it necessary to use funds available for that purpose for some kindred purpose, he should be permitted to do so. Therefore, I think the word in the original text of the bill is preferable to the proposed amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the members of the Judiciary Committee, especially those who are also members of the Appropriations Committee, have been opposed heretofore to lump-sum appropriations, allowing sums of money to be expended by the head of a department without direction by Congress as to how it shall be spent. We thought that the funds that Congress had directed to be expended for a certain purpose ought to be expended in that way, and if any additional funds are needed, the President can come to Congress for them. Furthermore, as it is now, I think there are plenty of lump-sum appropriations available to administer the Government. Therefore, your committee thought that the President ought to use the money which Congress has directed to be expended in the manner proposed by law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill under consideration, known as the Overman bill, authorizes the redistribution of all functions both in the military and civil establishments of the Government. So far as the Military Establishment of the Government is concerned, I will gladly support the bill. I think it should be amended to except the civil establishment, or, at any rate, portions of the civil establishment. As to the civil establishment, it reaches from the Secretary of State and the ambassador to the Court of St. James down to fourth-class postmasters, and authorizes the withdrawal from any Government office or any commission or any bureau or any Government agency the duties devolving by law upon such office, commission, bureau, or agency, and their transfer to any other office or agency that the President may create. To this I object.

Mr. President, there should be at all times the most cordial cooperation between Congress and the President; and now, while we are engaged in a great war, such cooperation is absolutely necessary. But I do not understand this means that the Senate and House of Representatives are to abandon their constitutional duty to aid in perfecting legislation. I do not understand, even if a bill comes to us with the supposed approval of the administration, the President desires that Senators should not study the measure and help perfect it. When we consider the number of administration measures that have come to us in the past year, we know that it would be to suppose that the President possessed superhuman power to believe that he could have studied them in detail and could have passed carefully upon every detail in them. The President, I feel sure, would welcome, and does welcome, the help of the Senate to perfect measures even called administration measures.

The President made a great speech in Baltimore last Saturday. He declared that the time had passed to talk about peace; that the time now was for preparation for war, and continued preparation, and nothing else. We should all support that speech. The time has passed to think of anything but the preparation of our Nation to carry this war to victory; and it is with the earnest desire to win the fight—to win the war—that I favor amending this bill.

Mr. President, to put upon the President, as Commander in Chief, the duty of redistributing the functions of our Military Establishment alone places upon him a superhuman duty, and to involve him now in the redistribution of civil functions that do not pertain to the war, that have been built up by legislative enactment during a century, is to put upon him an unnecessary task, and one not suited to the hour, one calculated, if speedily transacted, to produce confusion and disorder in our civil establishment.

There is vast room for study, and for redistribution in our Military Establishment. I class three branches our Military Establishment—the Navy, the Army, and the Shipping Board. When we declared war, or recognized that a state of war existed, our Navy was in good shape; the heads of the various bureaus had been wisely selected, and had served quite a length of time; they were familiar with their work; they understood it, and when we added the additional war duties to the Navy, doubling appropriations, that well-oiled machinery moved on without friction. It has performed its task superbly, and to-day the American people have plaudits for the Navy, and they congratulate and applaud also the Secretary of the Navy.

As to our Shipping Board, and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, we appropriated for their use over a billion dollars, and placed upon their boards a great task. It required minds of powerful organizing and executive capacity to handle the task. That it was not well done for a while no one denies that we had men upon the board not suited to the task all admit, but changes have been made by the President ,and wisely made. I fear some of the board now are not equal to the task. I hope the majority of them are equal to it.

I come, however, to the War Department. I have only in the past few weeks realized the task we placed last year upon the War Department. We placed the task of handling $5,500,000,000 of appropriations on the War Department without doing anything toward strengthening its business organization. Do I criticize Congress? No; I do not criticize them; none of us realized the necessity for the immediate strengthening of the business administration of the War Department. I am criticizing no one now.

I am trying to look the facts in the face, not with reference to the past, but with reference to the future, with reference to winning the war, which is the great thought closest to the heart of every loyal citizen of this country.

Five billion five hundred million dollars! Why, Mr. President, all the banks in the United States have less than $5,000,000,000 of total assets. Five billion five hundred millions—once and a half the entire gross incomes of the railroads of the United States! Our reserve banks have about four hundred millions. We placed upon the War Department the task of handling more than ten times the entire capital and deposits of the 12 reserve banks of the United States. We placed upon the War Department this great business responsibility. It had not been prepared for it. It was not organized for it.

As to those lines of work that involve strictly military skill—the draft of our men, the selection of officers, the training of officers, and the training of men—our War Department has served splendidly, and it is entitled, and its officers are entitled, to the tribute of the people. But where did we provide for handling the business responsibilities placed upon the War Department? Not in the Assistant Secretary. I think 12 months ago he was a newspaper man, who probably could not have handled a bank with $100,000 capital or a mercantile establishment of that size. The officers of the Army had not been trained for great business tasks. They had been educated as military officers. Where was the business organization from which we expected the wise and intelligent handling of this great business responsibility placed 12 months ago upon the War Department?

Let me call your attention to some features of that responsibility.

We gave to aviation $680,000,000 to be used at once during the first year—$640,000,000 at first and the urgent deficiency bill carried $40,000,000 more, making a total of $680,000,000. Did we add a half dozen great business organizers and executives as Assistant Secretaries and ask the President to place one at the head of aviation? Did we add these additional Secretaries and suggest for those positions the strongest business organizers of the country? Not at all. We sat here quietly, appropriating the money, without action to provide men capable to carry into execution the use of the money which we had appropriated.

I had the greatest respect and admiration for Mr. Richard Olney. He was a great Attorney General and Secretary of State under Mr. Cleveland's last administration. He could not have handled the business we placed on the War Department. I sat for 10 years on a board charged with the handling of an eleemosynary fund, of which Mr. Olney, Senator Hoar, Dr. Gilman, Bishop Warren, of Massachusetts, and the Chief Justice of the United States were members. None of them could have handled the task we placed on the War Department. There was one man on that board, with a powerful executive and organizing mind, trained to executive duties and to organizing vast and innumerable enterprises. When a problem of organization or executive action was before that board, he towered above his associates like a great mountain above little hills. That was the kind of mind we needed. I refer to J. Pierpont Morgan, sr. We really needed a combination of the great ability of J. Pierpont Morgan and J. J. Hill, and still the task would have been onerous.

Let me go on calling your attention to these business responsibilities that we placed upon the War Department.

We appropriated for the purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon, $1,124,000,000. The plants, most of them, were to be constructed. The organization of those who were to operate the plants was to be made, and then there was the operation of the plants themselves.

We appropriated for the purchase, manufacture, and test of munitions for these cannon $1,816,000,000. This required in many cases the construction of plants to manufacture the munitions. In some instances we could buy what was needed. This required a great merchant. Why, let me mention one little plant, small in comparison with the $5,500,000,000—a little plant for the manufacture of smokeless powder. It took the Secretary nine months to select the head, the man who was to take charge of the organization. He was a man of ability, but knew nothing of powder manufacturing, and then, when he took charge, he found that already some builders had been selected to construct the plant who knew nothing about the intricacy and technical work of the munition plants, and architects had been selected to plan the buildings who had no more knowledge than the contractor.

Let me go on. I wish to impress upon the Senate, and as far as I can upon the country, the tremendous business responsibility we put upon the War Department.

We appropriated for the purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon, $27,000,000.

For munitions for the same purposes, $31,000,000.

For alteration and maintenance of mobile artillery, $234,000,000.

For subsistence of the Army, $268,000,000.

For regular supplies, $164,000,000.

For transportation of the Army, $516,000,000.

For water and sewers, $44,000,000. It is a pretty big enterprise for an ordinary man to handle $44,000,000, and yet it is trivial compared to the whole responsibility.

Barracks and quarters, $113,000,000.

Roads, walks, and so forth, $21,000,000.

Construction and repair of hospitals, $45,000,000—a great, big enterprise in itself.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Added to the formidable list which the Senator is so well setting forth are all of the industries and cares of peace times. For instance, we have all the navigable waters of the country, all the rivers and harbors of the country, we have all the national parks, we have the Philippines, Alaska, Sandwich Islands, Porto Rico, and other detached districts, and the Panama Canal, and various other interests and industries that must be looked after and carried along in addition to all of the vast duties that the Senator has mentioned. The duties of the War Department are really enormous, even in peace times.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator's statement is entirely true. I am only seeking to impress the enormous additional business responsibilities that were placed upon the War Department.

Clothing for the Army, $378,000,000. It would take a merchant of considerable mind to handle that problem alone.

Storage and shipping facilities, $150,000,000.

I have mentioned these particular items in order that the diversity of the task, as well as the enormous character of the responsibility, may be comprehended. As I said before, in the strictly military work of training soldiers our officers were ready for the task, and performed it splendidly. If we had had proper vision, we would have known that there was at least a chance of our becoming involved in this war, and we would have made the organization to handle what was required long before we put the duties on the War Department. Instead of doing so, the last legislative act that we performed in the bill of 1916 was to cripple rather than to strengthen the General Staff, and to lessen the responsibilities of the Chief of Staff.

It was a disorganizing rather than an organizing act. What did we do? We did not realize—I did not; I wish frankly to say I did not—the business task that we were placing on the War Department. We entirely failed to take the proper steps to help meet that business task. What did we do? The policy was adopted under the Council of National Defense of creating innumerable advisory committees, without authority, some good and some bad, some here for patriotic purposes and some not. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has referred to confusion, and he has cited the testimony of Dr. Gifford and Mr. Catchings about confusion, and the necessity for concentration of authority. They were not referring to the civil establishment of the Government. They were referring to these innumerable advisory committees, and they were urging the substitution of men with authority inside the War Department in place of impossible, irresponsible, unknown advisory committees. The Senator entirely misunderstood their testimony. I challenged during his speech his claim that Dr. Gifford and Mr. Catchings had approved transferring to the President the right to refunction all of our civil establishment, and he put their testimony into the RECORD. I have read it from his speech. He simply misunderstood their testimony. They were indorsing the proposition that we needed a director of munitions. They were condemning the advisory committees. They had not the civil establishment in their minds, and not a word can be found in the testimony cited by the Senator from North Carolina that sustains his views of what they said or what they meant.

Mr. President, the folly of the advisory committees has been recognized, and they have been practically dispersed for the good of the country. There has been retained the War Industries Board, and to it large powers have been given. There are strong men on that board. To some of them two years ago I might have objected, but with a more accurate knowledge of their ability I am ready to say that I feel sure splendid service will be rendered toward better organization, and better conduct of this business by the War Industries Board. There are one or two other boards still retained that are valuable, but inside the War Department itself there must be business power and capacity to organize and to execute.

We have added two more Assistant Secretaries. From what I hear of him I shall vote with great pleasure for the confirmation of one of them. I would not refer, after an executive session, to what was done in it, but I can say upon the floor what I contemplate doing. I shall with great pleasure vote for one of these two men. I do not know about the other. He is a most estimable gentleman, I understand, but has he organizing capacity? Has he executive ability? Can he help put into the department the business power that it needs?

Why, after the war began our Chief of Staff went to Europe. Did we not need a Chief of Staff? If we did, we needed him here. A little later his successor, when made Chief of Staff, went to Europe, and is there now, and an Acting Chief of Staff just from Europe took his place. Here was a great business responsibility, the biggest this country ever knew, requiring the greatest executive power that could be had, and a man entirely unfamiliar with what had been going on took the place of the Chief of Staff, and the Chief of Staff went to Europe!

I am not disturbed about how our Army is handled in Europe. I believe we have put at the head of our forces there the best selection that could be made from the Army. He is commanding the plaudits of all who meet him. I thank God he is there. It is here in the United States that the creation of supplies, and the great business responsibility rests to take care of the boys who go abroad, and to prepare this country for any emergency.

I have said repeatedly that I favor immediate preparation for an Army of 5,000,000 men. If the reply is made that we can not send them immedittely abroad, all right. Let us have the munitions ready; let us have the officers ready; let us train them as fast as we can, and even if we can not send them abroad at once let them be trained and remain here at home.

Since the European war began every time I have had an opportunity I have voted to strengthen the Army. I have seen the possibility of my country becoming involved in the war, and I believed if this were only one chance in ten we had better at once prepare. If we had had two and a half million men ready last January, a year ago, to put in France, I do not believe an American vessel ever would have been sunk.

Let us be candid, and honest about it, and not critical. I accept for Congress the full share of the blame. What we wish is to understand the situation now. What I desire is that we should appreciate the situation and prepare. I long to see in every bureau of the War Department the ablest man who can be found at its head, and then to see him kept there. I have no confidence in perfecting an organization by putting a man at the head of a great bureau charged with the expenditure of millions of dollars, and then sending him to France as soon as he begins to learn his work. I know all the best men want to go to France, but they have just as much responsibility here as they have there. They should make the sacrifice. They should be willing to lay aside military laurels to serve their country where they can serve it best.

Next to Gen. Pershing, I wish to see our ablest organizing officer Chief of Staff. Then I should like to see him exercise some authority and coordinate the bureaus.

What a pitiful statement it was from Gen. Sharpe that he did not know, and was not officially told how many soldiers he must provide clothing for in the cantonments. We were partly responsible for it when we passed the act of 1916 taking away from the Chief of Staff his supervisory authority.

Mr. President, I wish to see every possible authority given to the Commander in Chief to handle the Navy, to handle the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation, and to handle the Army. I would like to go further than this bill goes. I would like by affirmative legislation to authorize the Commander in Chief to place inside the War Department between the Secretary and the bureaus such an organization of business and military men as he deems proper to supervise and coordinate the work of the bureaus—one, two, five; I would leave it to him. The responsibility can not be taken off of the Commander in Chief under the Constitution. We can not name the men. The men who occupy the places finally determine the efficiency of the service, and he must select them. I would give him that additional authority by affirmative legislation over and above what is covered by the present bill.

The great work that confronts us here at home is to organize armies, and to organize munitions and supplies to take care of our armies, and to complete plans to provide the munitions.

More than two years ago we passed a bill authorizing the construction of a nitrogen plant, and we nagged the War Department over and over again on the floor of the Senate for doing nothing, and they never started a nitrogen plant until months after the war began. There was a lack of vision. I mention it again, and I say it not by way of criticism, but that we may realize, all of us, what we are up against and prepare for what is ahead.

Mr. President, I will not criticize in detail any place where our business administration failed, where our money was not wisely spent, where the results for which we hoped were not accomplished. I simply say that in this organization, with the lack of skilled organizers and administrators at the top, without knowing anything about the details, I know there must have been trouble lower down. I am surprised that it has not been worse than it has been described. We have young men scattered through the Army without thorough organization. They have done splendid work, and they to a considerable extent have supplied the lack of the kind of mentality that we ought to have placed with the Secretary of War to direct these tremendous business undertakings.

If we leave to the President all these responsibilities, the responsibility to reorganize, to refunction, to direct the Navy, the Shipping Board, and the Army, we have taxed his mental endurance to an extent that a human mind could carry. The law puts it there. We should facilitate his use of it in every way possible. We should cooperate with him in its use.

I would not vote to place upon him a director of munitions even if I thought such an office would be desirable. I would not vote to place upon him a war council of three men if he objected to it, even though I might personally desire it, because it would not be the part of wisdom to seek to force upon the President, who is Commander in Chief, machinery that he did not desire to use.

I had determined if those measures came to the Senate to vote against them, without considering their merits, upon the ground that it would be folly to put upon the Commander in Chief instrumentalities he did not desire to use. But I would in connection with the Military Establishment not alone give him all the authority that this bill gives him, but I would give him the further authority to put such additional boards of one or more men with such powers and of such character as he might determine under the Secretary of War to help coordinate the business responsibility of the War Department, and if he wants authority given by statute to the War Industries Board I am willing to vote for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield just a moment there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator may have noticed that the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate in making a report on yesterday recommended that the production of aeroplanes and engines and the fulfillment of the industrial efforts in our aviation program be placed under one executive head, to be appointed by the President and to be responsible solely to him. Does the Senator understand that this bill would not permit such a thing to be done?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that this bill carries that authority.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does not permit the President to create any new agencies?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The President can create new agencies under it, as I will show later on, but I answer for just a moment that there are a number of bills that place general responsibility upon the President under which he can appoint any agency he sees fit. This bill allows him to transfer any function belonging to any civil or military establishment to any agency he sees fit. He can put anybody he pleases into any of these existing agencies and then give them any of these functions, but I would regard it vastly better I will say, that I may not be misunderstood, to authoritatively provide that he may create the agency mentioned by the Senator for this express purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My own impression was, from reading section 2 and other portions of the bill, that this power of the President so far as transferring functions and consolidating officials and their duties from one department to another or in a particular department, was confined to those commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; it is not. I will call the attention of the Senate to what it is really later on, but I state for the present that it puts it within the power of the President to put anybody he pleases into a number of existing organizations already created by law. They would then become governmental agencies, and in that way he could transfer any power to men not now doing any work. But I would not approve that kind of conduct. I would regard it vastly better if he needed an agent of the character referred to by the Senator from New York to specifically authorize his appointment.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For a question.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator think that under this bill the President, for instance, could designate one of the Assistant Secretaries of the War Department to perform the duties of the particular office to which the Senator from New York refers?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly.

Mr. NELSON. Under this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Undoubtedly. If he already has a Secretary or if he has Secretaries enough to spare one, if the particular person desired for the work had already been named to an office, then this responsibility could be placed upon him under this bill.

Mr. President, I wish to come to the civil establishment. It has been built up by legislation through more than a century. It has had the benefit of the consideration of Senators from the different States and Representatives from the different districts. It has responded to local conditions. There is not a Senator who could not find something he would like to change in our civil establishment, but no five men could reorganize after two years' work our civil establishment who would not have put more into it that any one of us would object to than is in it now. Any five men who took two years to work upon it would bring back to us as a result of their work things that each of us would object to.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] wishes this unlimited authority for change because he says things happen every day requiring change. He does not tell us anything that has happened in the last 12 months, since the war began, which requires a change.

Mr. OVERMAN. I named 12 bills which we passed, which passed both bodies unanimously, where the departments had to come here to get authority for this and that. Nobody objected to the bills, and it took up the time of the Senate to pass them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I repeat, the Senator does not show us anything that has happened during the past 12 months that he now desires changed in the civil establishment, and the Senator has not corrected me in his statement. There were some things that were suggested before the war. In our committee, and we freely have given you what happened in the committee, the Senator did suggest that our lighthouse system, our life-saving system, and our Revenue-Cutter Service ought to be coordinated, and that we ought to have authority to use them in the Navy in time of war. I agreed with him, and called his attention to a statute that had already done it, and this bill was not needed for that purpose. He called attention to the Geodetic Survey. Here is the statute that already places the ships of the survey under the Navy. What else? Where else? Oh, "it happens every day." I do not want our civil establishment torn to pieces by ill-advised suggestions presented every day. You can not improve upon it in that way. It is against an ill-advised, every-day disorganization of our civil establishment that I am now urging the modification of this bill.

But the Senator from North Carolina says that our civil establishment is in a state of confusion. The Senator is mistaken. There was a rather confused description of it by my friend from North Carolina, to whom I am probably more closely attached than I am to any other man upon the floor of the Senate. My people have loved his people for a century. But the Senator did not have an accurate knowledge of our civil establishment.

I served three years and a half in the Interior Department. The Senator says he wants to give the President scissors to cut the red tape. I pause to ask the Senator to name a piece of red tape in the civil establishment created by statute. He can not do it. There is not any.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know that I can point to any instance of red tape being created by statute, but I can point to one which results from a statute and operates very seriously in the section of the country where I live.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would be glad to yield for a question to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Just one sentence. I merely want to refer to the fact that placing the Forestry Bureau under the Department of Agriculture instead of the Department of the Interior, where it belongs, is a source of very serious embarrassment and difficulty in the West.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not prepared to say it was not a mistake, but there are a great many people who think it was wise. The first legislation developing the forestry system was drawn and sent to Congress when I was Secretary of the Interior. I had the honor of drawing it, at the suggestion of the Academy of Sciences. It was brought to me by Mr. Gifford Pinchot, who was appointed on a committee to help prepare legislation.

There is red tape in the departments, but it grows out of departmental orders, of departmental practices, and not out of statutes. The President has the scissors, and has had them for four years, and the heads of the departments have had the scissors for four years. When I took charge of the Department of the Interior I found the business of the department administered by bureaus. Each of these bureaus had a director.

There were from 500 to 3,000 employees in each one of these bureaus. They did the work and sent their communications to the Secretary for his official action, and he acted and sent the work back to them for execution. It took from 7 to 10 days for a communication to reach the Secretary and for the action of the Secretary to get back to the bureau. I found it out a week after I took charge. I found that a communication from a bureau went to the chief clerk. He sent it to the division charged with the responsibility for the work upon that particular bureau. Around the Secretary's office there were six divisions with a chief, and about 10 assistant clerks who for the Secretary worked over and prepared suggested action for him upon requested action by the bureaus. A communication would come from the Land Office. It would come to the chief clerk. He sent it to the chief of the land division. He handed it out when he got ready to a law writer or clerk in his division. He worked on it. He handed it back to the chief of division. The chief of division initialed it and sent it to the chief clerk. The chief clerk sent it to an assistant secretary who initialed it. The chief clerk initialed it and then brought it to the Secretary. The Secretary acted on it and sent it back to the bureau. I asked the chief clerk to explain the paper he had initialed, and he knew nothing about it. I asked the assistant secretary to explain it, and he knew nothing about it. I asked the chief of division, and he knew nothing about it.

I at once directed that no initials be put on any paper coming to me by anybody where the party putting the initials could not discuss the subject without looking at the papers. I asked why all this delay and useless circumlocution? They said it was the practice of the department, and they thought there was an order requiring it. It took only five minutes to dictate and sign the order to the chief clerk to send to each bureau a direction that in the future their communications go direct to the division which would handle their matter, and instructing the chief of the division to bring bureau communications to the Secretary's office by 3 o'clock the same day they reach the division. The chiefs of divisions were startled. Then I said at 9 o'clock the next morning, "You will have all night, if necessary, to work on them"; and in 48 hours we changed the system so that communications from the bureaus received their answer from the Secretary's office in 24 hours. There was departmental red tape. I did not have to come to Congress to get any scissors; I had the scissors. It only required a little common sense to clip the red tape, and to move the business of the department forward.

I want to contest the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina that the departments are loaded down with red tape that it needs statutes to relieve. They need only a little executive ability and firmness. They need to step on some customs and step on some men who like old customs. That is all. It does not need interference by the President. We need not call on the President to carry this great responsibility. Heads of departments can cut out the red tape. The Secretary of War by an order could shorten the length of time it now takes to get action through the various branches of the War Department and force it to the final place in 24 hours.

But the Senator from North Carolina says that Mr. Taft agreed with the provisions of this bill. Why, Mr. President, the Senator could not be more mistaken. President Taft, after nearly four years as a lawyer in a department, then at the head of a department, and then as President, conceded that he was not in a position to reorganize the civil government of the United States, for he asked Congress to create a commission of, I think, 10 men to work upon the subject. With all of his experience he did not pretend that he could change every day, in a few minutes, the organization of our civil establishment. He knew he could not do it except by creating confusion.

I do not believe, if this subject were fully explained to the President and he could give two days to its consideration, that he would for a moment ask any such legislation. I have the greatest confidence in his ability; nobody questions his patriotism; he has a marvelous capacity to grasp with wonderful rapidity any proposition that is laid before him; but you must be ready to contest a preconceived view if you wish to reach a sound conclusion. It is in the conflict of intellect, not by absolute concession, that truth is worked out. It is the conflict of intellect on the floor of the Senate that helps to perfect legislation; and the Constitution of our country, which I love, prescribes that as the way to perfect legislation.

What did this commission appointed by Mr. Taft report? Ninety out of a hundred of its suggestions dealt wholly with departmental administration. It suggested a few statutes, practically all of which except three have been passed. One was a change of our mode of selecting civil-service clerks. Now we allot a certain portion to each State, while that commission recommended, without regard to States, the selection should be made solely upon the grade of the applicants; but nobody ever introduced a bill to carry that suggestion into execution; nobody has suggested from the executive department during this administration or the last administration that it should be done.

We have six auditors. We have no budget system. The Senator from North Carolina suggested that we have a consolidation of our six auditors. This recommendation was made, I think, four or five years ago by President Taft's commission; but the President has never recommended its adoption; the Secretary of the Treasury has never approved it.

Let me digress to say that I believe the time will come when this country will concede that no Secretary of the Treasury has ever shown greater executive ability or organizing capacity or done more for his country than has the present Secretary of the Treasury. He has not asked for this legislation. Why should we consolidate the auditors? I think it would be unwise to do so. The Post Office Department is a great big department. It is as much as one auditor can handle. The War Department is another big department; the Navy Department is another, and so on. Why undertake to put all those duties on one man? If the Secretary of the Treasury will say that he wants this, I will vote for it; I have every confidence in him; but he has not said so, and he has been Secretary of the Treasury now for five years. Surely this is not what the President wants to do.

But the Senator from North Carolina says our finances are confused; that we have estimates from different sources sent to us; and that we ought to have a budget system. Senators, we might have a budget system in time of peace; I think probably we should; but we can not have it in time of war. Who in the Treasury Department is prepared to revise the estimates of the War Department and say they are unwise? Who in the Treasury Department is prepared to revise the estimates of the Navy Department and say they are unwise? Why, you would have to transfer to that budget committee your ablest soldiers and your ablest naval officers. The President has not said that he wants a budget system, and if you will ask the Treasury officials to-day they will tell you they could not handle a budget system in time of war.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the pending bill provide for or authorize a budget system?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; but it authorizes the transfer of all functions to any agency or person, and the President could transfer the functions attaching to the various departments to somebody in the Treasury Department and say that thereafter the duty of making estimates for the various departments should be performed by that one central authority rather than by the departments themselves. This bill would allow a budget system, which I think at this time would be very unwise. Surely we do not want that done in a minute.

But the Senator from North Carolina says these difficulties arise every day, and he wants to change them every day. Oh, Mr. President, if we change our financial system on the spur of the moment, if we consolidate our auditors on the spur of the moment, if we stop the War Department and the Navy Department from making estimates for their own operations on the spur of the moment, what shape will we be in to win this war?

The Senator from North Carolina has but one object. He says, "I want to pass this bill in order to win the war." I want to amend this bill in order to win the war; I want to prevent confusion; I want to prevent this suggested folly, because we need all our resources, all our strength, and all our power to win the war.

Where is there anything left which the Senator from North Carolina claims should be changed in the civil department? The Senator from North Carolina filed with the committee a pamphlet making suggestions of duplications of work in the departments. In the first place, I want to say that the act of 1917 authorizes the President, where he finds duplications to exist, to bring them to an end by stopping them at one of the two places. So he has now the authority to stop duplications of work. But let us see what the Senator from North Carolina, or some not thoroughly informed person who furnished him the information, thought constituted duplications to be abolished by this bill. I am familiar with some of them.

First, the Bureau of Soils in the Agricultural Department is working on potash and the Geological Survey is working on the problem of potash; therefore, according to the Senator's pamphlet, there is a duplication, and we should make a consolidation. Now, let us see what would happen if the President had listened on a moment's notice to such a suggestion from the person who furnished the Senator from North Carolina this memoranda. The Geological Survey is organized with skilled geologists. They study the soil, determine the geology of the rocks, and advise the Bureau of Soils in the Agricultural Department of the existence of potash in certain formations. The Bureau of Soils has scientific chemists in the Agricultural Department. They take up the subject, without duplication, and follow it on, testing substances and learning how economically to separate the potash from the other substances. They go further, and study plants, and when they find potash in them they study the problem of its economic separation. That is no duplication of work. But how would this expert who advised the Senator from North Carolina proceed? He would transfer the geologists from the Geological Survey, where they are working upon the potash problem, to the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture, and what would they do the balance of their time after they finished conducting their investigation to find the potash? Or he would transfer the chemists who are working on the potash problem in the Bureau of Chemistry to the Geological survey, and I want to know what they would do there after they finish their analysis with reference to potash? It may on its face look as if there were duplication, but any successful effort at consolidation would have involved horrible waste of the time of valuable men.

Next the Senator refers to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and the foreign-trade advisers. He says there is duplication. Whoever furnished him that information was not familiar with the work of either of those organizations. I wish to say that the organization of foreign-trade advisers has been developed during this administration. There was in existence such an organization before, but the extent of their service, the character of their service, has enormously increased as a result of the war. The Department of State has been compelled to lean upon them as never before; and instead of this administration desiring to consolidate them with the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which does an entirely different work, their duties have been increased and their responsibilities enormously enlarged since the beginning of the war.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. The foreign-trade advisers were established in 1910 under an appropriation made by the Congress to promote foreign trade. That was the first time in the Department of State that such an office existed, and the Senator from Georgia is entirely correct—and I am glad he has put some emphasis upon the proposition—that their function is entirely separate from that of the foreign-trade agents of the Department of Commerce. The foreign-trade advisers of the Department of State are part and parcel of our foreign machinery and, through diplomatic and political and other contact with foreign nations, make the opportunities which the foreign-trade agents in the Department of Commerce improve upon and operate under.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that it is better to have all that in the State Department rather than to have a part of it under some other department?

Mr. KNOX. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not the Senator think that that work could be better administered in one department than in two departments?

Mr. KNOX. I think that both departments sustain their natural and indispensable relation to the work.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator the question whether he does not think this could be better administered by the State Department than by the Department of Commerce?

Mr. KNOX. I always thought so until Congress provided otherwise, but I understand now that the arrangement works very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did not the Senator himself advocate that?

Mr. KNOX. I certainly did. I strenuously opposed the separation of the functions; but, as I have indicated, I am candid enough to say that I think the arrangement is working very well under the present system.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, Mr. President, I have had considerable relations with both. I think that they work splendidly as separate organizations. Their work is entirely separate. The foreign-trade advisers since the war began have been charged with looking after, for the State Department, many contracts of American citizens and many rights of American citizens already existing, which have been involved in injury as a result of the war. These men have been the arm of the Secretary of State in helping the Secretary of State care for the rights of American citizens transgressed as a result of the war.

I come now to another place where the Senator finds duplications. He refers to the Bureau of Education, the agricultural extension work of the Department of Agriculture, and the National Board of Vocational Education. Some expert who has advised him wants to consolidate them. Why, Mr. President, the whole Department of Agriculture is an educational department; its work is the work of scientific investigation to be carried to the farmer for his education, and it brings immense returns to the country.

During the present administration we prepared the bill for the extension of agricultural work from the colleges of agriculture and experiment stations, and put it under the Agricultural Department, which was the only proper place to put it. They have their experts; they are prepared to administer it. The bill creating this extension work was introduced by me. It was prepared by five presidents of colleges of agriculture who had been working upon it for years, and by Dr. True, of the Agricultural Department, with such little assistance as I could give them, it having been a subject which had interested me theretofore, I having induced my own State when I was governor to inaugurate a system of agricultural extension work from the college of agriculture of Georgia, which had been so helpful that I wanted all the States to have a like benefit. I do not want any experimentation with that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want to ask the Senator if by any stretch of imagination he could possibly reach the conclusion that the President, under the power given in this bill, would overthrow, disorganize, and destroy established institutions?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer that here is the memorandum of the things that could properly be changed, furnished by the Senator in charge of this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It seems to me that indulging the presumption that the President will do anything of the kind would justify the likening of the President to the proverbial bovine in the china shop. If such a thing is possible I could not think of voting for this bill. But I can not conceive of the President overturning established institutions which are the result of years of careful thought and mature deliberation. Nothing short of great emergency would justify such a thing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I can not conceive of my voting to authorize anybody to do it. That is why I am objecting to some features of this bill. I do not know what the President wants to do. He has not told us. The Senator from North Carolina says that he has come here and told us just what he wants to do. In the first place, he has not come here. We hear that this bill was handed to the Senator from North Carolina. The President has not come here, and he has not told us anything that he wants to do, and this bill does not tell us anything that he wants to do. I am trying to find out, from what has been said by the Senator from North Carolina, who has charge of it, what he wants to do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator, in connection with the little colloquies he has been having, whether he does not think it is a good general principle not to grant powers on the theory that they will not be used?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If they are not to be used, and we feel so sure that it would be improper for them to be used that we trust they will not be used, we ought to trust ourselves not to grant them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I should like to suggest that we have granted so many unusual powers to the Executive—we have had to add so many things in faith—that I am afraid if we should stop right now the patient might suffer from the change of treatment. And I do not want to be responsible, even in part, for the enactment of any measure or failure to enact any measure that would in any way hinder or embarrass the President in the performance of his great function in this emergency.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Mississippi can be serious, and I am sure he has made by his statement no argument in favor of this bill. I regard his statement as one of criticism of what has been done, rather than of approval of what is suggested.

Now, let us go one step further. He says the Vocational Education Board is a duplication. Why, let us see. The President appointed a commission of 10 to prepare a plan for national aid to vocational training. I had the honor of serving with my distinguished friend from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] upon that commission. A splendid board worked with us. We prepared this vocational education bill after weeks of labor. We duplicated nothing in the Agricultural Department and we duplicated nothing in the Bureau of Education. We created a board composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, the Commissioner of Education, an expert in commerce and manufactures, an expert in labor, and an expert in agriculture, making a board of seven. In that way we coordinated the work of all the bureaus, of all the departments, and that board is proceeding to do a great work. If I did help prepare it, I admit that it is a great bill. I wish the name of the Senator from Vermont were in it. I do not say I wish it were there in place of mine, because I am a little glad mine is in it; but though I happened to have my name in it because the change of the politics of the Senate made me chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and therefore I had charge of it as chairman of the committee that prepared it, I never intend to let a chance pass without seeing that the Senator from Vermont gets the credit that his splendid work deserves.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. I have been waiting for the Senator to get to a juncture where I could interrupt him without disarranging his argument. As he goes along, I wish the Senator would suggest to me what he means by his constant reference to the civil establishment, so that I can have it distinguished.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I divide our executive activities into the military and the civil. I mean by the civil the Department of State, the Treasury Department, the Interior Department, the Post Office Department, the Commerce Department, the Labor Department, and the Agricultural Department; I mean the Interstate Commerce Commission; I mean the Federal Reserve Board; I mean the Civil Service Commission. On the other hand, I classify as military the Navy, the Army, the Shipping Board, and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which to-day are really engaged in operation for military purposes.

Just one word more about this memoranda of the Senator from North Carolina. It is in print. It is furnished as a basis for interference with our civil establishment. He proposes to break down our National Vocational Education Board; to break down our agricultural extension work from the colleges of agriculture, our Bureau of Education. They are splendidly coordinated. They are the result of days and weeks and months and years of study by experts. I do not refer to myself as an expert. Is some one to come to the President and each day to suggest changes in matters of this kind, and is he to act upon them on the spur of the moment? If the President had the time to study these three branches of our civil establishment, I would have the utmost confidence in his judgment; but he has all that a human being ought to be asked to do to perform his labors as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. He can not handle this work, and threatened change is dangerous; and the changes suggested by the Senator from North Carolina are objectionable and dangerous.

Here they are, Senators. I am not creating them. Here is his little pamphlet, with the places where he says there is duplication and which he wishes to tear to pieces; and I show you in each instance he is wrong. I do not charge the President with having approved anything of the kind. I do not believe he did.

Mr. President, I come now to the two most important organizations to interfere with which would impair our power to win this war. I refer to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board.

We have just had the question of the Interstate Commerce Commission before us. A bill was sent to us providing for the removal of all authority from the Interstate Commerce Commission, and placing it all in the hands of the Director of Railroads. The Director of Railroads could not have exercised it. He could not have changed the rates. He could not have studied problems of classification and discrimination. That will be done by the superintendents of railroads scattered all over the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to the Lakes, and as the bill came to us those superintendents would make the changes of rates, the changes of classifications. They could have put a rate on a particular commodity at a particular place that would run any industry out of business. They could have put a rate on a particular locality that would paralyze the business of the locality. It would not be done by the Director of Railroads. He could not have done it. It would be done by the local superintendents scattered all over the United States. Parties injured would not be heard to protest. And the Senate, by an overwhelming vote, amended that bill, and reserved the right to the Interstate Commerce Commission to finally decide upon a rate, to finally determine whether it was discriminatory.

I am not so much disturbed about raising rates. They will be raised. I am disturbed about discrimination, about an excessive rate put upon a particular place or a particular commodity for the purpose of preventing the movement of a commodity. You might think that would be impossible; but after we have had the experience of Dr. Garfield's order, suppressing the sawmills in Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi to save coal, when they never used any coal, but furnished their by-product to warm the communities in their neighborhood, and to open up the port of New York, when their products did not go to New York, I do not know what might happen.

The President approved the Garfield order and defended it. Of course, he had not had time to study it. If he had had time to study the order in its far-reaching effects, if he had realized local conditions all over the Union, as no one human being does, he never would have approved it. It is not lack of confidence in the President; it is the consciousness that you put upon him the impossible. To ask him to pass upon the Garfield order, with his many other duties, was to ask him to do something which was superhuman, if you expected his passage upon it to be his careful, deliberate, finished judgment.

I say that the transfer of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Director of Railroads would be a transfer to the superintendents of the various railroads of the right to destroy any industry they saw fit, or any community they desired. I never will vote for a bill which contains such a power. I would rather retire from office to-morrow, with the knowledge that I never could be elected henceforth constable in my State, than to injure my people and injure my country and jeopardize my country in this war by voting for such a measure.

Senators, think about it! You hang a threat of ruin over every industry and every community in the United States at the whim of a local railroad superintendent! That is what this bill does. I think that the most serious injury that might befall us from passing this bill without amendment. Whether the President transferred them or not, the mere possibility that any President during this war might do so would check activity by the cautious man and make him hesitate about his business. It would place a restraint on the whole country. It would threaten our productive power, and this war is not only to be fought by men; it is to be fought with resources. You strike at our resources, and then say to me you want to do it to win the war! Ah, I would save them because I want to win the war. I would save them because I know it is necessary to save them in order to win the war.

Now I come to the Federal Reserve Board. This bill will allow all the duties of the Federal Reserve Board to be transferred to the Comptroller of the Currency. Any President during the war can do it. Mr. Wilson may not be President during the whole war. We do not know how long it will last. No man has a lease on life. What President? Frankly, I would not give it to any President. I would give it to President Wilson quicker than anybody else I know if I were sure he still did not want to transfer the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Director of Railroads. Within the past few weeks he did. Within the past few weeks we had an administration bill to take over the railroads that did it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I were to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. It relates to that point. If this bill is valid under the Constitution, which I deny, it authorizes the President to assign his functions to any person whom he may select. He can assign all of the duties which we give him under this bill, or all of the duties which the Constitution assigns him, to any officer of the Government whom he may select for that purpose. He is not obliged to exercise these functions himself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. He could select some man to study it, to work it out for him, and to bring him a report. He would not have time to study it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. KNOX. There is plenty of precedent for the President assigning his powers in constitutional government. Down in Central America and some portions of South America they do it under the denomination of depositing the power. You all remember the historic incident of Castro depositing the power with Gomez when he was about to take a trip abroad. When Castro returned Gomez forgot to redeposit the power and is still President of Venezuela. It is a power that must be carefully exercised.

Mr. CUMMINS. I gather that it is one of the purposes of this bill to put our Government in the same flexible situation in which many governments of other countries may be unfortunately. I am only asserting that under this bill, as it is drawn, if it is constitutional the President could select a deputy president and retire wholly from the discharge of his duties and the burden of his responsibilities. I do not suggest that he would be inclined to retire wholly, but I do suggest that he would be inclined to transfer some of the functions with which the law has clothed him to some other officer of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The President would be compelled——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. The President would be compelled to select some one to look into it for him. Finally it would be his act when he approved the result of the work of others.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia it would not be necessary for him to do that. His is an office covered by this bill. He can transfer that office or any function of that office to any other department or officer of the Government the function or power which we attempt to confer upon him in the bill, and if he were to do that and his act is valid, then that other person or officer could use his own discretion or judgment with regard to the matter himself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not prepared to go quite as far as the Senator from Iowa has gone, but I will not discuss the subject now. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as I expect to take the floor following the able argument of the Senator from Georgia I did not interrupt him from time to time, but at this point I wish to say that there is nothing in this bill, as I see it, that could authorize the conclusions of the eminent Senator from Iowa to the extent of any President naming a deputy president. As to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], making a somewhat humorous allusion touching the administrations of South America, I wish to say that now, under the law, the President of the United States does daily convey and confer many of his duties as President to certain arms known as members of the Cabinet that are the duties of the President. He conveys them now, and he has conveyed them for 50 years. It was a law under the administration of the Secretary of State, now Senator KNOX. But let it be understood, he may convey some of the duties, but he can never transfer the responsibility, and there is where the distinction is drawn.

Mr. CUMMINS. For just a moment; I simply want to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois, when he comes to discuss this matter, to this language in the bill among other powers.

To transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another.

He is an officer of the United States and enjoys that office, and any function or duty or power which he may now exercise under the Constitution and under the law we authorize him to transfer to another. He will have, of course, the moral responsibility for that transfer, but the responsibility of the act of the officer will not be the responsibility of the President of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, without being changed from the line of discussion that I was myself presenting, I wish now to take up the subject of the Federal Reserve Board. They have the confidence of the banks of the country. Our banking system is operating wonderfully. That is due to the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Reserve Board and to the confidence the banks of the country have in that board. It would be almost criminal to put in jeopardy the power and the responsibility of that board. If their powers were transferred to the Comptroller of the Currency or to some Auditor of the Treasury Department financial chaos would follow; our whole banking system would be disrupted. I would never vote for this bill without a provision exempting the Federal Reserve Board from its operation.

I wish now to take up the subject of the Federal Reserve Board. They have the confidence of the banks of the country. Our banking system is operating wonderfully well. That is due to the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Reserve Board and to the confidence the banks of the country have in that board. It would be almost criminal to put in jeopardy the power and the responsibility of that board. If their powers were transferred to the Comptroller of the Currency or to some Auditor of the Treasury Department financial chaos would follow; our whole banking system would be disrupted. I would never vote for this bill without a provision exempting the Federal Reserve Board from its operation.

I wish to say that I am opposed to this bill as drawn and favor amendments taking the civil establishment out from under its operation because no changes are needed in the civil establishment. They ought not to be made in time of war. The President has all he can do to perform his duties as Commander in Chief and we should not place such an additional burden upon him.

I shall especially urge amendments to exempt the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board from the operations of the bill. There the chief injury to the country might come. There the whole Nation in its productive power and banking resources might receive paralysis. It would certainly receive a blow and find a monkey wrench thrown into its midst if we even passed a bill without exempting those great boards so necessary to our industrial and financial prosperity.

I am aware of the fact that the President of the United States is wonderfully popular, and deservedly so. I am aware of the fact that he is the idol of the American people. I am aware of the fact that in my own State many of my best friends would have me follow anything without amendment that had administration approval labeled on it. But are we to consider our own interest? Politically it would be easier for me to take that course. Politically it would be popular even in my own State. A vast majority of the people are devoted to the President, and many of them think Congress should do anything he suggests or adopt anything with administration approval without change and without amendment. That would be the easy course, to do nothing to serve my country but to serve myself. But are we here simply to seek the retention of office? Are we here simply to seek new commissions for further service, or are we here to seek really to serve?

Ah, Mr. President, in this hour of the trial of our country, in this hour when every strength should be given to win the war, a Senator should be ready to help win the war by doing what is best to win the war, if he knew by doing what was best to win the war he must give up his commission as a Senator. So I ask, now, Shall we save our political fortunes, or shall we do what we know is right? If Senators follow their convictions without regard to political fortunes this bill will be amended by an overwhelming majority. I appeal to a sense of duty, to a sense of patriotism, to the courage of Senators.

Mr. LEWIS. Before the Senator goes further, differing from the Senator very much——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator desires to ask me a question I will yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to ask the Senator—differing from him; nevertheless much that he is saying is interesting—I should like to know if he can enter into some reasons why those amendments should be adopted, and why civil boards or commissions should not be included.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator has not understood what I said, I can not make him understand. I have been engaged in that very task for the last half hour. I have demonstrated that nothing has been shown which needed a change in our civil establishment. I have shown that suggested changes would be blunders if adopted, and I have shown that to jeopardize the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission might paralyze the industries of the country, and to jeopardize the work of the Federal Reserve Board, to subject its functions to be changed or transferred to an auditor of the Treasury or to the Comptroller of the Currency, would break the confidence of the banks of the country in our banking system, and bring on financial chaos. I will not repeat further. I trust the Senate has gathered even from these additional remarks somewhat of the thought that is in my mind.

Again I wish to say, Mr. President, that to-day, at this hour, we should rise above the desire for political preferment. It is our duty to perfect legislation, to carve out of it any portions which we see will injure our country and hinder the winning of the war, and this we must do without regard to our own future. This we will do to help save our country if we sacrifice ourselves.

Now, let me close in the language of a great Senator who once represented Georgia here, "Who saves his country saves himself, saves all things, and all things saved do bless him. Who lets his country die, dies himself ignobly, lets all things die, and all things dying curse him."

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Harding	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Henderson	Martin	Sutherland
Borah	Hollis	New	Swanson
Brandegee	James	Norris	Thomas
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Tillman
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Penrose	Trammell
Fall	Kendrick	Pittman	Vardaman
Fernald	King	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Knox	Shafroth	Walsh
France	Lewis	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gallinger	Lodge	Sherman
Gerry	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to state that I have been detained from the various roll calls to-day on account of official business. I wish also to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to state that the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it is my purpose at this time to address myself to the features of this bill as I see the bill, likewise to address myself to the objections tendered to the bill as I understand them. I am bold enough to assert that many positions have been asserted here as opposition to the bill that can not be sustained by anything that is in the measure; that many presumptions have been indulged which can not be justified from any phraseology of the measure; and that fears have been expressed as to what may be done under the bill where there is no provision in the bill to either excite the fear or to excuse it.

Mr. President, I have heard on the floor that this was a bill handed by the Postmaster General to the eminent Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is serving as sponsor for the measure in a parliamentary capacity, and I have heard it intimated that therefore the bill is to be regarded as a mere direction from some executive source coupled with some order to pass it without regard to the merits of the measure or the justice of its provisions.

Mr. President, I can have no knowledge whether the Postmaster General handed a bill to the Senator from North Carolina or whether the bill handed by the Postmaster General expressed his own views and those of the President or those of the Senate. I must take it, sir, for granted that if this bill was reported from a committee such as the Judiciary, made up of reflective and intelligent Senators—of patriotic men—they have considered its provisions; they have entered into an investigation of its merits; and they have reached a conclusion as to its necessity, its propriety, and justice. It does not matter to me from whence came the bill originally nor who drew it, or what draftsman inscribed it, or through what agency it found its way to a committee of this body. I prefer to look at once to the fact that it is presented to this honorable body bearing the commission of an intelligent and able agency of the Senate and that that agency has given this measure its approval. From that premise I am pleased to start my first reflection upon the merits of the bill.

Mr. President, the Senate is to be congratulated upon the manner of presentation by the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. Without passion, divorcing himself from every suggestion of partisanship, with a spirit of apparent fairness, with a desire that clearly suggested willingness for information from any source—he presented this measure and all the reasons he had to sustain it. This he did with such thoroughness, in such lucid style, with such clearness of reasoning, that he should be commended by this body, and the constituency which he represents would have the right to feel a sense of honor in the enjoyment of the credit the distinguished Senator takes from this tribunal.

It is, of course, Mr. President, impossible for any man opening a discussion, as the Senator from North Carolina did upon this measure, to state all the things that the bill would comprehend, nor all the reasons which might arise to justify it, or to anticipate the objections which can be urged to it, or to apprehend the fear which the oversensitive may address toward it.

Many of the things which have been expressed to-day and through the days past I shall refer to possibly at the expense of the patience of the Senate, but only shall I advert to them that I may in my own manner demonstrate how without foundation the fears are as expressed, and how without merit are the objections which have been voiced.

Mr. President, the first question is, What is this bill? I remember that as I delivered what was the most immortal oration of time (this, of course, being my salutatory at a college) [laughter], as I left my university I took the opening paragraph of Webster's famous reply to Hayne, beginning with that clause that when a mariner starts out upon a journey he turns to his compass and chart that he may behold his course; from the chart sees his way and from the compass measures his distance. The object of Webster at that time, of course, was to invite the Senate back to the real question that was comprehended in the resolution of Mr. Foote, of Connecticut, which had been tendered then in respect of public lands, upon which the great discussion of the rights of the States, as presented by their advocates, and the sovereignty of the Union, as presented by its champion, was based.

May I be so bold as to apply the sentiment of the great Senator from Massachusetts and ask of this Senate that it pause and consider the chart; that we reflect a moment upon the compass and see what is the thing that we are undertaking—what is the course to which we are invited; what are the waters upon which we are to sail; what is the vessel upon which we are to take passage, and what is the ultimate harbor of our destiny? The privileges of this body in all discussion permit any Senator to vary from the subject matter into every field conceivable, and of that I express no dissent. There is no wiser provision than that which permits a Senator to enter any field of investigation, express any sentiment that engages him at any time on this floor, that it may serve a warning to our community at large that here in this forum anything transpiring in this Republic can at any time be referred to for the purpose of either staying its course, correcting its purpose, or prohibiting its object.

But at this particular time, sir, I am not called upon to emulate the example of these distinguished Senators by departing at all from the real provisions of this bill, and it is to the measure that alone to which I ask the attention of such Senators as can give me their thought, from which we may gather the object of the proposed legislation.

As the bill comes from the committee and presented to the Senate we read:

For the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary.

Passing, then, further to that which may add to this illustration:

That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law, to transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another, to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it either by detail or assignment, together with the whole or any part of the records and public property belonging thereto.

Mr. President, I can not but concede that any Senator reading the bill must see that the fears expressed by the eminent Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the very brilliantly persistent and persistently persevering Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], or the experienced and alert scholar of government, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], have been founded largely upon an assumption of things which have no existence, born of the fabric of a dream, which, upon investigation, leaves "not a rack behind." The bill has but a single purpose, as certified by this committee. It is for the purpose of consolidating the agencies and offices now in existence, permitted by law, through which the President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, as specifically recited in the bill, may utilize, to the object and end of further executing the purposes that the Commander in Chief has to carry out the prosecution of the war.

At the outset, Mr. President, let us now have a fair understanding. I differ from much of the premises of the Senators making objection to this bill, first, upon the ground that the matters they say exist, I assert, have no such existence in the bill. Second, I profoundly differ from them in their conclusions, because I hold, as I set forth to the extent of my capacity in the debate on the food-control bill, that in time of war the Constitution of the United States, aye, without a letter of legislation, commits to the President, in his capacity as the Commander in Chief, a power beyond that which as civil magistrate in time of peace he is authorized to execute. I do respectfully insist that the very words in this measure to coordinate these different departments and their offices, in order that he may be enabled to utilize them, is but the appropriation of sentences which have been used upon this floor and upon the floor of the coordinate branch of the legislative body since 1836, with such frequency in legislation that there ought not now be any Senator occupying a seat in this body—all of whom are learned and qualified—to dispute the limitations that have ever been put upon them and the extent to which they have ever been exercised.

What is there new, what is there novel, what is there so extreme in these provisions of this bill as could authorize the eminent Senators upon this floor hurling out to the public a fear, which comprehends a danger so large and so overwhelming, as these Senators present to the mind of the reading citizenship, suggest to the reflection of the thoughtful, and tender as food for those who wish to oppose the administration? Those who in all government who, having no ground upon which to rest opposition they ever urge as to everything—as to take the arguments of these eminent Senators as their specious reasons for doing a thing which, without, they would have no excuse to offer, and for reasons for opposition they are seeking wherever they can for some justification.

Does any man deny the necessity for the elimination or consolidation of many of these offices which are now held by executive agents? Does any Senator deny the wisdom of an immediate coordination and putting under a single head many of the duties which are performed by various branches? Truly and really there are departments which are Argus-eyed, Briarean-handed, and, I may add, Gorgon-headed—producing, as it does now, confusion; and as the eminent Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] in his opening explanation in the presentation of the bill well said, not only confusion but complications. Will a Senator here fail to recall that under the inquiry of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] before the Military Committee, Gen. Sharpe, to whom the Senator from Georgia referred, testified that it took nearly a week for a communication addressed to him upon a certain subject, which was under his jurisdiction, but which had to be sent to an under officer, from that under officer then to The Adjutant General, from The Adjutant General back to the under officer, from the under officer, carrying his visé, back to him, the supply officer, the quartermaster; and that, however urgent were the demands of that department, 10 days had elapsed before an ordinary request for, if we recall, needed uniforms in trying chill of weather could be even ordered, much less procured?

I mention that very simple illustration at this time in order that Senators may realize that if that could apply in so serious a department as the War Department and under circumstances of such impending nature as that to which I have referred, what will be said, upon reflection, of the other branches, which have grown up and multiplied through all these years, with their confusion, their divisions, their complications, and their embarrassment?

Mr. President, complaints have come from eminent Senators on the other side of the Chamber who, for purposes of designation, we speak of as Republicans, knowing at this time that the partisan distinction is wholly lost among most of us. I happened to be absent through illness for a few days when there were speeches made upon this floor by the eminent senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], the now senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], and others, to whom I need not allude specifically, but who, from their experience and investigation, called attention to the utter lack of coordination and the difficulties which had grown from that confusion. Among other things, the Senator from New York, being a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and the Senator from New Jersey, being a member of the Military Affairs Committee, indicted the administration from the floor because there had not been that prudence and exercise which they felt should have long been entered upon in lopping off certain branches of our Government, in consolidating other agencies of it, and bringing all into one unit of a whole, that we might economize many expenditures, direct the agencies with concentration, and bring quickly a result and some accomplishment.

Let us pause a moment and ask the single question how that could be done. The speech of the eminent Senator from New York was circulated throughout New York in the congressional election, which happened just a few days after his speech, as the basis for an assault upon the administration. This was to demonstrate that the administration in power was incompetent and to disclose that it lacked business capacity. I partook to some degree, sir, in those election contests. In every ward of the city of Brooklyn, where the contest was, the speech of the Senator from New York was circulated. His eminent colleague [Mr. CALDER], in his complete presentation of what he felt to be his cause, used the speech of his colleague. My distinguished colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], who always adorns any assembly, and oftentimes flashes his wit through it like coruscations of lightning whenever he addresses an audience, did not hesitate himself in his speeches in Brooklyn, as did the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], to properly allude to these omissions as indicative of the fact that what the Government needed was business administration and the comprehension that the Nation was in war, and, being in war, should put men in public life who were devoted at the outset to the object of centralizing the powers of the Government, lopping off useless agencies, and coordinating its efficient branches in order to achieve the success to which we have addressed our lives and all our future—the winning of the war. Yet of these distinguished Senators on this floor, many of them are opposing the only measure which by law can do the thing these eminent Senators said was necessary if we were to succeed and for not doing which in the past they would have had us repudiated at the ballot box as unworthy.

Mr. President, let this be understood: The Republican administrations preceding us are not to be criticized, far less condemned, for not having taken these steps. Every Government has ever recognized a distinction between the time of war and the time of peace, and in the organization of its machinery has ever addressed itself in time of war to such organization as the war required, and after the war had terminated, as we well understand and as history records, has restored many of the agencies that apply in time of peace, withdrawing from the Executive much of the power which he had been authorized to exercise in time of war. The distinguished sage from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who has honored this body so long and is a reflection of glory to the State whence he comes, will recall, from his experience here in this body and his life in that State he represents, how many measures, to his own knowledge, which were called war measures at the time of the Civil War were afterwards repudiated by Congress and withdrawn when we were at peace, in order that our people should be tranquil in their neighborly relations, that the relative privileges of the different States might be restored, and the respective branches of government be exercised by the usual agencies, and the functions of the Executive again be those of a civil magistrate of a peaceful country, as distinguished from those as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

That was true even in the time of the War of 1812–1814; it was amply true, as appears, as we well recall, from the discussion of Mr. Corwin, of Ohio, and from the debate, which is historical, touching the war with Mexico. How well do we recall how Mr. Benton in the defense of Andrew Jackson specifically invited the attention of the body to the fact that all the things for which Jackson was then being condemned were war necessities and invited their attention to the fact that they were all gradually, as had been the habit of Government, being withdrawn, while the civil government's privileges theretofore enjoyed were being again restored. He was answering the animadversions of Mr. Clay, but it will not be forgotten by us that subsequently Mr. Clay merely sought the pledge that these provisions which he condemned would not be permitted to remain under the peaceful administration of the Government; and when it was made evident that the provisions known as war measures were to be forsaken when we returned to peace Mr. Clay withdrew his opposition to Jackson. It was because of that knowledge on the part of the Senate and of the House that the resolutions then pending for the consideration of the conduct of Andrew Jackson were withdrawn.

I only mention this that the historians about me may recall that there is nothing new in this discussion. There is nothing new in the fears excited on the part of eminent Senators; there is nothing novel in their expressions of doubt and danger; and, Mr. President, however creditable is the performance on the part of the excellent Senator from North Carolina and the committee that has reported this bill, there is nothing original in its construction; all have followed the well-beaten paths of legislation existing in this Government and in every other government which we recognize now as respectable in authority in the prosecution of war.

At this point I beg to call attention, sirs, before I enter upon the details of this bill, to the situation in a time of peace in England, in a time of peace in France, in a time of peace in Germany, those countries now being at war.

I beg to invite the attention of the Senate to the situation in these countries now, in view of the new legislation and the new methods of government which they have devised, I may say improvised, sir, for they are a mere collection of that which had previously existed during other wars or in other war legislation. How have they met a situation similar to this in their own country? By a form of concentration of power in the hands of those who have to administer the war exactly after the model of that which we now pursue ourselves, unless we shall feel that we, following in point of time, are using those as our models. Pardon me for imposing upon the Senate a dry recital at this moment as the basis for some conclusions which I wish later to draw.

On August 21, 1917, in Great Britain the Parliament passed an act known as the new ministries act. Pardon me, sir. You, Mr. President, who honor us by sitting in that chair, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], a scholar of government, will recall that the United States can not boast in justice to a greater democracy as to legislative powers than the Parliament of England; and, whatever we may say as to the form of government of Britain in some respects, justice will not let us insist that we are more thoughtful of the interests of the multitude when it comes to a question of an exercise of executive power than is the Parliament of Britain. So, sir, we have the illustration that that body on August 21, 1917, passed "a new ministries act," and created a ministry of reconstruction; and what did it do? I prefer to read portions of the act that I may not accidentally misconstrue it, and that I may not, of course, through lapse of memory, misquote it. To this ministry—an office which we do not have, but our Commander in Chief serves, as we well know, the parallel—full power was given, mark you, Senators, to consider the problems and meet situations which "might arise out of the war."

The eminent Senator from North Carolina said new conditions may arise every day. The eminent Senator from Georgia inquiries why should we attempt to legislate upon the theory of new conditions arising every day. I must say that the legislation of every other government has had that as its foundation. It was impossible, sir, to define everything that might arise under the bill, because new events from day to day bring forth new conditions requiring new applications, or, indeed, sir, new orders that we can cope with them. So we find in Great Britain a parliamentary body acting under an unwritten constitution, with a limitation similar to that we have under a written one, vesting in a ministry, in this interesting language, "full power"—to do what? To do whatever it might be necessary to do to meet any situation which might arise out of the war.

Have we proposed any such comprehensive language? And then, "to institute such inquiries and"—pardon me, sir, if I fortify my eminent friend from North Carolina—"and to prepare such schemes and to make such recommendations as he might think fit." It gave the minister ample salary, a staff, and power to sit in Parliament.

Senators, it will interest you to know that under this minister a number of commissions and committees have been created to deal with questions which have already arisen and those which are to arise. A list of these committees and of their duties may be found in a publication that has come to us; but it really embraces about 30 pages, and it would trouble Senators in point of time to go through it. However, on March 14—I may be a little in error in my memory; my vision is giving the figures rather than my memory—but on March 14 or March 24, 1918, there was published a synopsis of the particular law of consolidation as passed by Parliament, the privileges and duties of which had been assumed by the minister. May I call to your attention the fact that after these powers were vested in him he proceeded upon the reconstruction work, abolished what would have been 34 divisions of government which existed in time of peace; I take it, sir, to be returned, of course, at the end of the war, for such has been the custom, I find, as I look into similar legislation of the past. They have not let such offices be abolished perpetually. Then, in addition to the abolishment of these divisions, let me advise the Senate that they created, in place of the 34, 15 divisions. These 15 divisions covered the subjects of trade development, finance, raw materials, coal, and power; intelligence, scientific and industrial research—we will treat those things, to use the words of the Senator from Georgia, as coming under the "civil administration"—demobilization and disposal of military stores; labor and employment—recalling the patriotic and, I may say, impressive address of the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] yesterday, touching a feature of the labor problem; and it will be noted here that one of the very instrumentalities of war which Britain regards as important is to develop all the rights of labor, the privileges of labor—agriculture and forestry, public administration, housing, and the question of aliens. We legislated upon that question day before yesterday; they assume to leave it to an executive branch.

Now, Mr. President, let me call your attention, sir, that under the system prevailing in Britain, as I gather it, 87 different committees have been constituted, which, under the power given, are doing the work of the war. I will not recite their names and thereby burden you in point of time, but I wish to quote an authority upon the subject to the effect that they have entered upon the greatest activity in scientific and in industrial research. More than that, they have reached into the question of electricity, coal, local government, mining, and they have taken in all branches necessary to the purposes of the act.

Mr. President, you will see clearly, sir, that while the pending bill is general it could not have been anything else. The bill of the Parliament of Britain could not have been anything else. There had to be, sir, vested in somebody, in some source, a general power, leaving to that source discretion to exercise that general power in such detail as the future might make necessary. Otherwise, we might have set forth a schedule born of the anticipation of every Senator, which could have comprehended 1,000 pages; and after having given such a list it might have omitted the very thing that would transpire upon the very day following, that could not have been seen in the prescience of the most profound knowledge on the part of the most gifted man. The schedule then would be lacking, there would be no power in the hands of the Executive to meet that exact situation, and he would have to return, sir, to the Congress for specific power to meet that particular contingency that was omitted from the schedule, and all the objects of the legislation would have failed for the very exigency when it arose for which you gave the legislation had not been met and through excess of caution had been neglected. Surely, then, Senators must see that the objections urged against the measure, treating them from a legal ground, are virtues to be urged in its behalf.

Unless, Mr. President and Senators, we are ready to say that to the Executive, to whom we commit the power, that we are not willing to trust his discretion; unless we have reached the point where we are not willing to grant those to whom the power is to be committed the presumption of wisdom to execute it within the spirit of our institutions according to what we feel is the necessity of the hour; if the time has come when any Senator in this body can not in time of war trust the Commander in Chief and his aids with discretion in the performance of a duty such as this bill contemplates, then, Senators, the time has ended to trust the discretion of the Executive with any power whatever. For, mark you, Senators, I assert that if the moment ever comes when patriotic men such as fill the seats in this body shall sincerely doubt either the wisdom of the Executive or his patriotism in the execution of any of the measures provided, then we have reached a point when he is no longer to be trusted at all.

If in any one thing he has not the capacity to execute or the patriotism to control, then, as to all things we are in danger, for we never know when such an individual, if there exists such, might not, out of ignorance on the one hand or despotism on the other, bring the Government to the verge of its dissolution.

Therefore Senators will observe that, after all, the test of it all rests upon the confidence you repose in the officers who are to execute the law, and the amount of patriotism you credit them with. This is as I assert it, because, if this law, Senators, is to be executed in the shadow of suspicion day by day that the Executive is to be guilty of usurpation of power, that he has to be watched with a guardianship of suspicion, the same considerations must apply to every law that has been passed and to the execution of every act that is in his keeping. You are in the same danger, doubled and trebled by thousands; for if there be ground of a fear expressed as against this measure it can only be born of experience as to measures that are past; and if so, we ought to end courageously legislating at all any power in such an Executive. If these dangers dreamed of have not been born of experience, then they are born of imagination that has no foundation in any evidence, far less in any proof, and ought to be avoided by Senators rather than indulged in.

Then, sir, to Britain I have called your attention; may I allude to France?

In France, Mr. President, it is called reconstruction. An interparliamentary committee was established in France, and powers vested in two officers—one, the President; and the other, Senators, I am not able to understand. I have visited France a number of times, and a number of times have I visited the Parliament, and sought to understand their institutions; but this is one that I really do not understand. They call it, sir, what would be, liberally translated, "the harmonizing fraternity." It is, of course, a committee, whose duties are these I illustrate: If my eminent friend, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], sitting here and doing me the compliment of an audience, had a grievance in which he felt that the interests of Connecticut, the State which he so honorably represents here, were not properly protected; and if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], living in the Far West, had the grievance that his State would be deeply offended or wounded in its industries if the grievance of Connecticut were gratified, they meet with this committee, and this committee then tries to have these two Senators, representing different geographies, reach some intermediate ground, which would be called something like a conciliation; and then it is presented as their consensus, their agreement, their fraternal understanding, to the main committee. That is as nearly as I can translate it. However, sir, under that name, 300 different provisions—I am quoting, Senators; I can not speak of this of my knowledge—have been passed, all anew, for the purposes of the war, solely to aid in the reconstruction.

Under these France has proceeded upon her purchasing and whatever is necessary. She has made a demand upon the Paris Chamber of Commerce and the chambers of commerce of the metropolitan cities—Lyon, Marseille, and so forth—for their suggestions as to anything that can be done to aid the war, touching—to use the precise language—the industrial features. Then, Mr. President, it appears that these committees, crystallized under this form of legislation, proceed to carry out every method necessary to accomplish "the work of the Nation."

Mr. President, France has been very jealous of placing power in the hands of any executive. She has had an experience—sad; indeed, bitter. We might say that at the present time she of all countries in the world would be the last to vest a power which could work to the injury of her citizens and against the welfare of institutions upon which she has shed so much blood and rained such a volume of tears. But you will observe—and I bring this to your attention only for the purpose that I might observe—that the policy of France has been but the policy which we are seeking to undertake here, as brought forward by the eminent Senator from North Carolina having charge of the bill; and, sir, that you might accent the fact that that Government likewise takes the measures which prevail under the civil administration, and did not hesitate to consolidate them, absorb some of them, dissolve some of them, concentrate many of them into a single authority, rest some of them in the hands of a single committee, and allow them, sir, to execute them for the purpose of the object in view, leaving no other definition or detail, Mr. President. Why? Why, Senators, for the very good common-sense reason that the Government of France could not have apprehended every danger; it could not have contemplated every difficulty; it could not have measured every emergency; it could not, with beatific vision, have beheld every heavenly or earthly exigency. It had, sir, to leave these things in the charge of those whose judgment the people of France trusted, and in whose patriotism they confided, and who to the end, they knew, could do nothing to harm France and everything to help it.

What else can we do? What other step can we take? In what other way can this Congress now act to carry out the preamble, the solemn object of the bill, to confer upon our committee, created by our Constitution, known as the President of the United States, with his committee of aids called the Cabinet, or to whomsoever he may choose to utilize, the power of the Government, through all the officers now established or those which will follow the consolidation, with the object of carrying out the purpose upon which our people have entered—the winning of this war?

Now, sir, might I, with the apologia descendum, make apology gradually for producing Germany? But we can not decline to produce Germany. I assert that it is high time America shall view Germany for what it is. Let us realize where Germany stands. Let us recognize that she has afforded to the world an illustration of efficiency which has produced results dangerous to civilization; and if, sir, from these engines of destruction we can gather some lesson in the construction of that which is of benefit to mankind, let us not hesitate to view them.

Germany, sir, proceeding in a policy after the order of France, for she did not adopt that of Britain—pardon me, sir, for using the word "adopt." I do not know the history of Germany prior to the Franco-Prussian War; that is, it is not in mind, familiar now for my investigations for this purpose, did not extend beyond that time. We find that Germany, notwithstanding the imperial power that is to be in the Kaiser's representative, realizing that things must transpire to be performed by those in executive branches, by resolutions passed by its imperial council, carried through the Reichstag—I do not know whether it has to be treated by the Bundesrath or not; I do not recall the system of government sufficiently to now advise the Senate as to that—vested practically unlimited power in 11 men, divided into 4 branches, 1 to serve as chairman. I take it like a referee, if my translation of German is not inaccurate, Senators. It is my judgment, if my translation of the word is correct, that the word means "referee." In this body solely and wholly, sir, the whole conduct of everything connected with the transactions of the war is placed by this form of legislation, with but a single veto. The Commander in Chief of the Army has a right to return back his view that a particular measure adopted might conflict with the war scheme then in hand. Yet we have eminent Senators here on this floor, when we are engaged in the very same enterprise, with these same agencies, declining to adopt some similar agencies to defeat those agencies.

We remember the theory of homeopathy, the old theory of Hahnemann—"Similia similibus curantur"—the theory that similarity of things will meet the thing itself; and yet here are eminent Senators—I regret that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are absent. I take it they will be in later, being doubtless engaged on official business. Both are constitutionalists. I regret that there are Senators on the floor who, merely to gratify pride of opinion, to satisfy a mental disposition, to serve the capacity of analysis, will put forward themes which, if executed and carried out in accordance with their suggestions, would defeat the very object of the law and leave us powerless to contend against the enemy.

What do my distinguished friends say to that which I assert—that if the enemy can fight us by a certain method, and those of whom we speak as the allies can adopt the same method against the enemy, what reason have we for declining ourselves the same method? Of what avail is coordination or cooperation if on one part, because we may call America a system in civil times a little different from theirs, we are to adhere to a doctrine which means confusion, if not destruction?

I am meeting a solemn situation; and I trust I am meeting with justice, and I know with calmness, the criticisms of my eminent friends, the distinguished Senators, in pointing out that, first, there is no basis for the things which they recite as having existed. They do not exist. Second, there are no provisions in the bill that can justify these eminent Senators, or either of them, in the conclusions of danger they draw. Third, that even if all the things they say be true, still we should not hesitate to vest this power in the Commander in Chief, if, according to his judgment, manifested to us, it was necessary to cooperate with the other warring powers and carry to a successful conclusion the great task vested in him by the declaration of war, from the hands of the American people through the voice of their agents, the Congress of the United States.

Has it really come to the point that because eminent Senators on this floor believe themselves to belong to the school of some construction of the Constitution, and believe themselves disciples or converts to a doctrine, they are never to yield it out of a pride of opinion, without regard to the necessities that may call for the exception? Of what avail a provision of the Constitution creating the Commander in Chief at a time of war and vesting in him such superior power, if it be denied him by legislation in the form of amendment or exceptions, his hands to be tied, his body to be trussed, his voice to be throttled, his arms to be paralyzed, his command killed before he can exercise it, merely out of the pride in the power of Congress?

I engaged in debate one day on the food-control bill with the eminent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who sits here, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the distinguished senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], of whom it may be said that there is no more learned man upon the particular subject of commerce legislation, which he finds even in this bill. On that subject, learned as he is, differing as I do from him in his conclusions, I can not deny his knowledge. At that particular time the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked in a query addressed to me and to two or three other Senators at the time on the floor if it were true that in time of war the real object of the Constitution was to place in the hands of the President the discretion to conduct that war as he, as Commander in Chief, saw fit, and that despite the views of Congress?

I uttered then what I utter now, that I agree with the Senator from Idaho; and I asserted this, further than he went: I said then, and I now say, that if this Congress passed an act that in its effect crippled the power of the Commander in Chief, manacled him in the exercise of the powers vested in him by the Constitution, and the solemn authority conveyed through the declaration of war, he could ignore it, and as Commander in Chief execute his powers as indifferent to the declaration as if it had never been uttered; I now say that the American people would not only sustain him, but there is not a man in this body bold enough to bring forward an impeachment against him for doing such. Yet there are Senators like my eminent friend from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who has just come into the Chamber, whose able argument we all heard with interest, I with astonishment, but with information, for in matters of business construction and legislative skill the Senator from Georgia is not excelled, however much we may differ with the premises he asserts or the conclusions he draws.

But it can not be possible that there is any Senator upon this floor who really believes that it is in his power to subtract from the Commander in Chief the privilege of conducting this war as the Constitution has authorized him, or who believes that he could, by amendments or otherwise, take from him the power to consolidate any body or organize anything which was in his judgment necessary under this bill, when passed, to "utilize the functions of the Government for the purpose of carrying on the war."

I say to the eminent Senator from Georgia I can not agree that there is any distinction to-day of civil establishment and military establishment in any agency whatever that can be utilized for the purposes of this war. There is no demarcation between them now. They can not take the character, one, civil, as distinguished from the other, military. They all take but the character of an institution of the United States, to be administered to-day for the civil purpose solely, perchance, when it contributes to the necessities of the war; to-morrow for military objects, however civil they may be in administration. We can not draw the distinction, as I see it, under the Constitution; for under the Constitution, as I now assert, upon my view, every institution in the United States of America becomes an agency in the hands of the Commander in Chief, while we are at war, to utilize in any way and by any method that in his judgment as Commander in Chief is necessary to the object of carrying to success the war.

As I understand the Senators, they still cling to the theory that prevailed in the time of peace, and would urge here, under the spirit of some suggestion in the Milligan case, that in time of war Congress controls the conflict. But I advise the Senators to contemplate the distinction. A war among ourselves, as between ourselves, as was the Civil War, has a sentiment surrounding it that naturally forbade that we should exercise any power that could be leveled against one part of our own family by another, and every effort was made to avoid that, lest we leave the wounds burning, the scars searing. But, sir, when the Supreme Court of the United States, in mere dicta, as I hold, assumed to state that Congress had the control of the war, they never meant control of the management of the war nor control of the direction of the war, but, sir, they meant only what the Constitution intended to mean: We have a right to end the war; we had a right to declare war; we have a right to give more power of direction touching the conduct of the war, but we can not control the management of the operations of the power. Anything else, Senators, surely would at once impart the thought that in that way you could direct the movements of generals, you could control the movements in the field, you could direct the movements of the squadrons in the Navy, you could say when and where the fire was to be directed and where not, and likewise, Senators, you could change the command upon the field according to your discretion, though thousands of miles removed. Surely you would not assume such, as such is not within your power; such is not within your object. You will not withhold from the Commander in Chief the privilege of doing that which by law, by the Constitution, and by your declaration of war is his authority.

Then, Mr. President, I have shown from England, from France, from Germany, the legislation after the order of this we are presenting here, leaving the only difference that our Constitution is written, theirs unwritten, the heritage of custom, but I say no less guardful than ours of the rights of the people against the imperial invasion of the despotism of executives. And yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding that I have pointed out to this body that the only thing we seek here has been done in every war since the War with Mexico, and that the provision in this bill authorizing the Chief Executive to utilize these powers is not new, that it is a mere comprehension—indeed, sir, a mere copy—of provisions of law that have been put into effect after war has been declared, reserving the distinction between civil administration and that of the Army and Navy, and providing that these matters of rearrangement shall be restored to civil administration after the war—notwithstanding that, eminent Senators still talk and debate as to the advisability of passing this measure, merely because, sir, of some pride of judgment along some line of conceit in views of government.

If this era were in time of peace, if we were merely discussing some fundamental law for the organization of mankind or the distribution of powers between the States and the Federal Government, I would invite Senators to continue these disquisitions, from which we may learn something, and probably be advised much; but in times like these, what can I say? I can say that there is a reference to us in the Second Book of Kings. It is with reference to the Prophet Elijah:

> And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder.

Mr. President, we can not win this war by "cursing the Kaiser," and we can not defeat Germany by praising Wilson. He is where he must do things and not merely say them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Gladly. I gladly yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I do not know whether or not I clearly apprehended the contention of my distinguished friend when he was discussing the powers of the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy; but, as I understand the Senator, his position was that when we are in war the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, has merged in him, by reason of that position, all other powers that he possesses under the Constitution as the Chief Executive of the Nation, and that as Commander in Chief of the Army the other powers are lost and are entirely submerged in his position as military and naval commander; that as a military and naval commander he may utilize all departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Government and of the country, command them, coordinate them, and put them to such use as he may see fit; that he may consolidate departments and bureaus and devolve upon the officials who fill those positions such duties and responsibilities as he may deem necessary and proper to aid in the prosecution of the war and as would contribute to the exercise of military authority and power by him.

Does not the Senator think, if I have apprehended his position correctly, that he makes of the President an absolute monarch and dictator; that he abolishes all civil law and civil tribunals; abolishes the States, abolishes the departments, and submits all of us to the unrestrained will of a man possessing dictatorial and absolute powers?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if the Senator has concluded, in the first place the Senator misapprehended if he thought I used the words "merged" and "lost." I never referred to the power as being merged and lost. I did say, and I now assert, that the power as Commander in Chief in time of war under the Constitution is one of discretion in the conduct of it; and when we pass this bill authorizing the President to utilize the power under such a measure in the exercise of his discretion as Commander in Chief, we have authorized him to invoke and utilize every agency the Government has, of any nature, civil or military, of any branch whatsoever, as Commander in Chief under the privilege and authority of "utilizing the powers of government." That is my position.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Gladly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, would have any greater powers than Washington had as Commander in Chief, or than Gen. Haig has as commander in chief of the armies of Great Britain? Does not the Senator think that the provision in the Constitution making the President the Commander in Chief of the Army merely means to confer upon him the military leadership of the Army and the Navy, and does not intend to give him by reason of that position any additional powers to those that would be possessed by any man who had military leadership of the armies and navies of a government?

Mr. LEWIS. At the outset of these observations, if my learned and distinguished friend, the Senator from Utah, was present he will recall that I said there were two schools of thought, and that during the discussion of the food-control bill they were indulged very generally here. I espoused one, and, barring the observations of the Senator from Idaho, to which I have just alluded, I did not receive verbal support unless I can consider the vote as support. I received no other support verbally than my construction. Other Senators, including the Senator from Utah, at that time differed. Here is the difference, as I asserted then, and I repeat it now, that to my view the provision of the Constitution vesting the powers of the Commander in Chief in the President of the United States does more than confer upon him the mere privilege of naming those who shall command the Army and Navy. It vests in him the power to exercise any discretion that to his judgment may seem fit and in the execution of any law that gives him authority to act to utilize anything within the whole Government for the purpose of carrying out the policy of the war in such manner as he feels will execute it with success. I differ from my eminent friend in assuming that those powers are limited. I say they are unlimited in the exercise of his discretion after war has been declared and its execution put in his control.

Now, replying specifically as to the other part of the Senator's query, I do not exactly understand the powers vested in the commander in chief of France or of England referred to by him. As to that I will make no parallel, not being advised. As to Washington, we had no Constitution. When Washington was commander the thing we called such had never received construction, it had never been crystallized in its meaning. In after days the power exercised by Washington was assailed even when he was President. Since then, I assert, Mr. President, that the spirit of our people has given to the Constitution a meaning, and under three different wars since then has given it an execution opposed to the policy of my eminent friend, distinguished lawyer as he is, and I assert in favor of my own view that there is no limitation upon the discretion of the Commander in Chief in the prosecution of the war so long as he utilizes any agencies that are then in existence by existing law in a Government. It matters not whether you call it civil or military. Such is my position.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit another question?

Mr. LEWIS. Gladly.

Mr. KING. Suppose this bill is passed in its present form and the President of the United States shall utilize or shall coordinate two or more agencies or departments of the Government and shall unite by order two or more bureaus or departments or agencies, will he do it as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy or will he do it as President of the United States?

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator means under this bill, I tell him he does as Commander in Chief, for the bill reported from the committee specifically says as Commander in Chief. I would even without this bill answer the eminent Senator by saying that if in time of war he did it and he manifested it in the execution of the war, he would still be doing it as Commander in Chief.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hoped the Senator from Utah would pursue the inquiry a little further. I am interested in knowing whether the Senator from Illinois means what I understood him to say, which was that as Commander in Chief under the Constitution the President could utilize in any way he saw fit any existing power or function of the Government. Is that what the Senator from Illinois meant?

Mr. LEWIS. I think I said any executive or administrative branch of the Government to which I adhere. I say any executive or administrative branch of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood the Senator to so declare, and it is quite consistent with the general trend of his argument. But if that is true, inasmuch as the bill before the Senate does not create any new power in any department of the Government except as it transfers power to the President, why are we passing a bill authorizing the President to transfer functions and powers from one officer or from one department of the Government to another if the President already has those powers under the Constitution?

Mr. LEWIS. The question of the eminent senior Senator from Iowa is very pertinent. It is very searching. This is the reason I answer him categorically, because all of the Senate is not of the opinion of the Senator from Illinois. If the Senate were of the opinion of the Senator from Illinois, there would be no necessity for this bill, but it is because they are not—only a minority of them agree with me—that it is found necessary to bring in a bill to execute by written declaration that which I say is already in the spirit of our institutions.

Mr. CUMMINS. But if the President believes that he has this power, he is not affected by the vagaries of certain Members of the Senate who do not agree with the Senator from Illinois. He can proceed without let or hindrance, according to the opinion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have no telepathic instrumentality by which I can gather just now what the President "believes." I am speaking of what the Senator from Illinois believes. If the President believes that he has this power, he might still exercise it. Why? Because believing he has still the power he has done certain things, among which I speak of the fuel and coal order or of other food-control provisions connected with the Advisory Council of National Defense, and in reward for that exercise of prudence he has been condemned on this floor as a usurper of power, as a violator of law. Then, I say to the Senator, as a faithful officer he prefers to submit himself not to the vagaries of Senators but to their cautious discretion and allow them the privilege of giving him by authority in writing that which in spirit he has, and which I as a Senator believe he has.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Possibly it may be in the mind of the President to avoid such criticism as fell, for instance, upon President Lincoln, for we recall that from the 12th of April, 1861, to March 3, 1863, the President of the United States suspended the writ of habeas corpus, and many lawyers believed that the President had no power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, in that the Constitution is silent as to what agency may suspend it. The common law of the United States and dictum of the courts for many years seemed to hold that Congress alone could suspend it. The President of the United States suspended it, and Congress, on March 3, 1863, ratified his suspensions and vested the authority in the President.

Possibly the President does not wish to violate the views of a large number of lawyers who always take a strained and technical view and who would rather lose a battle than surrender a cherished technical point.

Mr. LEWIS. The contribution of the Senator from Arizona, as is always, is a patriotic one. I appreciate it. I can only speculate upon what may be in the President's mind. In answering the eminent Senator from Iowa I gave him my view, and while I feel now that the bill is brought forward in order to give a base for the contention which the Senator from Arizone says could arise and doubtless would have arisen——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the Senator give his view of a case of duplication and red tape in these departments as illustrated by an actual case. A man made an application for a right of way for a reservoir covering about 10 or 20 acres of land. It was referred to the Interior Department. That department examined the survey plat, sent it back to be corrected, and received it back at last and approved it. The applicant supposed he was about to get his right of way. Then it was thought that it ought to be referred to the Secretary of Agriculture, because it happened that the reservoir was located in one of those huge forest reserves that cover about one-fourth of our States in the West. The Secretary of Agriculture had it referred to the local agents to see whether the construction of the reservoir would interfere with the forest reserve in which it was situate, and then after a considerable length of time the applicant finally got an approval from the Secretary of Agriculture.

Then, Mr. President, when the man thought he was about to get his right of way approved it was said it must be sent to the Secretary of War. When the applicant learned that the site for a 10 or 20 acre reservoir was to be sent to the Secretary of War he was dumbfounded, but he found that it had been sent to the Secretary of War for an investigation as to whether the navigability of the stream into which the water of the reservoir emptied would be interfered with. The reservoir was on the western slope of the State of Colorado and its waters emptied into the Colorado River. There never was a steamboat on the Colorado that I ever heard of. Yet, notwithstanding that fact, the War Department had to investigate it. That department had to examine into the matter, and the War Department finally approved it.

Then, Mr. President, the applicant thought he surely was going to get the right of way immediately, but it was deemed necessary to send it to the Secretary of State. Of course, the people interested were dumbfounded and wanted to find out why an approval of a reservoir covering 10 or 20 acres would have to be referred to the Secretary of State. But they were told it was necessary because we had certain treaty rights with Mexico and it would be for the purpose of determining whether we were taking any of the waters that belonged to Mexico.

Thus this 10 or 20 acre reservoir application had to be referred to four departments of the Government. At last the two Senators and four Representatives from Colorado got a hearing before the four Secretaries. The four Secretaries met and heard the matter, and at last it was approved. It took more than a year to get the approvals of this 10 or 20 acre reservoir site.

I have not a sufficient vocabulary to characterize that method of procedure and red tape required, but I know that the Senator from Illinois has the vocabulary, and I want him to express himself on that state of fact.

Mr. THOMAS. And at the same time imagine he was a Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the Senator from Illinois answers the very just demand of the Senator from Colorado I want to suggest that I have assumed from the beginning that it was just such cases as the one described by the Senator from Colorado that are intended to be covered by this law. There are defects in civil administration and they have nothing more to do with the prosecution of the war or the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy than have the meetings that are now being held upon the streets of the new Jerusalem.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I express my thanks to the Senator from Colorado for the illustration he gave of the necessity of this law, but in his demand on me that I should characterize it with appropriate vocabulary, as I would desire to do, the rules that would compel me to use parliamentary language in this body forbid my entering upon that undertaking. If I must, as the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] says, imagine myself a Senator from Colorado under those conditions, then I would be seriously barred by the Scriptures, which declare that you shall not swear by heaven or by earth. I think the statement is indeed one calculated to accentuate the necessity of the measure, and I appreciate the Senator's tender.

Mr. President, I now come to the detailed objection of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the equally eminent Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]: I would call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], who, I see, is doing me the honor of his presence, who addressed an inquiry the other day to the body—I think to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and to myself, participating incidentally at the time—as to what particular thing should be comprehended under this measure that is not now permitted and could not be availed of.

Mr. President, that is a very necessary inquiry. It is one which should have been addressed very early in the discussion, and, of course, meaning no reflection upon those in the management of the bill, or to criticize anyone conducting the enterprise, I feel that at the outset it would have been profitable to have replied to that interrogatory with detail.

Senators, I do not know what is in the President's mind as to what particular thing he really intends to do, and what things he might advise you of his intention or ultimately of his accomplishment; but I beg to assume that I can see some necessity which he should enter upon and which without this bill, as I understand it, he could not.

In the first place, let us understand the query I put to the Senator from Pennsylvania, to see if I am accurate in the assumption I then entered upon. The Quartermaster General of the Army, the officer referred to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], Gen. Sharpe, let us assume as we do that by statute is authorized to make purchases. They are limited to certain quantity and subject matter. The Ordnance Department has by statute a privilege of purchase. That is limited to certain quantity and certain subject matter.

Supposing, sir, the criticism made by Senators on this floor, and I refer particularly to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], a member of the Military Committee, and the industrious Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], that there has been such a multiplication of labor here that there is no concentration, and we accepted the criticisms which these gentlemen have made and that were circulated all over New York in the New York campaign, and we now offer through an Executive order to consolidate the Quartermaster General's buying department with the Ordnance buying department and put them all in the hands of a man who has skill enough to know steel and the implements of war, hay, feed, forage, and clothing, of which there are many. Does the eminent junior Senator from Pennsylvania feel that we could do that with those two statutes now existing without the statutes either being repealed or some subsequent law by implication overcoming them?

I must answer upon the query that it is perfectly plain we can not. Then if there be no other excuse for economy, for utilization of power than this one alone, which has been so criticized throughout this whole Republic as producing the thing the Senator from Colorado terms as red tape, by which if an order went into the Quartermaster Department that he felt belonged to the Ordnance he did not dare to use the department's functions upon it or that of the Ordnance Department, which he felt was under the custody and control of the Quartermaster General, and because of this chasm dividing the two, bridged only by the constant windings and roundings of the thing we call red tape, until the necessity had expired and no service to the Government, how can we consolidate those, and they are military, without something repealing those acts of Congress or some other act to be substituted in their stead? I tender that as one illustration which under the law can not now be executed and which without a new law will remain the base of the confusion.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator gets too far away from the subject referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] I take the liberty to interrupt him.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I regret that the Senator from Iowa is not in the Chamber at the present time. He propounded to the Senator from Illinois an inquiry as to why, if the contention of the Senator from Illinois is correct, the President already has not this power by virtue of his position as Commander in Chief under the Constitution, and if this legislation should be enacted at all. On the 26th of February, 1917, the President came before both Houses of Congress and delivered his message on the subject of armed ships, asking from Congress specific authority to arm merchant ships for the protection of our commerce. In the course of that address, he said:

> I feel that I ought, in view of that fact, to obtain from you full and immediate assurance of the authority which I may need at any moment to exercise. No doubt I already possess that authority without special warrant of law, by the plain implication of my constitutional duties and powers; but I prefer, in the present circumstances, not to act upon general implication.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from Montana; and it may please him, certainly it will assure him, to know that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] a few days ago, pending this debate, advised the Senate of his memory of that proceeding and also of the views of the President, and asserted as he then believed the President had the power to arm those ships without the act. I do recall that the Senator from Montana delivered an inspiring and educational address to the Senate vindicating the power of the President upon that subject. Therefore I say my observation to the Senator from Iowa is justified, that out of precaution, out of excessive discretion, out of respect for the relative functions of the two branches—the executive and legislative—the President made that request for the power contained in this bill.

Now, Mr. President, let me proceed with further details. Let us assume, sir, that the Government wished to end that ancient order of rivalry between the Army and Navy in those days in which the Navy regarded itself as the aristocracy of the arm of warfare and the Army the hewers of wood and the drawers of water.

Let us assume, sir, that there was no such division between the Army and Navy as in the past; that there was no such chasm, no such ravine, across which one dared not pass to the other without the salutation and salaam of an inferior; assume that out of economy they wish to take the buying department of the Army and the buying department of the Navy and consolidate them in a single head. May I attract the attention of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to say that I am now addressing myself to some matters in reply to his interrogatory the other day as to what were the details of this bill that have to be met, that were not permissible without the passage of the bill? It might interest him if it may not serve as worthy information.

Assume then, sir, that we desire to consolidate the buying agencies of the Army with the buying agencies of the Navy and we sought to put those two, as in the other instance I have just given, under a single head. Would the eminent Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Georgia answer that with those two statutes—with which, of course, they are very familiar—which give to the Navy a separate jurisdiction of purchasing power and responsibility to purchase and that which provides for the Army a separate responsibility and authority, that we could merge those two separate powers, with their responsibilities, under one head, without the legislation being first repealed and subsequent legislation usurped, to use a word that is frequently used on this floor, or, rather, taking the place? I answer it could not be done.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. As the Senator propounded his interrogatory to me, I answer that it has been done.

Mr. LEWIS. I know what the Senator says. He said before there had been an attempt to exercise it; and I then invited the eminent Senator, as I do now invite him, that when it was assumed, through a civilian body created, it was very much criticized as being without authority, and I have, as I said then, some doubt as to whether it should have been exercised by the body which attempted it, and in order to remove the doubt the statute should place the authority in the hands about which there can be no question as to the legality. It is now attempted by this measure to legalize that which if directed by the Executive was charged on this floor as being usurped and without authority.

Mr. REED. I do not desire to trespass on the Senator's time, but——

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator does not. I welcome it. We are seeking to get light.

Mr. REED. The Senator makes three statements. I can not entirely agree with him.

First, that the action of the President in appointing a purchasing agent or agency has been severely criticized. I do not think that is the case. The thing that has been criticized on the floor of the Senate was that there were certain subcommittees of the Council of National Defense which it was claimed were giving out contracts to concerns in which they were interested. I have heard no criticism of the fact that the President has appointed a committee or a commission with pretty broad general authority to act. That is the first observation.

The second I desire to make is that the Senator's statement implies that the President has violated and overridden the law and that he now desires through this bill a statutory authority which he has hitherto usurped. I do not make any such charge against the President, and I do not think that the Senator meant to leave that implication, although it was clearly within the statement he has made.

I make the third observation that it is not necessary for the President, in order to stop any conflict between the purchasers of the Navy and the Army, to in any way trespass upon the law. If the authority to purchase for the Navy is vested in officer "A," of the Navy, and the authority to purchase for the Army is vested in officer "B," and if the President is the commander over both officer "A" and officer "B," there will be no impropriety in the President calling officer "A" and officer "B" before him and saying to them, "When you make your purchases do so after full consultation and in such manner that you will in no way interfere each with the other," and, if necessary, give common orders to the end that the Government may be better served.

Will the Senator indulge me to say a word further as illustrating the whole attitude of this bill?

In the committee, or at least in the subcommittee, I proposed an amendment to the effect that the President might in all matters relating to the purchase or procurement of supplies of any kind for the Army or in relation to contracts for the movement of the Army combine the functions of any bureau of the War or Navy Department. My amendment was even broader than that, and yet that was incontinently rejected.

Let me say again what has been so often said in the course of the debate and in the committee, but which ought to be said here again on the floor, that if any Senator can point out any place where, in the prosecution of the war, the President's hands are tied and where by the repeal of some statute we can give to the Executive a freer hand, freer exercise of power, so far as I know every Member of the Senate is willing to grant such power.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am always glad to indulge the eminent Senator from Missouri at any length under the theory of a query or otherwise. I take up his propositions seriatim.

In the first place, the criticism of the Government for allowing this advisory council to make contracts went so far as to condemn the whole office on the ground that it was usurping the privileges of the Quartermaster General. Subsequently the criticism went so far that a movement started in the Committee on Military Affairs with a view of having the exercise of that power openly condemned. Mr. President, I must say to the able Senator that when there was an attempt to consolidate those privileges and to put them in the hands of a civilian it was condemned, because it had not been done by law. I say to the Senator that there is not now a law which authorizes the purchasing department of the Navy and the purchasing department of the War Department to be consolidated under one head; and so long as the statute exists that directly imposes different powers on to executive departments, they will remain separate, to the expense of the Government, the burden of the administration, and the complication of power until we do consolidate them under one head, which is permitted by the bill.

Third, the Senator is quite in error when he says that I assume that the President of the United States has violated a statute and is guilty, therefore, of some wrong which I am now confessing. Had the Senator been here in the early part of this debate, he would have gathered from me that I asserted that under the Constitution, as I did assert against the able Senator in the food-control debate, there was power in the President, but that he, feeling, out of precaution, that it were wiser to get this power specifically detailed, this bill has been presented, because there was dispute upon it.

I will have the Senator understand, so far as I am concerned, that it is my belief that wherever there was an attempt to exercise that consolidated power in the instances heretofore condemned, it was upon the assumption that the President had the power; but because there had been differences of opinion among men who condemned it or criticized it, this bill is brought here to remove the matter from doubt and to grant him the authority.

If the able Senator from Missouri is still of the opinion, as he expressed it, that he is willing to vest in the President any power which the President feels he should have that would aid him in economy and utilizing these powers, here is an instance where he can lay aside all punctilious distinctions in his contentious construction of the Constitution and grant it. It can do no harm, and it may do good.

Now I proceed with the details, and we will take another instance. Mr. President, no Senator here opposing this bill has been able to show me how these departments could have been consolidated by the acts under which they exist and still remain without some new law authorizing it.

I will take the fourth. There has been created a food and fuel department. They have both been the basis of considerable criticism. The conduct of the administrators of those departments has not always met with my approval. I may not always have been advised of all the facts, but I digress here to refer to one instance. We had a gentleman from Illinois—his home at Chicago—by the name of Mr. Frank Peabody. He was named by the Government as from the State of Illinois, the constituency which, with my eminent colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], I have the honor to represent. Mr. Peabody was in the coal business. He was skilled and in every way schooled in it. He was a commercial and mining specialist in coal and, together with Secretary Lane and under the supervision of Secretary Lane, he was designated to administer a branch of the coal development and distribution. That he was able to do so, nobody could dispute; all who knew him conceded. That there had been nothing to disclose a selfish interest everyone admitted. The Senators hearing me—particularly the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, and Senators REED, of Missouri, and VARDAMAN, of Mississippi—will certify to the integrity of Mr. Peabody's efforts as disclosed in committee investigation. His testimony before the committee which was examining him showed that he was a man who had been careful, anxious, and solicitous for the welfare of the Government. Yet, despite that, the policy of Secretary Lane, whose administration of the Interior Department is the boast of his friends and the pride of the Nation, and who by law has the administration of coal in its veins in the public lands, was overturned and ignored; also was the great work of Peabody. Mr. Peabody was humiliated by a withdrawal of his authority. Whatever influence Secretary Lane sought to exercise or whatever authority they both exercised were overridden, and the orders connected with the Fuel Administration, from other sources, came upon us so suddenly that we, the friends of the administration, were called upon to approve or disapprove, and this with no other information than that the President had sent word that he had approved the order. All in the Senate assumed that, of course, the Lane-Peabody committee had been consulted and had concurred. Then, later, all of us are informed that a department of which Lane nor Peabody were members, had not even knowledge, far less participation, had done the thing. I know that President Wilson was no party to the unexplained treatment of Lane or Peabody. I have often talked with the President as to Peabody's great capacities as a coal man, and ever and ever the President had commended him; and as to Lane, all know that the President esteems him his "guide, counselor, and friend."

Mr. President, as to whether overturning those orders served any good purpose or not in their administration Senators have seriously disputed. For myself, I am not advised sufficiently to form a concrete judgment; but, as the Presiding Officer will recall, there has been considerable discussion on the subject, and with heated differences on all phases. Suppose, instead of the administration of the food and fuel question being vested in these two different agencies under this law, it were now found agreeable to place them all in the hands of the Agricultural Department for economy, or in the hands of the Interior Department because of wisdom shown in its administration, and we could abolish these surplus departments—excessive in prices and expenses and annoying, as it appears to many, in duplicity and perplexity in administration—does the Senator conceive that that could be done now, since we have passed the laws creating the new body, and it has been put in administration, without a repeal of the act and the passage of a new law allowing the consolidation of the departments either in the Department of Agriculture or in the Department of the Interior?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator's point is that the law requires the creation of two separate departments, one for food and the other for fuel, and that the President does not now have, because of the inflexible conditions of this law, the power to consolidate the two departments; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the food-control act does not provide for the appointment of a Food Administrator. It provides that the President himself shall be vested with certain great powers. Section 2 of that act reads:

> That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to enter into any voluntary arrangements or agreements, to create and use any agency or agencies, to accept the services of any person without compensation, to cooperate with any agency or person, to utilize any department or agency of the Government, and to coordinate their activities so as to avoid any preventable loss or duplication of effort or funds.

The Senator from Illinois is too candid a man not to admit, first, that all power is put in the President, and, second, that he is authorized to coordinate any of the powers or functions of any of the departments of the Government in administering this law.

Now, when we come to the question of coal, who is authorized to act? Notice the language of the law:

> SEC. 25. That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, whenever and wherever in his judgment necessary for the efficient prosecution of the war, to fix the price of coal and coke, wherever and whenever sold, either by producer or dealer, to establish rules for the regulation of and to regulate the method of production, sale, shipment, distribution, apportionment, or storage thereof among dealers and consumers, domestic or foreign; said authority and power may be exercised by him in each case through the agency of the Federal Trade Commission during the war or for such part of said time as in his judgment may be necessary.
>
> That if, in the opinion of the President, any such producer or dealer fails or neglects to conform to such prices or regulations, or to conduct his business efficiently under the regulations and control of the President as aforesaid, or conducts it in a manner prejudicial to the public interest—

The President is then authorized to requisition and take over the coal mines, and so forth. But as we go through the bill the solitary seeming place where there is any provision made limiting the power of the President is that, in fixing the price of coal he shall do so through the Federal Trade Commission. So my very able friend from Illinois is in error. Under this law there is no such thing as a Food Administrator spoken of; there is no such thing as a Fuel Administrator spoken of. Great powers are vested in the President, and the President has himself erected these two offices as mere agencies through which he has acted; and yet my very good friend from Illinois has the temerity to assert that they have been very expensive, very inefficient; that they ought to be abolished; and that this bill ought to pass in order that the President may gain the power to abolish that which he, under the authority of the law, himself created.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if I were called upon to award a medal to the eminent junior Senator from Missouri it would be as an inventor. The eminent Senator has invented interesting phraseology, put it in my mouth, and proceeded to assail it. I enjoy the performance as one who views a spectacle of interest, whether it is a "movie" or a tragedy. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Illinois classify himself, so that we may know whether he is now engaged in a "movie," a comedy, a tragedy, or a farce? [Laughter.] I certainly quoted him correctly.

Mr. LEWIS. Really, in order that I may flatter the Senator, as he would deserve, when I am under his assault, of course I reflect a tragedy.

Mr. President, in the first place, the Senator is in error in his understanding of what I said. I never said that these administrations are inefficient. I can not let the Senator put that in my mouth. I said they had been assailed as such; I said they had been assailed as expensive.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to correct the Senator. He and I contended over the food-control bill for four days; and the eminent Senator from Missouri and I both know its contents from the view that we took of it. That law put the power in the hands of the President, and the President was permitted to create, as he has done, this administrator; but the power in the hands of the President to coordinate such agencies is confined to the very sources to which he may have committed the duty. It did not authorize him, Mr. President, to bestow upon the Interior Department, whose powers are prescribed by statute, or upon the Agricultural Department, whose privileges and powers are prescribed by statute, the other powers and duties authorized by this statute. The eminent Senator from Missouri can not gainsay that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to gainsay it out of the statute?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I read:

> The President is authorized—

I omit a portion—

> to utilize any department or agency of the Government, and to coordinate their activities so as to avoid any preventable loss or duplication of effort or funds.

Mr. LEWIS. Exactly; the Senator has finally reached the only necessary section of the statute to which he omitted to advert, the limitation to prevent duplication or loss. That provision did not refer to power; that referred to the fact that after the power is vested the President then can utilize the agencies to prevent duplications in the exercise of the power. I am not referring to duplications; I have heard that matter referred to constantly here; I am referring to the fact which I now assert that before this power could be put into either of the two departments and these extra duties imposed upon them, there would have to be a legislative act authorizing such bestowal of power and execution of duties in the Interior Department or in the Agricultural Department, respectively.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator pardon me again?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. The Senator speaks of where the power is vested. Let me read:

> The President is authorized to make such regulations and issue such orders as are essential effectively to carry out the provisions of this act.

Will the Senator say that does not vest the power in the President?

Mr. LEWIS. I certainly say that it does not vest the power in the President to place these duties in the Interior Department and the Agricultural Department, unless the acts of Congress which created those departments were amended so as to add these duties to their functions.

Mr. REED. Could they not be placed under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture or the Department of the Interior? The words of the statute are:

> That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized * * * to utilize any department or agency of the Government.

Really I think the Senator ought candidly to admit that I am right about this; it may be asking a good deal of him, but I think he should admit it.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, I know my good friend always feels that when one differs from him he can not be candid, for the only candor the Senator would seem to desire disclosed would be always that of agreeing with him. I can not accept that standard of candor. I differ from the Senator.

I again call the Senator's attention to the fact that while under the law which has gone into effect the President is permitted to choose and to summon to his aid any agency he desires, in no wise, Mr. President, did that law authorize the Interior Department, as such, or the Agricultural Department, as such, to enter upon the administration of the provisions of the act. The duties of those departments having been defined by statute, they being statutory departments, there would have to be an act of Congress to impose upon them such duties and make them responsible for their performance. I again assert, sir, and most respectfully insist, that by the very act that the eminent Senator holds in his hand I am verified. I therefore referred to that, sir, as one of the other illustrations.

Now, sir, as to the auditors and comptrollers. There never was so clumsy a machinery devised by government as in the early days we devised on the theory that every man was dishonest and must be watched by another man. We adopted a theory of government, sir, from a predecessor. We selected a man and called him an auditor; we put over him another man called a comptroller; we put each watching the other; and from that day to this, sir, in every instance of accounting these two branches have ever conflicted, with a view of showing either that in intelligence or efficiency, on the one hand, or in industry or honesty, on the other, one was superior to the other. This conflict, as Senators well know, for months and months has raged between these two sources of vain contention. A statute of the United States created these offices and defined their respective duties. Would the eminent lawyer from Missouri, the eminent Member of the Senate, now say that if we were to unite the two, rising to the common sense of an ordinary corporation which has the positions of secretary and treasurer united in one man and the positions of vice president and general manager in another, a theory of business government now that was not then existing, for it was a kind of unwritten law, as Senators will recall, to have one man as secretary and another man as treasurer; but now should we want a different system in government, as I hope will be possible, and undertake to abolish this duplex system and have a comptroller and auditor combined in one official, with clerks about him of expert knowledge, instead of having these two separate departments, with their hundreds of clerks, does my eminent friend from Missouri say that could be done without a statute repealing the two separate statutes that created those departments and vested in them certain powers and defined their duties?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Since the Senator continues making his argument to me personally, which I regard as a very great compliment, I answer I do not agree with the Senator's facts. There has been no roaring——

Mr. LEWIS. "Raging" was the word.

Mr. REED. "Raging." I accept the correction, because I think it is quite as important as the other arguments of the Senator, and the distinction is quite as difficult. There has been no such dispute that ever came to my knowledge. We have a Comptroller of the Currency who is charged with the business pertaining to that particular office. For the main part he is the head of the national banking system. The office has been almost invariably administered with great efficiency. I will not say that there may not be some comptrollers in some other departments.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me advise the Senator. There is a Comptroller of the Currency, which is a separate office; but there is also a Comptroller of the Treasury, and there are comptrollers in the other departments. It is to that I am alluding, and not to the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. REED. Very well. Then there are auditors. There is an Auditor for the War Department, an Auditor for the Treasury Department, an Auditor for the Post Office Department, and so forth. So we have these great departments of government with, I think, all told, six auditors for the whole business of the United States. Each of these auditors has passing through his hands the business of a particular department, and I say that it would be the height of foolishness to mix up the auditing of the Post Office accounts with the auditing of the accounts of the War Department and with the auditing of accounts of other departments of the Government. If that were essential, and if shown to be essential, it could easily be granted; but nobody has made any such claim as that. What has that got to do with the prosecution of the war?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it appears as if the Senator had always misapprehended the purpose of this bill. The auditors and the comptrollers have had constant conflicts; they have been going on ceaselessly. The Senator is to be congratulated in not having run against that condition; but he concedes by his argument that if we sought to amalgamate them it would have to be done by statute amending the statutes creating them. If the necessity arose—and, Mr. President, there are reasons in the mind of every man here leading to the belief that they might arise—that could only be done by a statute superseding the other statutes creating those officers and their particular duties which have run counter to each other and oftentimes in conflict. There is another illustration; I tender it.

The Senator must understand when he says I address my argument occasionally to him, that it is because he entertained the Senate the other day with a very full and elaborate argument against the bill—all as an unnecessary measure; then following one query after the other, calling on Senators to point out any situation which required a statute to remove; and at one point in his argument the Senator will remember he said "I pause for a reply." I arose and stated it was my intention to inform the Senator of many instances, but I would not interrupt his argument by doing so then; but I could not permit my silence to be construed as indicating that I had no knowledge of the necessity. I now reply to him, because his query was then addressed to me.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. In the entire Treasury Department of the United States there is but one comptroller. Through his hands all the accounts pass; whereas, as the Senator says, there are six auditors. If we only have one Comptroller of the Treasury to pass upon accounts, what is the necessity for having six auditors?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. It is almost useless to go into a detail of that kind, because, if we were to pass upon it properly—a careful investigation of the duties of each of these officers—it does not at all go to the principle contained in this bill.

I am very sure that if the Senator from North Carolina will investigate the various auditors' offices he will not come back with a demand for their consolidation. For instance, the Auditor of the Post Office Department is an office which I imagine employs, without having accurate information, probably 200 clerks. The accounts of every post office in the United States go through that office and are checked up, so that almost every postmaster in the United States, at the close of the day's business, has had his reports thoroughly audited; and if there is a mistake made, his attention is called to it.

Mr. President, the Auditor of the War Department audits the accounts that come in from the War Department. It is an entirely different kind of business. It has to do with the pay of men and the expenditures of men engaged in the military service; it is confined to that branch of work; it is as different from the post-office business as it is possible to conceive. Now, what good would result from taking the accounts of the post offices and the accounts of the officers of the Army and jumbling them together in one office. If that were done, I apprehend that the cry would go forth at once for a separation. Certainly we have no demand now for the consolidation of those two offices. Neither will the Senator who now so eloquently defends this bill assert to us that the President desires or asks or demands any such power; nor will the distinguished Senator who is sponsor for this bill assert that the President has demanded or asked for the passage of this bill in order that he may consolidate the business of the six auditors of this Government. We know that is not the purpose of this bill. We ought to be frank with each other; we know that it is not proposed to pause in the midst of this war and reorganize all the ordinary machinery of this Government.

But the Senator also knows that if we were requested to pass a bill that would consolidate these six auditors, we would call in the auditors and other men, and ask them about it, and if we found that it was wise we would grant the power in a moment. If we found that it was imprudent, we ought, as Members of this body, to deny the power.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator as to what good it would do, I say it would save several millions of dollars, in the first place.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator be specific? It will save millions of dollars how?

Mr. OVERMAN. By the dismissal of hundreds of clerks.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators must address the Chair.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to say that I want to yield to Senators to answer any inquiry; but I trust Senators will realize that while I wish to do so, entering into a full discussion of a foreign question, which the Senator from Missouri has entered upon, would take us far afield. I only call attention to that. I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina for a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that all any one of these departments needs is one auditor. These great business men, great accountants, the best in the United States, met and investigated this matter, and made a unanimous report that we needed but one auditor. I would rather take the opinion of those men about this matter than to take even the opinion of the distinguished lawyer and statesman from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Well, Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senator——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, having the floor, I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let me say another thing, and then I will yield to the Senator. Two of the greatest business organizations in the United States, the United States Steel Corporation and the Standard Oil Co., that do billions of dollars of business in this country every year, have but one auditor each. They have but one comptroller each. If that is a good business method for them, it ought to be a good business method for the Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I started to say that I am much obliged to the Senator in charge of this bill for his bit of irony.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; it was not irony.

Mr. REED. But I have this to say: I have seen a great many specimens of these gentlemen who go about on earth reforming the business of other men—these efficiency experts. For the most part they are men who can not get a decent job in a responsible firm. They are like expert witnesses in a case in court—they return a decision, or an opinion, according to the side that employs them. I would rather have the opinion of the Auditor for the Post Office Department—who is not of my party, whom I do not know personally, but who has been kept in that office for many years, through several administrations—as to whether that office ought to be abolished than the opinion of any set of gentlemen brought in here to make an ex parte report. I would rather have the opinion of any one of the Government auditors, and I would rather exercise my own judgment in the matter after an investigation, than have their opinion. But, so far as this doctrine is concerned, that big business houses have only one auditor, of course that is the ordinary rule; and yet we will find out that if they have one head auditor, every large business house has a large number of other men who perform the duties of auditors and who are sent from place to place to audit the books of concerns. I undertake to say that such an institution as the Armour Packing Co. probably has not less than 20 auditors, and that the business is conducted as an entirety, although it is, in the main, a very simple business.

But the business of the Government of the United States is the equivalent of that of a hundred great concerns. Perhaps that is an understatement. We have one branch of our Government that deals with the great questions of transportation. We have another branch of our Government that deals with the question of the collection of taxes. We have another branch of our Government that has to do with excises. We have another branch of our Government that conducts, singly and alone, the greatest business there is on this earth, the greatest business there ever has been on this earth—the Post Office Department—an institution that does business with more individuals every day than the Steel Corporation does business with in 20 years. We have an Army, we have a Navy, we have commissions and boards almost without number, we are conducting manifold activities. When you can get all the fiscal business of that great Government which transacts the affairs governmentally, and to some extent in a business way, of 104,000,000 people audited by six men, you have the proposition down to about as fine a point as can be conceived.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, of course, if so, that merely argues whether it is wise or not. That merely comes back to the question of whose opinion I should take. If the President shall conclude that out of economy and for considerations of better service there should be this consolidation, and the eminent Senator from Missouri shall differ, let us say, as we said when we began, it is a mere difference of opinion. But the question we are considering now is this: Is not this statute necessary in order to permit such consolidation if, in the opinion of those who shall judge of the matter, it is necessary? The eminent Senator from Missouri is compelled to concede that a statute would be required to effect it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not on the committee that reported this bill, and I am one who is seeking light. Am I right in reaching the conclusion from the Senator's argument that if this bill is passed the President, under the powers granted to him, will consolidate all these auditors?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I have not the slightest knowledge whatever of what particular things the President intends to do under this bill. I have a very complete knowledge of things that ought to be done, as I see them. I say to the Senator that I am replying, in the detail which I am presenting, to the query of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] from time to time, asking what things could be done under this bill which, under the law as it now stands, could not be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that the law as it now stands would not permit the consolidation of these auditors; but it does seem to me that the legislative branch of the Government ought to decide whether they should be consolidated, and if they are to decide that question, how can they do it unless to them is presented the evidence on both sides of the proposition?

Mr. LEWIS. It may be that there is not a necessity. It may be that it is not wise. I merely present it as one of the instances where, according to my judgment, there ought to be a change, and where under the bill a change could be made; as illustrating one of many instances which I have given where a law would have to be passed if a change was to be made.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, let me ask the Senator this question. I am uninformed on the subject. I am asking for information. I want to vote for this bill if, after the discussion and the debate, I am convinced that it ought to be passed; but can not somebody who is in favor of the bill tell us this: Does not the President know, and has he not informed those who are behind this bill, just what consolidations of government he proposes to bring about in case the power is granted? Can the Senator from Illinois give me that information?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I can not reply to the Senator with the direct information. I can not give him any information as coming from the President. I can only assure him that I have every confidence that any Senator could get that information from the President by addressing him and asking his views, for, if he has them crystallized already, I can not myself see why he would not convey them; but they have not been conveyed to me altogether.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not the usual course, when such a thing as this takes place—when a change of law comes about that the President desires—that, through the instrumentality of the committee, or a message of the President, or a letter, we can get somewhat in detail, at least, the exact things that he desires to do?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it may be appropriate at the proper time that information should come.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not this the proper time?

Mr. LEWIS. I have taken it for granted that Senators would acquaint themselves, if they desired, as to any particular branch of the Government in which they are interested. I am merely giving illustrations of branches which, according to my judgment, should be consolidated, or which might be consolidated, which under this bill could be consolidated, but without the bill could not be. But I assure the Senator that I am not speaking with any express authority to me to state the particular things which are to be consolidated.

Mr. NORRIS. Ought we not to inquire before we pass a bill of this magnitude, conveying the very comprehensive powers that it does, by which all the branches and bureaus of the Government could be absolutely changed or consolidated, just what is going to be done if we pass the bill?

Mr. LEWIS. The inquiry of the Senator is not foreign to the subject of our deliberations. It is a very natural one, and I have no doubt that if addressed to the source from whence he would get his information he would get a reply quite as full as he would desire and as full as I could give him or could get from anyone to give him.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think that when a bill of this kind comes up each individual Senator ought to see the President and endeavor to find out what he proposed to do in case the bill is passed? Ought not that information to come through the committee?

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator did me the compliment to hear the early part of my argument——

Mr. NORRIS. I heard the Senator's argument.

Mr. LEWIS. He would have ascertained that my position was that this bill had for its purpose to leave the President in a position where, if anything arose suddenly that required immediate action, we gave him authority to act, but that in each instance I took it for granted we would be informed before the execution of the act.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard the Senator's argument to that effect, and, while I have great respect for the Senator's opinion, I do not agree with him in that conclusion. I agree with him in what I believe to be now his later argument—that, for instance, the President could not consolidate the Auditor for the War Department with the Auditor for the Post Office Department unless there were a statute giving him that authority. I understood the Senator just recently to argue that proposition and to cite that as an instance where it was necessary to pass a statute in order to have it done. It seems to me, with due respect to the Senator, that that is really a contradiction of his broader statement that in reality this bill is not necessary, because it does not convey any new power; that the President already possesses it. Of course, if he does possess it, then there is not any real reason why we should pass the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator overlooked the fact that I pointed out that, according to my view of the matter, because of the differences on the part of Senators as to the power existing it was necessary to pass the bill to make clear the power. Now, let me pass on to some of these lists.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LEWIS. On the question of the auditor and the comptroller I assure the Senator I am not interested. The great interest the Senator from Missouri manifests in the question as to whether they shall be consolidated, I assure him, is not to my mind at this time important. I was merely demonstrating departments which could not be consolidated, where economies could not be effected, where branches could not be lopped off and new authority conferred without statutory powers, as a reply to the position taken by eminent Senators on the floor who sincerely believe that all the power that the President could exercise or would exercise in this matter had already been conveyed and conferred by the general power that is within him. That was all of my argument on that branch.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand the statement made by various Senators, it is that we have already conferred upon the President all the power that is necessary in carrying on the war, and that this is a war measure, and if any additional power can be suggested which would be of assistance in carrying on the war they would readily grant it. Now, personally, I concede that proposition to begin with, or if I had any doubt about it I would waive the doubt in favor of giving the President the authority. But it does seem to me that the President, or some one here representing the President, ought to tell us just what is going to be done; and then it seems to me we ought to pass a law giving that specific authority, rather than this blanket authority.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, Mr. President, I appreciate that there are differences as to that; and it is because of those differences that we have the bill before us, and the debate on the part of Senators.

Now, Mr. President, let me make another suggestion which will interest the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the question of the auditors, will he yield to me?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. That matter has been cited not only by the Senator from Illinois but by the Senator in charge of this bill, as being a place where there ought to be consolidation. The Senator in charge of the bill cites it as a prominent example. He states that millions of dollars could be saved by the consolidation, and that six very eminent gentlemen have reported in favor of this consolidation. Let me ask the Senator from North Carolina if he thinks the consolidation ought to be merely temporary, if it is to effect so marvelous a result?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as the Senator is asking me a question, I should like to answer it.

Mr. REED. I have not finished stating it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. President, the whole argument we have heard is that there are six wicked auditors who are squandering millions of dollars of money, and that their business ought to be consolidated and put under one head; and yet, that proposition is brought forward in a bill temporary in its character; for, observe, I read:

> This act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for one year after the termination of the war.

And I read now the last clause:

> Upon the termination of this act—

Which will be at the end of the war and one year thereafter—

> all executive or administrative agencies, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore or as hereafter by law may be provided, any authorization of the President under this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

So that if the evils of which the Senators speak are of the character they express, they ought not to be bringing them in under the terms of this temporary measure; but they should come here with a specific bill proposing a permanent abolition of the departments which they claim are so wasteful.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator did not understand either my original speech or the speech of my friend the distinguished and eloquent Senator from Illinois who now has the floor. I argued in my speech that there was confusion and duplication in every department of the Government; that for a hundred years, according to Mr. Taft, there had grown up the most unscientific Government on earth; and I illustrated these six auditors as one instance of that, as given by Mr. Taft himself and by the Bureau of Efficiency. But anybody who reads the bill knows that this bill will not affect the auditors unless it is done for the purpose of carrying on the war. As the Senator from Illinois says, it will take a statute to consolidate them. Therefore, without knowing or pretending to say what power the President wants for any specific object, for he does not know himself, he wants this general power for fighting the war, and for no other purpose, and it is limited to fighting the war. He has been able to get statutes passed for that purpose. He has sent down here recommendations for little popgun bills to go through Congress, until we have had to pass seven or eight bills that nobody on earth was opposed to; and every day something is coming up by which the President, if he had this authority, could coordinate and consolidate certain functions without having any particular department of the Government in his mind. Now, that is the illustration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Now, observe: The Senator in charge of this bill tells us that after having talked all this time about the auditors in connection with the war, he did not mean to say they were important at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. For fighting the war.

Mr. REED. For fighting the war. So that the only thing the Senator has been able to cite in support of a bill which is expressly limited to fighting the war is something that has nothing to do with fighting the war. Once more illustrating what I said in the beginning of this debate, that the Senator, after six weeks' study, had been unable to tell us a single thing that ought to be done.

But again, the Senator has once more indulged in a statement which he has often made, and which I think must please him very well, because he makes it every time this bill is up—that our Government has grown up for a hundred years, and that it is full of confusion and duplication, and is the most unscientific government on earth, referring, of course, to its business activities. Now, the Senator says this bill is brought in here to rectify that; and yet, by express language, he limits it to the time of this war, and provides that at the end of this war, and 12 months thereafter, we shall go back to the confusion, we shall go back to the duplication, we shall return to the most unscientific government on earth.

I want to indulge in no harsh statement, and I will not; but I will say that I am unable to understand the argument of a Senator which asserts that our Government is the most unscientific on earth, and that it is full of confusion and full of duplication, and hence that this bill must be passed, and then that proposes, in an amendment brought in by the Senator himself in the committee, to go back at the end of the war to the old confusion and to the old inefficiency.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about my being the author of the bill, but I favor it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, let me reply to the Senator from Missouri.

The Senator from Missouri has an aptitude of misapprehending a situation when it suits the conspiracy of his logic. This bill does not occupy any such position as the eminent Senator's premises would convey. The bill does not provide that these corrections shall be but for two years. The bill provides that the thing done by the Executive order of the President shall be but for two years, leaving it later, let us hope, to the ordinary patriotism and sense of this body, that if what is done by an Executive order under this bill should within the time of the war be shown to be just and applicable to peace times, then this body, by specific act of legislation, would continue it.

The provision of the bill is not, as the eminent Senator would have us think when he holds it up as having a ridiculous aspect, in that the thing itself, if right, is right in peace as well as in war, but limited by us to war only. The bill does that thing which the Constitution of the United States permits. What is it? The Constitution provides, first, that no appropriation for war purposes shall exceed two years; second, Mr. President, that the attitude of the President in war matters shall only be through war times. All that this bill does is to say that the thing which we permit the President to do by Executive order shall itself only remain in force as an Executive order within that time.

The Senator seems not to apprehend, but to wholly misapprehend, this measure. Therefore, if at the end of the war it were to lapse, and this body, through the precedent that was established, the evidence that was given, desired then in peace times to renew it, it is within its privilege. That is all this bill does. It merely conforms to the constitutional clause respecting war and appropriations in time of war.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator, having, I trust, corrected his misapprehension.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator has not only not corrected my misapprehension, but I was under no misapprehension. In the first place, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is no statutory two-year limitation upon this bill. This is not an appropriation bill. I suggest that the Senator read it. This bill can be made to last until a Congress shall repeal it. It can be made as perpetual as any other law of the Republic, and its beneficence can be extended to all ages and all times, save as a future Congress may repeal it, as Congress can repeal any other statute. Senators stand here declaiming that there are certain enormities in government that must be wiped out, and that there are certain millions of dollars that are being wasted that must be saved, and yet they bring in a bill which expressly provides—that this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for one year after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time during the said year as the President may designate.

And then the final clause of the bill, I repeat, is:

Upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agencies, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore or as hereafter by law may be provided, any authorization of the President under this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

So that the Senator surely can not claim that it is proposed by this bill to permanently reform the various departments and agencies of this Government. The bill is brought forward as a war measure pure and simple; and at the end of the war, by express provision—not by implication, but by express provision—we go back to the exact point where we will be when the bill is passed. I do not see how Senators can dispute that fact, which lies upon the surface of the bill, and which is as plain as the language of man can make it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have yielded to this contribution to my address possibly to improve it so as to attract attention by what others have said to what I have said in my speech.

But, sir, I desire to say to the eminent Senator from Missouri he again is under a misapprehension as to the measure, and I am of the opinion that had he not been under a misapprehension we would have had his valiant support to the full extent that we have had his opposition. The bill provides that these changes shall not have any longer effect as changes under the Executive order, but there is nothing whatever in the provision to prevent this body from continuing the act, as it will be called upon to continue many acts which were passed purely for use of war, or to amend them. The mere fact that the bill itself does not give to the Executive the right to exercise perpetual power is to its virtue and not as a vice against it.

I should like to address one other suggestion to the Senator from Georgia as well as to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, keeping their interest as expressed in mind. Sir, we have lately taken the Virgin Islands. They are proceeding to administer them. Certain conditions I need not recur to on the floor have transpired concerning them. Would the Senator from Missouri now quickly merge the duties of the Insular Commission and assume to administer the Virgin Islands with the War Department or the Department of State without a statute authorizing the President to do it? We created here, in my judgment, through the wise policy of a previous administration, an insular department to separate it from the conditions which then existed and were burdensome. That now has assumed to administer it. Let me say, and I am anxious not to wander within the privilege of the floor, Mr. President, anxious to administer at this time within the full meaning of the law that vested this control in the insular possessions, we find suddenly a form of war administration put upon the Insular Commission because of the situation of those islands by a condition the public papers and other information suggest at once to your minds, that I need not at this time allude to—the situation confused because of want of power in the insular department that is necessary to properly administer the present complication, but which only a war department has by law.

No one can deny that if by Executive order now in five minutes you could place the needed functions in the hands of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of State that it would not be done. Mr. President, it can not be done. The Insular Commission has powers which can not be merged into those of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of State for even war uses without a statute repealing the powers that are now in the hands exercised by the commission.

Mr. REED. What power does the Senator refer to?

Mr. LEWIS. The commission, by the administration of these islands, has the power vested in them to administer them, and now are they to be denied by statute if it is desired to vest them in the Secretary of State for certain diplomatic reasons? The Senator will I am sure say that I am now right, that I want to do it by statute.

Mr. REED. What power does the Senator refer to? What the Senator refers to I am unable to determine.

Mr. LEWIS. I took it for granted that the Senator is acquainted with the bill and likewise that he is acquainted with the powers and duties of the Secretary of War, and that he is equally acquainted with the duties and powers of the Secretary of State. Those are the powers to which I refer.

Mr. REED. What is the trouble? What is it about?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator is equally advised, as I am, of the trouble which surrounds this Government just now. It is that main trouble we are now seeking to meet and the troubles that have come one by one.

Mr. REED. What is it the Senator wants to do?

Mr. LEWIS. It is immaterial what this Senator wants to do or what another wants to have done.

Mr. REED. What is that thing? That is what I wanted to get.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator can get his information from such source as expects to exercise the authority.

Mr. REED. That is the most illuminating remark I have heard the Senator make. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. I must admit that there is that in the Senator's speech which discloses to all need of illumination. The eminent Senator from Missouri should be grateful to any source from whence it comes. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, I wish to continue this debate. I want to invite the attention of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Iowa. I should like to have the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] apprised of the fact that I now touch on that subject. Much is said about the Federal Reserve Board, and much has been said about the Federal Trade Commission, as though these were sacred things not to be profaned by supervision. What sanctity in government has established these boards and their right of sovereign existence? Where is any superlative wisdom on the part of those exercising and executing these duties, which should be for the benefit of this Nation? Now, as to the Interstate Commerce Commission, where is any vested right of office on the part of any man who is a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission? Where is any sacred privilege on the part of any man who is a member of the Federal Reserve Board or an equal sanctity upon the part of a member of the Federal Trade Commission to remain in office or to be exempt from revision of duties? I answer the Senator I do not know what is in the mind of the President. I do not know what will be done under the law in detail, but I say to the Senator, and you can draw any deduction from what I am now saying, that if I were in control of the Government I would on to-morrow abolish the board known as the Interstate Commerce Commission. I would abolish the board known as the Federal Trade Commission. I would abolish the board known as the Federal Reserve Board. I would for coordination and economy constitute one general board of finance and transportation, a number of which would be expert in banking and finance, a number of which, as business men, would be expert in business, a number of which would be expert in railroads. This constituted, concentrated, consolidated board of finance and transportation would be the agency to transact all the matters now done by all the boards I mention. I would have a part of the board treat the subject in which it was skilled, another part of the board treating the subject in which it was skilled, and I, sir, would continue that system. I would not continue these various boards as they now exist. There are too many of these boards, and they have created what this country feels are too many official boarders upon the Government.

For myself, sir, without knowing what shall be done under the act, I say to the Senate that if it does allow that form of consolidation for the purpose of the war financing and railroading, while the railroads are being controlled by the Government, it should all be done through one single board, under one single influence, exercised by one single agency.

At the same time I favor the control of business by the same agency necessary to be controlled in order to control the war, and by the same agency I would have finance, transportation, and trade go along with each other, concentrated and consolidated harmoniously, instead of being conducted by different boards conflicting with each other and contesting in jurisdiction in the work of each other either out of pride of power or jealousy of personnel.

Mr. CUMMINS and Mr. WADSWORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from New York will permit me, the Senator from Iowa has risen first, and I yield to him, and then I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CUMMINS. There may be very much merit in the suggestion just made by the Senator from Illinois, and if it were proposed Congress might adopt that plan. I only rose to ask the Senator from Illinois whether, in his opinion, this bill confers upon the President authority to create any such board as he has described of distinguished financiers and skilled men in the transportation service?

Mr. LEWIS. My reply to the Senator is that this bill does permit the President of the United States, as I read the bill, to establish the board as an agency, then to take certain members of the Federal Reserve Board, certain members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, certain members of the Federal Trade Commission, using the men who have just been named as constituting the main board, and concentrate all their efforts in one. That would be the coordination and utilization of the agencies of the Government as premitted in the bill. Such is my reply to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from Illinois has misapprehended the bill as fully as he believed the Senator from Missouri had misapprehended it. I do not find in the bill any authority to create any such board. The President can take an agency or a commission or an officer existing now under the laws of the United States and transfer to that office, that agency, that commission the power which he desires that it may use.

Mr. LEWIS. By using the word "board" I might have caused the Senate to feel that I meant to create an original tribunal merely called a board. I used that word before because we have been using it in connection with what we have called the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Trade Commission. Of course, I mean an agency, born of the consolidation, by any name. I invite the Senator's attention now to section 1, lines 9 and 10.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. In just a moment. One says where the President as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces is authorized "to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer." I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the report of the committee, which perhaps answers the question of the Senator from Iowa with reference to this particular bill. As originally introduced the bill probably would have given such authority and power as the Senator from Iowa suggests, and the Senator from Illinois may have that in mind, but if the Senator will look at page 3, beginning with line 4, he will see that the committee has reported the following language to be stricken from the bill as it was originally introduced, to wit:

> And to employ by Executive order any additional agency or agencies and to vest therein the performance of such functions as he may deem appropriate.

That provision in the original bill, if the report of the committee is adopted, would be eliminated, and it would be under that provision, I think, that the authority would be found to do what has been suggested by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very much opposed to the provision in its present form for reasons which I shall give the Senate before the debate concludes. I did not suppose, however, that it contained the power which has just been claimed by the Senator from Illinois. If it does it is infinitely more dangerous and menacing and indefensible than I supposed it to be. I shall not, however, characterize the bill as I would characterize it if I thought it contained any such power as the Senator has now suggested.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to express my full agreement with the Senator from Illinois as to the meaning of this bill. The language at the close of the section that was stricken out as originally drawn reads—> and to employ by Executive order any additional agency or agencies and to vest therein the performance of such functions as he may deem appropriate.

That was the original draft, and it was just as broad as language could make it. The committee struck that out and put other language in which in practical effect accomplishes precisely the same result. Let me read it. Section 2 was amended so as to provide—

> That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize—> to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law.

A new word—

Mr. President, under the Council of National Defense there were innumerable executive and administrative agencies. Under the food and fuel act and under the alien enemy act the President was given the right to create and has created innumerable agencies. Any of the agencies put into any of these places may be taken by the President and put into a board, as this bill is drawn. In practical effect it gives a free hand to create an agency under the existing laws and to transfer to them any of the powers covered by the bill. It practically goes back, in my opinion, to the bill as it was first written.

I do not always agree with the Senator from Illinois, but I enjoy the privilege of agreeing with his construction of the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to hear that my eminent friend from Georgia does not always agree with me, and thus is wrong at any time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish the Senator was always right.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret that at any other time I may have been thought wrong by the Senator. Now, sir, looking at the legal conclusion, we are discussing now what, under the bill, could be done. Senators have inveighed against my position. My eminent friend from Missouri and others have done so. I have now pointed out specifically a thing in which I am greatly interested. Having watched the movements of our Government, I have pointed out the particular thing that ought to be done which, in my judgment, also would point to a success that the bill would bring if in the conduct of the war, the administration of the Government, the President feels that such would be necessary to win the war or accomplish any object in the war. I hold that under the bill these things that I pointed out could be done, and I appeal to Senators opposing the bill, and I propound this interrogatory, Could they be done without a statute? The answer must be, they could not. Could these powers be taken from these respective boards and centralized in a single body, though made up of the membership of the same men of the old boards, without the statute now before the Senate for consideration or a similar one being enacted? The reply would have to be that they could not. Therefore a statute would be required to make it effective. The answer must be some statute of this kind.

Mr. President, I have concluded the particular details. If I have others, I shall not burden the Senate with them. I have allowed myself to be interrupted at length, and I state in the form of "exhibits" to the evidence that may point to particular proof to sustain certain conclusions I have drawn from the bill.

Now, I want to say to Senators, I have no more knowledge than the most uninformed Senator of what particular thing is in the mind of the Executive as to what he would do under the bill, nor of his advisors, speaking of the Cabinet as such. I have heard no more than you have heard. I am advised, however, from different branches and different sources of the need of changes. In what spirit and in what way those changes will be affected. I am compelled to leave to the Executive himself. For myself, I will not anticipate how he will make them, when he will make them, or where he will make them; but I will assume that the impeachment you have made as to the present system is well founded, that the wrongs should be remedied, and that this bill will remedy them, and therefore the bill should pass.

Mr. President, what is the opposition to the bill? It takes two forms. One that it is unconstitutional to exercise such authority; the other that it is a usurpation of executive powers to indulge in and enjoy it. What ancient echoes! How long have we heard them! On the part of any President to do anything in any emergency he has been confronted with the cry "unconstitutional," or with the alarm of "usurpation of power."

Mr. President, a man has but to recall the history of the land to realize how these things are but a repetition; how Andrew Jackson was held up to excoriations on the floor of the Senate when he sought an Executive order for the general concentration of the departments, for the utilization of the officers then in power, for the cutting off of those things that were useless, that grew out of the land as excresences.

Does any Senator have a need of information as to what is called the Crawford Act of that time, an act that had been gotten through by Crawford, of Georgia, that had for its purpose that a man should occupy office only for the full term, until the end of his term?

When Jackson sought to remedy that by putting out men who were inefficient, without regard to whether the term had expired or not, in a bill similar to the one before us, and from a part of which it appears the committee has copied the phraseology, he was arraigned as having for his intent the "usurpation of power" and drawing to himself the strength to utilize the muniments of government for some private welfare that none could see, but all could accuse.

When Lincoln issued his emancipation proclamation, then without regard to the justice and equity and humanity of it, how many learned intellects there were in the country who called attention that he was striking property down by an Executive order, and not by legislation, granting that, even if it were right, it should be done by Congress. We heard that from both branches of the contention, as we now remember history.

Shall the eminent junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] fail to recall that when Theodore Roosevelt, then President of the United States, found it necessary, in order to meet certain unwonted conditions, to "take the Panama Canal," to use his own language, how upon every forum he, too, was made the object of condemnation upon the ground of "usurpation," "unconstitutional"? Yet there is not a man to-day, of any political party, consulting the emotions of his heart, the information of his brain, and the conditions of his country, who will not applaud the courage that dared step over the bounds of legislative prohibition and seize the situation as he found it in order to protect his land at an hour when war from the East brooded like a black cloud fraught with storm over the houses of the Nation; and yet he, too, heard "usurper"; he heard "unconstitutional" hurled at him.

Has it come to the point that every time we assume to do anything that the emergency requires and wisdom and patriotism dictate we are ever to be confronted with suggestions, born of technical construction and pride of opinion, how to defeat it, never how to accomplish it?

I think I catch the temper of the American public, and I warn this body, if I may be so bold as to use the language, that the American public will not be patient with those who ever seek a reason to prevent the Executive from carrying out the will that he feels it is necessary to enforce in this trying hour, when he, as Commander in Chief, should have the right and privilege. The country has put Woodrow Wilson in command; he is the Commander in Chief. The war has been declared by a joint resolution passed by the people through the voice of their representatives; the power has been placed in him to conduct the war; he asks it of this body to give him assistance, and, in giving him assistance, he indicates with clearness some of the things which he asks at your hands.

The joint resolution declaring war provides:

> That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the Government to carry on war against the Imperial German Government.

I call the Senate to remember that Woodrow Wilson will be President for three years. Nothing but death can prevent that—and God is good to America. President Wilson will command this war. He will take responsibility and will not allow any agency to deprive him of the necessary authority to win this fight. I warn you that neither for political opportunity nor for personal advantage of any man will the opponents of unlimited authority to the Commander in Chief be permitted by the people to succeed.

The people want this war won. The country wants the Germans beat back—that they may not beat America down. Any man who now is against the war is against America, and any man who is against any measure that the President demands as necessary to win the war is against the President.

The people of the United States will not be patient with obstruction rolled in the road labeled "Constitution," or of the call summoning opposition in the ancient cry, "Beware of usurpation of power." The country gave Wilson the power in the declaration of war, and demands of Congress to throw off its bridle and bit.

When we ask here for these resources, that he may utilize the necessary power, distinguished Senators find a reason for opposing the request. They may be right in theory; the construction of the law they adopt may be correct as construction by rule long prevailing in peace time; in principle of constitutional construction it may not be sustained by precedents; but, Mr. President, this is not the hour when the Nation will tolerate obstruction from refined minds or for mere analytical deductions or the indulgence of constitutional disquisitions, because it may be their opportunity to revel in them. They must confront the fact that that man anywhere who opposes the war, opposes his country, and the man who opposes the methods the President asks for conducting the war, opposes the President. There is no way he can escape the condemnation. Merely that he finds an excuse for doing it in constitutional argument nor will the assertion of conscientious opposition justify it. The test of patriotism is not yielding up a view which you regard to be wrong. The test of patriotism on the part of ability and sagacity is to yield up that which you feel is right, if to do so would produce a greater result, than to exert and insist upon your own conception or execution. Sirs, it is because of that, I respectfully urge, that these objections by eminent Senators to this measure do violence to the purposes for which we sit here. That they obstruct where they should have advanced. They defeat where they should succeed. They dishonor where they should ennoble. They proceed upon grounds of delicate and technical character that can not be justified in the plain mind of the plain citizen who is requiring of Congress now haste that it may give quick victory, and not continue this slow, drawn effusion of intellectual vaticination to gratify themselves in economic, polemic, or political perversity.

Contemplate what this Nation has done with the clumsy and embarrassing machinery that was transmitted to the present administration. A Nation at peace, crystallized in its convictions that war could never be put upon America and that there would never be a necessity to prepare for any conflict from without. Still, within one year this indomitable America put an Army in the field exceeding in numbers and equipment that which any free country ever produced in the same length of time since history was recorded. It brought its Navy from the fourth rate to the second class of the world, and in transporting soldiers to foreign fields across turbulent and assailed seas lost not one sailor of a ship patrolled by the American Navy. It supplied in foods and necessities three nations of the earth, to an extent and character exceeding that which had ever contributed in the same length of time from any sources Christ fed the famished with the loaves and fishes upon the Sea of Galilee. It expended in money for its own defense and the uses of its allies in conflict, a sum of money passing into the billions of dollars—exceeding in amount that which was ever contributed in the same length of time from any sources for any purposes under any circumstances in the recorded history of time.

Let it be remembered that the United States, far removed from conflict, educated to peace, deluded in the belief that isolation meant security and a law-abiding nation meant tranquillity as against the world, suddenly transformed itself, through the necessities of the defense of its life against assault, and within one year's time equipped and set afoot and marching on its way to the salvation of America men, money, and equipment the equal of that which any country at war, resting on arms, awaiting bugle call to war, educated in 100 years of yearly conflict in some quarter of the globe, had done in three years.

Without entering into scheduled detail, let us contemplate America's self-imposed soul's transformation:

She reversed the currents of her life for a generation. She had wooed her blood to flow as tranquil streams of peace. In an hour she had beaten them into foaming gushes of war. She had luxuriated as a prodigal in indulgence to every desire and reveled in every extravagance. In a day she became the meek convert to economy and the obedient disciple of frugal saving. From a nation of a life limited to the consideration of her own Republic she became the anxious guardian of the needs of the world. From a citizenship that concerned itself only with activities and welfare of her own States, she expanded as conservator and defender of the rights of man in every land. From a nation whose only object was self-preservation, she transformed into a mother of justice to man; a guardian of liberty to nations; then resolved her existence into a pledge to all civilization for the rights of the weak and the deliverance of the oppressed.

In all time there has been no such record of sacrifice of interests, of yielding up of comfort, of giving of the wealth, and the deliverance of children even unto death for the salvation of the world to enjoyment of liberty and its preservation upon the principles of Christianity.

I know the sincerity of every Senator opposing this bill, but I warn you, Senators; I call your attention that if this bill does not pass, Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber, some of them, and Senators on this side of the Chamber, some of them, will be found in different parts of this country impeaching the administration for the clumsy manner in which it is conducting the affairs of the Republic, its failure to coordinate its branches, and its omission to centralize its powers; its extravagant methods of execution; its want of executive ability; and its failure before the world. Mr. President, I can not be patient longer with the discussion or condone the reasons offered as excuse for the delay in passing the bill. I will not indorse opposition to a measure in time of war that might only be justified because of some conditions in time of peace.

This measure is brought here, and you are presented by the President himself with the argument for the necessity of it. He has tendered it and asks you to give him the use of it. He must have some reasons for it. Surely you will grant him that his reasons are not lawless. He has no private purpose to serve; he has no political object to benefit. He must have a purpose which you will trust to your Commander in Chief, or he is not worthy of his seat and should be toppled from it by your impeachment.

I charge no man with insincerity; I recognize the purpose of every man in his opposition; but I do say here that when I view this measure and contemplate what I feel to be the object of it, to benefit this country and help the victory that the hearts of our people pray for, I say that those who oppose it may take their satisfaction in nice disquisitions of law, in the conceit of analyses upon constitutional authority, and in the indulgence of pride of opinion; but in doing so these Senators serve the Philistines.

"As for me and my house, we serve the Lord."

Remove the obstructions. Let this bill pass.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the discussion this afternoon has been very interesting. The versatility and variety of information has enabled Senators to plant themselves on the circumference of universality and take a crack at creation; they have discussed every subject, from a pebble to the stars, but, fortunately for the Senate, they have done so learnedly. I shall only engage the attention of the Senate for a very few moments; I shall content myself in stating in a few words what I think of this bill, and then I shall permit the Senate to proceed with its further consideration.

Mr. President, there are many of the powers of autocracy embodied in the pending bill, powers which may be necessary for the successful or proper conduct of the war. I am impressed, however, by the fact that the powers sought to be conferred by this bill, so far as my reading of American history goes, are powers that were never exercised by the Chief Executive of this Republic in any of the great emergencies which mark its glorious past.

One of the disquieting signs of the times is the avaricious reaching out for power by every department of the executive and administrative branches of this Government. If the Congress had not already gone so far in the delegation of these unusual powers I would hesitate long before giving my vote or quietly acquiescing in the adoption of this measure. I still have hope that before it reaches a final vote upon its passage it may be shorn of some of the powers which I do not think necessary to vest in the President in order that he may perform properly the functions of his great place and meet the requirements of the terrific situation that confronts us.

The transference to the executive department of the Government of so many functions which belong to other departments has well-nigh changed this Republic, in fact it has, into an autocracy, and I am persuaded to believe that this additional power will not add to our difficulties in the reorganization and rehabilitation of the Republic after the war is over. So, viewing it from this standpoint and in this light I expect to vote for the measure.

I realize further, Mr. President, that the real purpose of this bill is to permit, with legislative approval, the Chief Executive to do many things that were suggested by the honorable Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] some weeks ago that ought to be done, and in the doing of these things to deny to the honorable Senator credit for the suggestion.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment while I give the reason for voting this afternoon for the report of the conference committee, about which a great deal has been said, some of which I think was unnecessarily acrimonious. I want to say a word in behalf of that class of our people who in time of war bear the brunt of the conflict and in time of peace, by their patient toil, produce the stuff to feed and clothe the world. To paraphrase the language of another—

"Bowed by the burden of taxation, he leans upon his hoe and gazes upon the ground, the tragedy of injustice written in the wrinkles on his face and on his back the burden of the world."

Mr. President, nothing should be left undone by this body calculated to strengthen American arms and promote the interests of our cause in this death grapple of the nations. If necessary to call to the service of the Nation every man, woman, and child beneath the flag for the success of our undertaking, I, when convinced of that fact, am willing and shall vote for such a measure. In time of war everything the citizen owns belongs to his country if his country needs it—even his life. No man will go further or do more in proportion to his ability than I will in that direction. But, Mr. President, I want this great force handled and disposed with an impartial hand. I want the same rule, the same measure, used in measuring the duty of capital that is employed in measuring the obligations of labor. I would not exempt either from the pressing obligations of the hour. There is a duty to be performed by the man who reaps as well as the man who sows, the man who plans as well as the man who executes. If there is an evil anywhere in our system, let us correct that evil by extirpating the root, removing the cause. The problems before us appear almost insoluble. The cause of our country certainly is a righteous cause; and if it is a righteous cause it is the cause of the people, and to win it must have the moral support of all the people. A war to make the world safe for democracy must be waged by the people, and the people must be fired and enthused by the spirit, the genius, and purpose of democracy. And that fact can not be too well understood by the servants of the people who compose the Congress of the United States. You can not erect an enduring structure upon a mere temporary foundation, nor can you build a lasting democracy upon expedient or imperialistic principles and policies. The lasting element in government is the inherent principle of moral law, and its foundation must rest upon justice. Justice is the one everlasting quality in the governmental fabric. "The moral law is written on the tablets of eternity. For every false word or unrighteous deed, for cruelty and oppression, for lust or vanity, the price has to be paid at last," says Froude; and that is true in time of war as well as in times of peace.

Mr. President, I never see a man in these terrible times scheming to make money out of this war or shirking responsibility when blood is flowing from the veins of our precious boys in the trenches of France like the waters of Niagara, when the cries from broken-hearted mothers, bereaved wives, and orphaned children fill the circumambient air—I never see such a creature without a feeling of contempt, mingled with a profound sense of commiseration. It is useless to grow angry and denounce furiously such a person, because it does no good, nor will extreme punishment avail anything. Such perfidy can be accounted for only upon the theory that the man does not know the consequences of his own acts. It betokens a moral obliquity for which doubtless the foolish creature is in part only responsible. "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

I am in favor of doing the thing needful to win this war. If necessary to conscript labor, we will conscript it; but do not let us conscript labor until we first conscript the dollars of the rich and every other useful member of society. I believe to the greed and cupidity of the capitalistic element of this country is due in a large measure the thoughtlessness, indifference, and selfishness manifested by labor in some of the industries of this country. These laboring men are only following the example set by the plutocratic elements who conceal their cupidity by wrapping themselves in the American flag and, like the pharisees of old, stand on the street corner and in the churches and proclaim their exalted virtues.

At this point I want to call attention to a suggestion made by Mr. Denman, formerly chairman of the Shipping Board, in testifying before the Commerce Committee, which has my most cordial and unqualified approval. He says, speaking of this Hog Island infamy:

> What should really have been done there, if I may hazard the suggestion, is this: Those gentlemen in New York should have said to the Shipping Board, "Why do you not form a $2,000 corporation and accept from us these five or six men at $1 a year?" If capital is going to justify the $1-a-year system, why, when we had a great constructive enterprise for the Government to carry through, could they not have said to us, "Take these men"?
>
> Then we could have gone to labor and we could have said, "Now, the fellows on top with the money are contributing their bit. Do not press us all the time for increased wages; do not strike; do not stop your work; but come in and play the game along, because this is not the time to try to get as much as the other fellow is getting."
>
> If we could only put our finger on one place in this country where that had been done, it would simplify the labor problem enormously. But these men started in at 10 per cent—

These patriots for pelf!—

These men started in at 10 per cent, and they got one administrator to figure 6 per cent, and they fought all the way down the line, until they are now getting what must be a very liberal compensation; and in the process of doing it they have done exactly, in the way of delaying things, what it is complained that the labor men are doing in the way of delaying things to get their bit.

In this connection, Mr. President, I want to call the Senate's attention to the fact that when the Government came to deal with capital in the matter of conducting the war, in my judgment, an unwarranted generosity has been shown capital. The railroads which the Government has taken over in order to aid the Government to more successfully conduct our campaign against Germany are now enjoying probably the most profitable period in the history of the railroad business in America. The price which the American people are paying for the use of these roads is the average profits for the three years next preceding June, 1917, which I am told were the fattest years in the railroad business. There is no justice in that. There is no fairness in it. Practically every other interest, every citizen, is making a sacrifice, and I can see no reason why this especial privilege or advantage should be extended to the railroads. There is nothing sacred in railroad bonds which entitles them to special favors in this hour of our national distress. Every dollar unjustly taken from the National Treasury for the excessive pay of the railroads for service rendered during this war enhances the debt which posterity must pay and increases the burden which must be borne by the generations that follow us. It adds just that much to the enormous load which so heavily rests upon the aching stoop of the already tired and overburdened toilers and their children.

But that is not all. During our investigation of the cause of the shortage of sugar and coal it was developed that the sugar refiners were awarded the same profits for refining sugar that they enjoyed in peace times. When I asked the distinguished witness before the committee why that special favor was extended to the wealthy and prosperous refiners his answer was that "corporations would not play the game unless they are given dividends."

Ah, Mr. President, it is a sad and lamentable state of things when we have to buy the rich men or corporations of this country to perform their duty to their country in a great emergency like the present. And when we came to levy taxes with which to meet the expenses of this war Congress refused to tax the excess war profits as much as 50 per cent. Men have grown fabulously rich out of the opportunities afforded by this war, and yet they are going to be permitted to retain those riches while the burden of taxation will be borne by the children of toilers yet unborn! Mr. President, it is all wrong. It is not giving the toilers of this country a square deal.

When you consider all of these things and take into account human nature as it has been since the days of the Pharaohs, all down through the ages to the present time, and as it will continue to the end, you will understand why the selfishness of man asserts itself as it has been manifested by some of the laboring people in the great shipbuilding enterprises of this country.

If the man of capital at the beginning of this war had brought his plethoric purse and thrown it down upon the altar of his country and said, "Take it and use it. It is yours. For the good of our Nation, not only do I consecrate my money but I give my time and all to the service of the Stars and Stripes"—if the men of large means had manifested that altruistic, patriotic spirit that ought to animate the breast of every devoted American citizen there never would have been a word of protest, complaint, or question uttered by the great masses of laboring men and women in this Republic.

In the words of Edwin Markham—

For all of your days prepare,
And meet them ever alike:
When you are the anvil, bear;
When you are the hammer, strike!

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I would not address the Senate at this late hour of the day on this bill if it were not for the fact that I have made arrangements to be absent to-morrow, to visit some Arizona boys in the National Army at one of the near-by camps. That is my apology for consuming time this late in the afternoon.

Following the precedent set by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who preceded me, I will ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD at the beginning of my remarks a copy of the bill under consideration, Senate bill 3771, the so-called Overman bill. I should like to ask that it be included in the RECORD as reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

The bill, as reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, is as follows:

A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces, the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record: Provided, That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for one year after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time during the said year as the President may designate: Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued pursuant to this act and during the time that this act is in force: Provided further, That the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war.

SEC. 2. That in carrying out the purposes of this act the President is authorized to utilize, coordinate, or consolidate any executive or administrative commissions, bureaus, agencies, offices, or officers now existing by law, to transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another, to transfer the personnel thereof or any part of it either by detail or assignment, together with the whole or any part of the records and public property belonging thereto.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, any moneys heretofore and hereafter appropriated for the use of any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer shall be expended only for the purposes for which it was appropriated under the direction of such other agency as may be directed by the President hereunder to perform and execute said function.

SEC. 4. That should the President, in redistributing the functions among the executive agencies as provided in this act, conclude that any bureau should be abolished and it or their duties and functions conferred upon some other department or bureau or eliminated entirely, he shall report his conclusions to Congress with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws conflicting with the provisions of this act are to the extent of such conflict suspended while this act is in force.

Upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agencies, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as heretofore or as hereafter by law may be provided, any authorization of the President under this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. ASHURST. The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is one to whom we all listen with pleasure, and to whom we send out a Macedonian cry for help when we are candidates for office. We are glad to hear his voice upon the hustings urging that we be returned in election time, and I am pleased that so many Senators listened to him this afternoon. Those upon our side of the Chamber who attempt to confuse him by whispering here and there, in order to divert his attention, will not divert his attention nor his mind from the subject upon which he is talking; and those who willfully seek to divert him will be the first to call for his assistance. [Reading:]

A democracy making war is never an agreeable sight, for it is not in its normal line of life. And those who sneer or jeer because it does not play the game as well as might be pay an unconscious compliment to the merits of free institutions. It takes time to accustom men to the short, hard words of command and to the surrender of personal judgment. It is not easy either for a nation to turn its back upon the conception of a world where justice works out its ends by quiet processes and in its stead come to the stern belief that the ultimate court is a battle field. So if there is wrenching and side slipping and confusion, there should be no surprise. The surprise to me has been with what comparative ease the transition has been made and how much unconscious preparation for the new work has been already made.

Perusing this afternoon a copy of the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior, my mind caught that paragraph. It states the handicap under which our Government labors. It states so well the difficulties which we have to meet and sets down in such terse, luminous, and dignified language what we must do that I thought it ought to be read. It is an excerpt from the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year 1917.

The Constitution of the United States specifically empowers the Congress to declare war, and it prohibits such powers to the States. Quite distinct from the reasons and the circumstances under which war may be declared, the President, upon such declaration, instantly becomes the directing figure in the contest. This is for the reason that the Constitution makes him Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy as well as of the militia when called into the service of the United States. Article II, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

The President shall be the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States. * * *

Under the narrowest and most restricted interpretation, to be Commander in Chief means a vast deal.

Such power, however, does not mean power to create armies or navies or power to raise funds for war purposes, for these are duties and prerogatives of Congress; but after the men, money, munitions, and ships are supplied, the President becomes commander in all that the word implies. He has full power to appoint or remove commanders on land and sea, to station and direct the movement of troops, to plan and direct campaigns, to devise any and all measures to overcome the enemy, to dictate matters that may mean life or death for both soldiery and civilians. A clear expression of the difference in the functions and duties of Congress and of the President in the matter of conducting a war is stated by the Supreme Court of the United State in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall., 139), to wit:

Congress has the power not only to raise and support and govern armies but to declare war. It has therefore the power to provide by law for carrying on the war. This power necessarily extends to all legislation essential to the prosecution of war with vigor and success, except such as interferes with the command of the forces and the conduct of campaigns. That power and duty belong to the President as Commander in Chief.

When Fort Sumter was fired on, in April, 1861, under circumstances which could mean nothing less than war, some Presidents might have called Congress into extraordinary session, and the critical posture of affairs at that time seemed to demand an extra session of Congress; but President Lincoln chose a wiser course. He knew that in both Houses there would be strong differences of opinion; he knew that valuable time would be lost in fruitless and useless debate. He therefore dealt with the situation in the strong and direct way and postponed the calling of Congress for some weeks, placing the date of assembling of Congress as late as the 4th of July that year.

Meanwhile the President set about raising an army. After the fall of Fort Sumter he issued a proclamation calling for 75,000 State militia to be mustered into the national service for a period of three months.

The suppression of insurrection being one of the purposes for which the President may call out the militia, such action was taken. The President promptly decided, however, to take advantage of the outburst of feeling to make a further increase of the armed forces of the Nation; hence, by proclamation, on May 2, he called for 42,034 volunteers to serve three years, and thus ordered substantial increases of both the Army and Navy. These acts were hotly denounced as clearly contrary to the letter of the Constitution, which lays upon Congress the duty of determining how many and what kind of national troops shall be raised.

During those troublous and turbulent weeks the President also proclaimed a blockade of portions of the southern coast, incurred in the name of the national defense vast expenditures unauthorized by Congress, adopted and put into operation a general plan of campaign against the Confederacy, and authorized his generals to suspend the privilege of habeas corpus whenever circumstances seemed to them to demand so extraordinary a step.

Numerous arrests entailed repeated suspensions of the writ of habeas corpus, for the arrests would have been valueless had the civil tribunals been in a position to set free the apprehended person. The Constitution authorizes the suspension of the fundamental guaranty in time of war or public danger. It does not, however, say by whom the suspension shall be ordered.

Nevertheless, it was exercised independently by the President for nearly two years, and by act of March 3, 1863, Congress ratified the President's acts and gave him power to suspend the writ during the war, whenever in his opinion the public safety required it. Thereafter, until the close of the war, a certificate that a prisoner was held under the authority from the President was a sufficient answer to any demand from a civil tribunal for the prisoner's appearance for examination or trial.

One of the most interesting features of the present state of things—is the illimited power exercised by the Government. Mr. Lincoln, in that respect, is the equal, if not the superior, of Louis Napoleon. The difference consists only in the fact that the President rests his authority on the unanimous consent of the people of the loyal States, the Emperor his on the army.

Wrote a correspondent of Charles Sumner during these weeks—

When Congress met on July 4, the President presented a full statement of what he had done. There was little need to dwell on the urgency of the situation or to defend those acts which were plainly within the prerogatives of the Commander in Chief. As for the others—the increase of the Army and Navy, the alleged unauthorized expenditures, and the suspension of the habeas corpus—the hope was expressed that, even though not considered strictly legal, they might be ratified, and they were ratified, but not without debate; and references were made in a disloyal and copperhead press regarding "Lincoln's odious tyranny and violations of the Constitution," which phrases have, since we entered this war, resounded in this Chamber from the lips of those who could not silence the insect chorus of their criticism even though such silence were for their country's good.

As the war progressed the volume and extent of power in the hands of President Lincoln rose to enormous proportions. From first to last a close control was kept by the President over military and naval operations. Lincoln was in the fullest degree a Commander in Chief. He resorted to many devices. He used his powers in all possible ways, indirect as well as direct; for example, the maintenance of the southern blockade, which he believed would shorten the war and insure success. Orders—usually mere telegrams—went out from Washington savoring strongly of the lettres de cachet of the eighteenth century, and Wendell Phillips, whose agitations aided in bringing on the war, declared in lectures in New York and Boston in 1861 that "the Secretary of War puts into his bastile, with a warrant as irresponsible as Louis, any man whom he pleases." Wendell Phillips, the orator, could not see that force must be employed to win victories in war.

In a speech at Cooper Institute in New York City on the presidential election (1864), the same Wendell Phillips said that for 30 years he had labored to break up the Union in the interests of justice, and now he labored to save it in the same interest. Phillips said he judged Mr. Lincoln by his words and by his deeds, and so judging him, he was—unwilling to trust Abraham Lincoln with the future of the country. Let it be granted that Mr. Lincoln is pledged to liberty and union; but this pledge was wrung out of him by the Cleveland movement, and was a mere electioneering pledge. Mr. Lincoln is a politician. Politicians are like the bones of a horse's foreshoulder—not a straight one in it. A reformer is like a Doric column of iron—straight, strong, and immovable. It is a momentous responsibility to trust Mr. Lincoln where we want a Doric column to stand stern and strong for the Nation. * * * I am an abolitionist, but I am also a citizen, watchful of constitutional liberty; and I say, if President Lincoln is inaugurated on the votes of Tennessee, Louisiana, and Arkansas, every citizen is bound to resist him. Are you willing to sacrifice the constitutional rights of 70 years for your fondness for this individual?

Mr. Phillips then quoted some opinions from prominent men in the Republican Party:

A man in the field said, "The reelection of Abraham Lincoln will be a disaster." Another said, "The reelection of Abraham Lincoln will be national destruction." Said another, "There is no government at Washington—nothing there." Said another, "That proclamation will not stand a week before the Supreme Court; but I had rather trust it there than to trust Abraham Lincoln to make the judges." Mr. Lincoln has secured his success just as the South used to secure its success. He says to the radicals of the Republican Party, "I am going to nominate myself at Baltimore, risk a division of the party if you dare!" and the radicals submitted. Political Massachusetts submitted and is silent; but antislavery Massachusetts calls to the people to save their own cause. Mr. Phillips said he "wanted free speech to let Abraham Lincoln know that we are stronger than Abraham Lincoln, and that he is a servant to obey us. I distrust and despise the man who uses whole despotism in Massachusetts and half despotism in South Carolina, and that man is Abraham Lincoln."

All this was said of whom? Nicholas Romanoff? Czar Peter? Ivan the Terrible? No; it was said against that man for whom we can find no marble white enough in which to carve his name.

But it would have required something more than the pelting hail of Phillips's rhetoric to turn Mr. Lincoln from his high purpose, and thus we see Lincoln, a civilian with very little military experience, rise in the fullest degree to be Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. We perceive that he was capable of, and did exercise, firmness, a judgment and boldness in striking the enemy that made him in every essential a real Commander in Chief.

Senators, in this perilous hour what reply shall we make in response to the American Commander in Chief who now asks that this power be given him? Shall we paralyze his hand where we should support it? Shall we weaken the arm we should sustain and strengthen? Shall we assist him in his efforts to sever the Gordian knot and thus release the governmental agencies from the entanglements of red tape and bureaucratic delays that now strangle the Government? Let us not sleep in fancied security. The civilization of the world has been in deadly peril since August, 1914, when suddenly it appeared that Von Kluck was guiding, with unerring precision and irresistible force, an engine of slaughter against the heart of France. We remember that on a certain night in September of that year, when Von Kluck's bugles sounded taps, he believed, and undoubtedly the multitudes of the earth believed, that a few days at most would see him enter Paris at the head of his barbaric and ruthless hosts. The dark night passed away; Von Kluck was baffled and defeated and reeled backward until the hills of the Aisne brought him shelter and protection. Only the resiliency, courage, and capableness of Gen. Foch and Marshal Joffre saved the day. Had Foch and Joffre been hampered by red tape, by orders from a war council, or by a voluble Congress, they would not have won the victory of the Marne, which was to civilization as important as was the victory of Charles the Hammer when he rolled back the surging tide of the Moslem at Tours.

One question to be settled in this war is, Are democracies and republics inherently strong enough to defend themselves? May they gather strength enough to sustain themselves? Do they possess the power of organization, the spirit, and the strength to hurl back the desperate onslaughts and challenges of autocracy? Can free governments grasp and utilize opportunities which will bring victory? I believe they can if they but act with judgment. To do so means that free governments must meet the impact of the enemy with like impact. It means that cunning must match cunning, and ingenuity match ingenuity. Democracy's sons must become accustomed to the short, hard words of command, and to stern and rigorous discipline, or they will fall prone and helpless before the furiousness and precision of the enemy's blows.

This bill, reported by the Judiciary Committee, simply proposes to authorize the President to make such changes in duties and coordination in bureaus as the President may see fit. Senators seem reluctant to grant such authority to the President, although they well know that, under the Constitution, the President has power to order an advance here or a retrograde movement there along the sectors held in France by our heroic troops. The President has power, and upon his judgment ultimately must rest, the question as to whether, and if so when, the American Navy must proceed to the bases and starting points of the German submarines and there destroy them, or whether by constructing more transports we may be able to foil the submarines. These questions of commanding importance will ultimately be determined by the President. No other official in all Christendom is so potent as is the President of the United States. His words ring in every capital. When the President delivers a message to both Houses of Congress men by the scores of thousands besiege the bulletin boards, and wherever newspapers are printed throughout the world men sit through the long night waiting to obtain the earliest intelligence of what President Wilson said. Clothed as he is with immense power, he has not misused it. Personally the spokesman for all the antagonists of the Teutonic powers, having proved himself fully capable and worthy, we find Senators refusing to trust the President with power to order some bureau of the Interior Department to make some experiments for the Navy Department in the way of ascertaining where a larger supply of sulphuric acids for explosives may be acquired. Gentlemen do not feel alarmed when they reflect that the President, by action or nonaction, could cost the lives of thousands of American soldiers and sailors on land or sea, yet they are very much troubled and their perturbed spirits give them no rest when they are called upon to consider a bill which would permit the President to abolish an assistant bureau chief here, or allow the Bureau of Soils to investigate as to whether seaweed could be utilized in making print paper.

It is only a few days since all the armies on the French front fighting against the central powers were placed under the supreme command and leadership of Gen. Foch. This was done in order that the armies of freedom might have facility of movement, concentration, and singleness of aim. It was done without regard to ambition or hope of promotion. Great Britain has pride in her commander, Americans have pride in their commander of our Expeditionary Forces, but to eliminate duplications of work, to bring all the forces under one supreme head, Gen. Foch was placed in absolute command. There are now in the departments here delays, waste, duplications, and wasted energy. The governmental agencies here are enmeshed and almost strangled by "red tape."

This bill, in a small way, emulates the wise example of those powers fighting the Teutonic powers, for it proposes to give to the President the authority to coordinate various departmental agencies in the interest of economy and facility of movement.

Let us ascertain just who is this President, this Commander in Chief, to whom Senators refuse to delegate these powers. The President is not only the recognized spokesman for all the nations fighting the Teutonic powers, but he has frequently been required to correct the errors of other spokesmen. Germany's "second peace offensive" was doomed by the exposure of the real Prussian purpose at Brest-Litovsk, and we recall that it was the address of President Wilson to Congress on January 8, this year, which tore away the disguise and exposed the double-dealing of the Prussians at Brest-Litovsk. The British Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd-George, addressed to the British Labor Conference a message on this subject, in which he outlined the allied purposes, and declared that the allies were committed to the liberation of conquered countries. He nobly declared that Great Britain would stand with France to the last to have the wrong of Alsace-Lorraine reconsidered. In the matter of Russia, however, the British Prime Minister was not so effective as was President Wilson. The British Prime Minister correctly warned the Russians against the Germans. A few days later, to wit, on January 8, 1918, President Wilson followed with his statement of allied war aims which found instant acceptance in all allied countries, and was by unanimous acclaim throughout the world agreed to be the ablest, the most explicit, as well as the justest statement of war aims that had yet been set forth. President Wilson's message contained sympathetic words for Russia. The President made noble assurances to Serbia and Belgium. His message had words of encouragement for the Poles. The exact value of this address at this time can not be estimated, for it is of inestimable value. It put the Germans at once on the defensive and it relieved the allies from the inconvenience due to misunderstandings at home as to the things for which they were fighting. The message tore the mask of disguise from the face of Germany; it revealed her pretensions and disclosed her cloven hoof. It showed clearly that while Germany was demanding vast territorial areas and populations to which she had not the most remote claim in law or justice, the allies stood before the world as asking only such changes as could be and should be supported on the grounds of right and justice, and throughout the various allied countries there was expressed no doubt as to the wisdom, justice, and conclusiveness of the President's message of January 8.

The exposure of the Machiavellian double-dealing of Germany at Brest-Litovsk clearly proved that while Germany stridently asserted that she was conducting a war of defense, in truth she was seeking empire, dominion, domination, and the enslavement of weaker peoples. Through sorrow and distress Russia has learned what a German peace means. Everywhere throughout the conquered countries where Germany has laid her mailed hand—the Baltic Provinces and the Ukraine—German arrogance, brutality, and requisition of supplies have been so severe that the conquered peoples cry out in despair to the world. Treaties signed and ratified by Germany do not stop aggressions or give any security to life or property. Roumania, Poland, Serbia, Belgium, and the Ukraine bear pathetic testimony to what Prussian peace and Prussian dominion mean.

The action of the Prussian representatives at Brest-Litovsk discloses that the Prussians have thrown Luther Burbank into the shade. Luther Burbank is almost a wizard, an assistant secretary to nature, but the Prussian representatives at Brest-Litovsk were able to make a large crop of lemons grow on an olive branch. [Laughter.]

So, Senators, when we have left these seats forever, when we are forgotten and worthless dust, the statesman, Woodrow Wilson, who spoke so clearly on this occasion, whose voice was as a silver bell struck by a steel hammer, the leader who exposed the Prussian duplicity, will be remembered with gratitude by those who love liberty. Yet this man, who has demonstrated his great capacity for public affairs and has moved with unerring precision in matters of world-wide import, is not to be trusted—so say some Senators—with the power of transferring certain bureau officials and chief clerks in Washington.

Where the President has with clear lenses horoscoped and interpreted events his partisan critics confusedly recognize the events only long after they have happened, and then too often they see them, not clearly but through blurred and indistinct lenses. While the President acts with precision and promptness and correctly points the way, his partisan critics stand like large locomotives on a side track, without driving rods, wasting their steam in vociferous and futile sibilation.

Upon our Nation, the young Hercules that has won many durable victories for justice and freedom and which understands so well the true philosophy of human liberty, is cast a heavy burden, for our Nation now must not only be the stalwart keeper of that serene and steadfast light which guides the course and destiny of civilization through the long darkness amidst which the world is at present moving, but it must also furnish, as it will furnish, a very considerable proportion of the material potentiality so necessary to bring victory against our well-disciplined and ferocious enemy. With our thin gray line of ships—a line all too thin—we must send food and clothes for our soldiers' bodies, weapons for their hands, and medicines and bandages for their wounds. We must also do that which is equally as important—we must sustain their high spirits by constant assurance of our solidarity here at home.

We in Congress bid our American artillery to roar like Jovian thunder; we bid our dauntless men of the sea and our courageous cavalrymen of the clouds to strike for our altars and our homes. We know that American soldiers are to-day on the French front standing as living ramparts of valor resisting the insane fury of the German dragon. Let us, therefore, not be found refusing to give them the full strength of our support; let us not be found giving aid and comfort to the enemy by shackling their American Commander in Chief.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is a consolation in these days of pessimism and bad news from Europe to hear the voice of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] sounding the tone of optimism to its highest possible note. This is a great country, stretching from the Great Lakes to the Gulf and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This is not "this United States"; this is "these United States"; and when the voice of Arizona goes out in the way in which it has just gone out it is responded to by the voice of Mississippi.

There are traitors and disloyal and lukewarm men in Mississippi, as there are in Arizona and Ohio and New York and Massachusetts and elsewhere; but the great majority of the people have their hearts in this fray, and they answer to the brave and true words of the Senator from Arizona in words equally brave and true. Away down on the Rio Grande and at the mouth of the Mississippi echo answers echo, and we people of the English-speaking race in America, in Canada, in Australia, in New Zealand, in South Africa, in England, in Wales, in Scotland, and in Ireland—in spite of a few traitors in Ireland, not many—respond with stentorian tones that even if the Germans win the present offensive, if they put France out of commission, if they then can concentrate upon the Italian line and put Italy out of commission, these great English-speaking races from eight great countries—England, Scotland, Wales, Canada, New Zealand, South Africa, Australia, and America—commanding the sea, controlling the raw materials of the world, disposing of raw materials and war resources, can still by themselves whip Germany and Austria-Hungary and Turkey and Bulgaria and all the other barbarian powers of this world, fighting, as we are, in the cause of Christ, the God of justice and of mercy, against Thor and Woden, the gods of the ancestors of the present Goths and Vandals, which gods have recently been restored to power by them, restored to power by them in the expression that "might is right." However, God has taught that in the long run right must be might, and that if right were not might at the beginning it must become right before it could prevail.

I have not heard anything during this session of Congress that pleased me as much as the words of the Senator from Arizona. Optimism? Yes. Fool optimism? No. The enemy may whip for a month or two months or six months or six years, but the great English-speaking people have on their side the God of justice and of liberty and right; and with that alliance they can not fail. I care not whether Armentieres surrenders to the enemy or not; I care not whether the French and British Armies are separated from one another or not; I care not if the French are held in check while the British are being driven back to the Channel; I care not even if the British are being held in check while the Germans are taking Paris; localities, geography, nothing has anything to do with this war except the eternal justice of God and the eternal spirit of liberty, and the God of justice, who is the God of liberty and the God of democracy, because He taught a common fatherhood of God and a common brotherhood of man, He must win this war, because if He does not hell will be in command of the world; and I can not conceive that hell can be in command of the world while good men pray that "God's will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven," and "God's kingdom shall come on earth as it is in heaven," because God is all powerful and we are the mere instrumentalities of His power; and in democracy the common sense and the common conscience of the common people are the instrumentalities which God has selected to rule this world, and, by God's grace, they will rule it.

There may be times when some one else may rule it for a short time, but they can not rule it in the long run. I summon the American people—or I would summon them if I had the power and voice; I have neither—I would summon them to remember that "God still reigns," that liberty is sacred, and that God made all men so free that he left each one of them to go to the devil if he chose; so much does God worship liberty.

I hear now and then something about our not having been prepared for this war. I hear blame and criticism because we were not prepared. I hear the same blame and criticism concerning Great Britain, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, and South Africa. Mr. President, you can eat your cake or you can keep your cake, whichever you choose, but you can not do both. You may be either a great militaristic nation, ready for any venture of arms that may present itself, or you may be a great free democracy, progressing in the paths of peace and civilization and God love and man love; you may be either, but you can not be both.

Some Senator criticized Mr. Creel the other day for saying that he thanked God that we were not prepared for this war. I would not go as far as he went, but I do say that as long as the American people are the American people, as long as they are devoted to the cause of democracy and of liberty, it is impossible for them during peace times for generation after generation to keep upon a war footing. I repeat, you can eat your cake or you can keep your cake, but you can not do both. If we are going to be a free people, with schools, churches, cathedrals, good roads, railroads, progressive industry, invention, civilization, literature, and everything else, we can be all that; if we wanted to be something else, we could have been Prussians. In the words of Pinafore, we voluntarily decided not to be Prussians; we decided to be "free-born Englishmen" in England, Australia, Canada, New Zealand, South Africa, and in America—men devoted to the cause of Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution of the United States.

We could have been Prussians; yes. We could have kept ourselves for three or four or five generations prepared for war; yes. But what if we had done it? We would have been Prussians still, would we not? Without speaking German, we would have been Prussians speaking English, and what is the difference? I would just as soon live in Prussia subject to the Kaiser as to have lived in America during all that time subject to that sort of law.

Here comes a voice out of one of the recent new States—Arizona—coming from the Senator from that State, coming with optimism, coming with a spirit of liberty and freedom and civilization and real culture—not "kultur." The voice is echoed from the Lakes to the Gulf, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, from where the storm beats upon Nantucket and the sterile coast of Maine to where the Mexican Gulf lovingly embraces the sweet sands of Mississippi. Are we going to quit? Are we downhearted? Are we discouraged? In God's name, no. Are we going to make a negotiated peace?

Why, my God, if we did not have better sense than that Russia could have taught us better sense by her recent experience. Are we going to effect some sort of an armistice whereby our enemy may prepare by 10 or 40 more years of Prussian efficiency to meet in war democratic military inefficiency all over the world, so that Germany may attempt once more the scheme of "murdering the world while the world was asleep," as Henry George said? Are we going to do that? In God's name, no!

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has just handed me this:

America's workingmen have a peace message for the workers of Germany, but it is expressed in these fighting phrases from the lips of Mr. Gompers—

I want to stop one minute to pay a tribute to Gompers. I come from a State where there is not very much organized labor. I come from a State where a public servant can not be accused of slavery to organized labor. That is more than a great many people can say. But in these United States, next after the President of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, there is due to Mr. Gompers, the head of associated labor in the United States, the chief credit for harmonizing our national purposes and for unifying our national efforts. Now I will go ahead and read what he says.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to read that which I just handed to him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is what Mr. Gompers says:

You can't talk peace with us now. Either you smash your autocracy, or by the gods, we will smash it for you.

I am sorry he said "by the gods." I wish he had said "by the eternal God of the Trinity, with Jesus of Nazareth representing justice and generosity and mercy and love."

Mr. Gompers continues:

Before you talk peace terms get back from France, get back from Belgium into Germany, and then we will talk peace.

As I said a moment ago, are we prepared to accept any sort of an armistice which means merely to give an opportunity for preparation to these descendants of the Goths and the Vandals, who are still worshipping Thor and Woden, who have never been Christianized except just to the limit of the thickness of their skins, and concerning whom it may be said that when you scratch blood you scratch the blood of a Goth or a Vandal or of a barbarian of a time antedating Jesus of Nazareth? Are you going to have an armistice to give them time for 30 more years of Prussian efficient military and unscrupulous spy preparation?

Now and then a man says, "Why are not we just as efficient as the Germans?" Efficient for what? We are more efficient than they are for peace and for civilization and for God love and for man love. But if you mean by that, Shall we be equally efficient for the work of slaughter? we must confess that we have not been, and we are not even now. That has been their study. That has been their education. We have been thinking about schools and industry and the rights of man and the liberty of the individual and equal opportunity among men. We have been trying to extend all that, and they have been thinking about the efficiency of man force and munition force to win a war. Does that prove that they are superior to us? It does prove that they are superior in that particular, and they are until yet, and they are proving it upon the battle field of Europe to-day. But shall we quit for that reason, when we stand with the sunlight of God upon our heads, pointing the way toward enlightenment from a present half civilization?

Mr. President, there will be a peace at the end of this war, and it will be a peace dictated by us and accepted by Germany and Austria-Hungary and Turkey and Bulgaria. By the way, one of the curious things about this business is that the Germans have so far camouflaged the world that they have made it imagine that Germany was fighting the world. The most militaristic nation in the world, Turkey, and the next most militaristic nation in the world, Bulgaria, are on the German side, and the direct blood descendants of the Huns who followed Attila, the Hungarians or Magyars, are also upon the German side; and the direct descendants of the Goths and the Visigoths and the Ostrogoths and the Vandals are the Germans themselves.

Germany has not fought the world. Germany, plus all the remarkably militaristically trained nations, has been fighting the peaceful nations of the world, and it is not at all astonishing that we should have been whipped in the beginning. There never has been a better private soldier than the Turk. He believes that when he dies upon the field of battle he goes to paradise. If you or I had any such infernal fool idea, we would die very willingly; at least I would, because I would be glad to know that after this life I would go to paradise. I have had a whole lot of doubt about it.

Mr. President, we will talk peace whenever we dictate peace and Germany and Austria and Turkey and Bulgaria accept it. Then what are we going to do after peace is declared? We are fighting "to make the world safe for democracy," said the President of the United States.

I go further and say that we are fighting to make the world safe for liberty, individual liberty, man liberty, "the rights of man"—"liberty, fraternity, and equality"—in the words of the French revolutionists; words which they merely expressed from a fact that they had seen in America, when we had won our independence. But after we make the world safe for liberty and democracy, and beyond that, for humanity, for justice and mercy and love and God—the Christian God—and if there be no Christian God, then this earth is hell anyhow, and let it go, and let the Prussians have it—then what have we got to do after that is all over with? Why, Mr. President, we have got to fight to make democracy safe for the world. This is a harder task even than winning the war.

After we have made the world safe for democracy we have got to make democracy safe for the world. Is democracy safe for the world now? Oh, look at Russia. Look at the bolsheviki. Look at the I. W. W.'s in America. Look at the Sinn Feiners in Ireland. Look at all of them. You know as well as I do that democracy is not safe for the world now.

How are you going to make it safe for the world? I answer render it, first, intelligent. Make it intelligent. Render it, second, just. Make justice its religion. Fill it, in the third place, with the love of God and of man, and especially of the love of man, because God is away off, and He Himself has told us that if we love our neighbor well we will love Him all right. Then, after you have done that, the world is safe. Even if we whip the unspeakable Turk, and the barbarous Bulgarian, and the inexpressible Hun in Austria, and the direct descendants of the Goths and the Vandals in Germany, we shall have accomplished nothing unless we can make democracy—our cause—safe for the world, safe for humanity, and safe for the cause of God and of Jesus of Nazareth, who taught love of our neighbor.

Mr. President, in concluding I want to say that during this entire session of Congress I have not heard a single thing that pleased me as much as the speech just made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST]. I had no idea of following up his speech except that it inspired me with a few words that I could not help uttering.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m., Thursday, April 11, 1918) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 11, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Franklin K. Fretz, pastor St. John's Lutheran Church, Easton, Pa., offered the following prayer:

O God, our heavenly Father, Thou art King of kings and Lord of lords. We come to Thee because we are weak and Thou art strong, we are ignorant and Thou art eternal wisdom, we grope in darkness and Thou dwellest in light unapproachable. We ask Thy divine blessing upon the President and Congress of the United States and all representatives of government. Do Thou bless our Nation. May it ever be "the land of the free and the home of the brave." Let Thy blessing rest upon those who are now receiving a baptism of fire. Strengthen and sustain the dying and comfort the sad. Grant us a speedy victory and Thy peace in our day. May the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep our hearts and minds, through Christ Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injury of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its disagreement to said amendments, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. NELSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3528. An act to suspend for the period of the present war sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes;

S. 2917. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes"; and

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

MAIL SERVICE ABROAD.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the answer of the Postmaster General to House resolution 296, which the House passed the other day—the resolution offered by Mr. TREADWAY. It is in response to that resolution. It is addressed to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. DYER. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TREADWAY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why is that not an official document if it is addressed to the Speaker instead of to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COX. It is not addressed to "the gentleman from Indiana." It is addressed to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why then is it not inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. COX. The gentleman can see it in the RECORD if the House gives unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Inasmuch as this communication is addressed to the Speaker in response to a resolution passed by the House, I want to ask why it is not laid before the House and read?

The SPEAKER. If it is addressed to the Speaker of the House, it will be laid before the House, but the Chair did not know anything about it. The Chair will state that if he were to lay all the communications that he gets before the House the House would not have a chance to do anything else but receive them. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that; but the gentleman from Indiana stated that it was in response to the resolution of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not seen it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be laid before the House.

Mr. GILLETT. How did the gentleman from Indiana get it? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I got it in a lawful way. It was not in any way purloined. [Laughter.]

Mr. DYER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. I want to inquire if this is the proper way for a reply of the Postmaster General to a resolution of the House to be presented?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to present it. Is that what the gentleman wants?

Mr. DYER. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana has asked to have the matter presented.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Missouri been paying attention to the proceedings?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that he would lay it before the House. What more does the gentleman want?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Before the matter is laid before the House I desire to ask if the communication is addressed to the Speaker?

Mr. COX. It is.

Mr. WALSH. And if it is, is it an instance of the efficiency of the Post Office Department that it should be presented by the gentleman from Indiana instead of by the Speaker? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Post Office Department is not responsible for anything that the gentleman from Indiana does. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. It is rather an anomalous position that gentlemen assume when they ask for information, that they should object to its presentation when it is furnished.

Mr. DALLINGER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. DALLINGER. How did the gentleman from Indiana happen to have it?

The SPEAKER. The way that came to him was that when it came the clerk gave it to him knowing that he was interested in it.

Mr. FOSTER. The regular order, Mr. Speaker. It seems they do not want it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1918.

To the SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

Replying to House resolution 296:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to furnish the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, information relative to the amount of mail matter which has been addressed to members of the American Expeditionary Force during the past 30 days of the class which has now been restricted in transportation; also information relative to the amount of mail matter that has been sent to members of the American Expeditionary Force by the Committee on Public Information, how it has been distributed, and whether mail matter of this kind has been restricted in further transportation."

I beg to advise as follows:

The class of mail to the American Expeditionary Force which has now been restricted in transportation is parcel post. This matter was excluded from the mails to the troops in pursuance to an order issued at the request of the War Department, which acted upon the report of a board comprised of representatives of the war-work branches of the American Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, and the Knights of Columbus, and of the War and the Post Office Departments. The amount of this mail during the month of March was 53,617 sacks, weighing 876 tons, and comprising approximately 2,808,903 parcels.

The resolution calls for "information relative to the amount of mail matter that has been sent to members of the American Expeditionary Force by the Committee on Public Information, how it has been distributed, and whether mail matter of this kind has been restricted in further transportation." If matter of the kind herein referred to has been sent, it has been of such relatively small quantity that it has never been called to the attention of the Post Office Department, and no request has been made by the military authorities looking to its restriction. Having no reports in the records of the department of the character of mail matter mentioned in the resolution and in the debate thereon, I caused inquiry to be made and have learned that the only mail matter of this kind sent to soldiers by the Secretary of the Treasury were bulk shipments to Gen. Pershing of copies of his speech delivered before the men of the National Army at Camp Lewis in the State of Washington, giving detailed information on the war-insurance law and liberty bonds, also some posters calling attention to the second and third issues of the liberty bonds. On this subject, Mr. G. R. Cooksey, Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of April 8, 1918, advises as follows:

"Replying to your inquiry over the telephone with regard to documents from the Treasury Department mailed to our soldiers in France, permit me to advise you as follows:

"The only speech of the Secretary's which was mailed to our soldiers abroad was one delivered before the men of the National Army at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash., dealing with the war-risk insurance act. In connection with the administration of the war-risk act, the Treasury Department has felt it exceedingly important that every soldier and sailor in our Army and Navy be advised of his rights under the law and every effort has been made to get this information to them. It was essential that they know the benefits conferred by the right to take out insurance and particularly that there was a limitation upon the time within which such insurance could be issued. As one step in a campaign of education in this connection, a conference was held in Washington attended by officers and enlisted men from various cantonments in this country. The law was explained to them and they were eager to obtain every written statement and address on the subject. They were particularly anxious to have the address delivered by the Secretary at Camp Lewis. It was in response to this demand that the Secretary's speech was mailed. In mailing it abroad it was sent in one shipment to Gen. Pershing for distribution.

"In addition to this speech, the only material mailed from the Treasury Department to the Army in France was a supply of liberty-loan posters for the second and third liberty loans. These were mailed to Gen. Pershing in one shipment each several weeks in advance of the loans and were sent for the purpose of showing the men of our Army in France the efforts that were being made at home to sustain them and also as an appeal to Americans abroad to subscribe to the loan.

"Aside from the above, a letter addressed by the Secretary to officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy, advising them of their rights under the war-risk insurance act (copy inclosed) and an address by Judge Mack explaining the law were sent by the War Department to the Army in France. These did not go by mail, however, but by Army transport."

On inquiry of the Committee on Public Information, I am informed that this committee has never sent its literature to members of the American Expeditionary Force, except 500 copies of the Official Bulletin in bulk to Gen. Pershing for distribution among the officers. This information is given in the following letter from the chairman of the Committee on Public Information:

"Answering your request for 'information relative to the amount of mail matter that has been sent to members of the American Expeditionary Force by the Committee on Public Information,' I beg to state that this committee has never at any time sent its literature to the members of the Expeditionary Force. Numberless individuals and even great patriotic societies have protested continuously against this decision, but even if I did not have the conviction that our soldiers in France are in no need of 'educational work,' there were the vital questions of tonnage and transportation to consider.

"When Mr. TREADWAY stated in the House that he was 'reliably informed that there has been a very large amount of that class of mail matter sent over,' and 'it is a well-known fact that great quantities of that class of matter have been placed in their hands overseas,' he made assertions the absolute baselessness of which could have been ascertained by a telephone inquiry.

"As for our shipments of pamphlets to France as a whole, these have been made upon request to Young Men's Christian Association officials, diplomatic and consular representatives, and certain officers of education, and do not exceed 1,000 in number for the year. Even the material for aeroplane distribution is not shipped from the United States, but is printed in France in cooperation with the French Government.

"At the request of the authorities, 500 copies of the Official Bulletin were sent in bulk to Gen. Pershing for distribution among the officers, but even this has been discontinued to ease the transportation situation."

I take it that the inquiry in the concluding paragraph of the resolution, "whether mail matter of this kind has been restricted in further transportation," has reference to all matter which is sent out by individuals under their franks, or by departments under the penalty privilege, and I have, therefore, directed that an investigation be made of all printed matter going to the troops to ascertain the quantity and character of such matter.

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. TREADWAY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. TREADWAY. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I am not certain whether I have a question of personal privilege against any other than a Member of the House regarding a statement I made on the floor, but I certainly have a right to make a statement of personal privilege in the case of an official communication such as Mr. Creel has sent through Mr. Burleson.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is in response to a resolution.

Mr. TREADWAY. He accuses me of making a baseless statement. I did not do anything of the kind.

The SPEAKER. The better way, instead of taking time to puzzle out whether it is a question of personal privilege or not, would be for the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Then I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, there have been so many statements made in relation to Mr. Creel, both in this branch and in the other, that I do not wish to add to the gentleman's trials and tribulations; but I would like to read the sentence to which I object, and which I now move to strike from the RECORD, if that is proper. I read:

When Mr. TREADWAY stated in the House that he was "reliably informed that there has been a very large amount of that class of mail matter sent over," and "it is a well-known fact that great quantities of that class of matter have been placed in their hands overseas," he made assertions the absolute baselessness of which could have been ascertained by a telephone inquiry.

That statement was not "absolute baselessness," and I challenge Mr. Creel's veracity in so stating.

I can produce evidence here in this House that there has been placed in the hands of the soldiers abroad tons of literature. Whether sent over by Mr. Creel or by the Secretary of the Treasury, I know not; but it is there. I myself read a statement from a soldier, in which the soldier says, "If there is a lack of tonnage to transport boys over here, Mr. Hurley could get a good deal of tonnage space if fewer tons of Secretary McAdoo's speeches were transferred to us. We do not want them."

That is evidence from the front, from a boy in the trenches to-day. And therefore I say that Mr. Creel impugns the motives and the statements of a Member of this House when he uses that language in reference to the statement I made in connection with this investigation. The whole thing is peculiar in that this letter should come from a Member on the floor asking for insertion in the RECORD. I accept the Speaker's statement in that connection as the reason therefor, but it would seem to me——

Mr. BARNHART rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have only three minutes, but I would be glad to yield if the gentleman desires——

Mr. BARNHART. I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Massachusetts has any information as to how this one soldier could know that there were tons and tons of literature coming over?

Mr. TREADWAY. I can satisfy the gentleman in that respect. The matter came to me in confidence, and I would not produce that statement on the floor here, but I can satisfy the gentleman that such a statement has been made by a soldier in a communication. It is a well-known fact that this form of literature is over there. I am not finding fault with its being there. I am finding fault with two things. One fault I have already expressed; the other I am endeavoring to express now. The first is that the Post Office Department has tried to stop, and has stopped, the sending of the necessary comforts to our boys from their home people. To my mind, and I know to any sensible man on this floor, you can not give any reason whatsoever why that restriction should be enforced. The other fault I am finding is with the statement made by Mr. Creel, in saying that a Member of this House has made a statement of absolute baselessness. He knows that we are not that kind of men. I impugn that statement, and I challenge him to prove it, and I move to strike it out of the RECORD in this document.

Mr. FOSTER. I make a point of order on that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. What is the usual procedure in respect to this communication, now that it has been received by the Speaker and reported to the House and read in the hearing of the House?

The SPEAKER. To refer it to the Post Office Committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and order it printed.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Would a motion be in order that the House decline to receive it?

The SPEAKER. It undoubtedly would. The House once declined to receive one of President Roosevelt's messages.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then I move that the House decline to receive this communication, and return it to the gentleman who wrote it, with the suggestion that it be changed so as to withdraw the charge made against a Member of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there was no charge made against a Member of the House. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House decline to receive this communication, and send it back to its author, with a certain suggestion, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] moves to table the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota. The question is on the latter motion.

The question was taken.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 165, nays 165, answered "present" 9, not voting 93, as follows:

YEAS—165.

Alexander	Dixon	Kincheloe	Shouse
Almon	Dominick	Kitchin	Sims
Ashbrook	Dooling	Lazaro	Sisson
Aswell	Doolittle	Lee, Ga.	Slayden
Ayres	Doremus	Lesher	Small
Bankhead	Drane	Lever	Smith, C. B.
Barkley	Eagle	Linthicum	Snook
Barnhart	Estopinal	Littlepage	Steagall
Bell	Evans	Lonergan	Stedman
Benhin	Ferris	Lunn	Steele
Black	Fields	McKeown	Stephens, Miss.
Blackmon	Flood	Maher	Sterling, Pa.
Blanton	Foster	Mansfield	Sullivan
Booher	Gard	Martin	Sumners
Brand	Garner	Mays	Tague
Brodbeck	Garrett, Tenn.	Montague	Talbott
Buchanan	Garrett, Tex.	Nicholls, S. C.	Taylor, Ark.
Burnett	Goodwin, Ark.	Oldfield	Thomas
Byrns, Tenn.	Gordon	Oliver, Ala.	Thompson
Campbell, Pa.	Gray, Ala.	Oliver, N. Y.	Tillman
Candler, Miss.	Gregg	O'Shaunessy	Venable
Cantrill	Griffin	Overmyer	Vinson
Caraway	Hamill	Overstreet	Walker
Carlin	Hamlin	Padgett	Walton
Carter, Okla.	Hardy	Park	Watkins
Church	Harrison, Va.	Pou	Watson, Va.
Clark, Fla.	Hastings	Price	Weaver
Claypool	Hayden	Quin	Webb
Cleary	Helm	Ragsdale	Welling
Connally, Tex.	Helvering	Rainey	Welty
Connelly, Kans.	Hilliard	Raker	Whaley
Cox	Holland	Romjue	White, Ohio
Crisp	Houston	Rouse	Wilson, La.
Crosser	Howard	Rubey	Wilson, Tex.
Dale, N. Y.	Hull, Tenn.	Rucker	Wingo
Delaney	Igoe	Russell	Wise
Dent	Jacoway	Sabath	Wright
Denton	Johnson, Ky.	Sanders, La.	Young, Tex.
Dewalt	Jones, Tex.	Shackleford	The Speaker
Dickinson	Keating	Shallenberger
Dies	Kehoe	Sherley
Dill	Kelly, Pa.	Sherwood

NAYS—165.

Anthony	Fordney	Longworth	Sanders, Ind.
Austin	Francis	Lufkin	Schall
Bacharach	Frear	Lundeen	Scott, Mich.
Baer	Freeman	McArthur	Sells
Bland	French	McCormick	Siegel
Bowers	Fuller, Mass.	McFadden	Sinnott
Britten	Garland	McKenzie	Slemp
Browne	Gillett	McKinley	Sloan
Browning	Glynn	McLaughlin, Mich.	Smith, Idaho
Burroughs	Goodall	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smith, Mich.
Butler	Graham, Ill.	Magee	Snell
Caldwell	Gray, N. J.	Mapes	Stafford
Campbell, Kans.	Green, Iowa	Mason	Steenerson
Cannon	Greene, Mass.	Meeker	Sterling, Ill.
Carter, Mass.	Greene, Vt.	Merritt	Stiness
Cary	Griest	Miller, Minn.	Strong
Chandler, Okla.	Hadley	Mondell	Sweet
Clark, Pa.	Hamilton, Mich.	Moore, Pa.	Swift
Cooper, W. Va.	Haskell	Moores, Ind.	Switzer
Cooper, Wis.	Hawley	Morgan	Tilson
Crago	Hayes	Mott	Timberlake
Cramton	Hersey	Mudd	Tinkham
Currie, Mich.	Hull, Iowa	Nelson	Treadway
Dale, Vt.	Humphreys	Nichols, Mich.	Vestal
Dallinger	Husted	Nolan	Voigt
Darrow	Hutchinson	Osborne	Volstead
Davidson	Ireland	Paige	Waldow
Davis	Johnson, Wash.	Parker, N. J.	Walsh
Dempsey	Kahn	Peters	Ward
Denison	Kearns	Platt	Wason
Dillon	Kennedy, Iowa	Pratt	Watson, Pa.
Dyer	Kennedy, R. I.	Purnell	Wheeler
Edmonds	Kiess, Pa.	Ramseyer	White, Me.
Elliott	King	Randall	Williams
Ellsworth	Kinkaid	Rankin	Winslow
Elston	Knutson	Reavis	Woods, Iowa
Emerson	Kraus	Reed	Woodyard
Esch	La Follette	Robbins	Young, N. Dak.
Fairchild, B. L.	Langley	Roberts	Zihlman
Fairfield	Lehlbach	Rodenberg
Farr	Lenroot	Rogers
Focht	Little	Rowe

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—9.

Beakes	Gould	Olney	Rayburn
Collier	Lea, Cal.	Phelan	Sears
Good

NOT VOTING—93.

Anderson	Donovan	Gallagher	Hicks
Borland	Doughton	Gallivan	Hollingsworth
Brumbaugh	Dowell	Gandy	Hood
Byrnes, S. C.	Drukker	Glass	Huddleston
Carew	Dunn	Godwin, N. C.	James
Chandler, N. Y.	Dupré	Graham, Pa.	Johnson, S. Dak.
Classon	Eagan	Hamilton, N. Y.	Jones, Va.
Coady	Fairchild, G. W.	Harrison, Miss.	Juul
Cooper, Ohio	Fess	Haugen	Kelley, Mich.
Copley	Fisher	Heaton	Kettner
Costello	Flynn	Heflin	Key, Ohio
Curry, Cal.	Foss	Heintz	Kreider
Decker	Fuller, Ill.	Hensley	LaGuardia

Larsen	Morin	Rowland	Taylor, Colo.
Lobeck	Neely	Sanders, N. Y.	Temple
London	Norton	Sanford	Templeton
McAndrews	Parker, N. Y.	Saunders, Va.	Towner
McClintic	Polk	Scott, Iowa	Van Dyke
McCulloch	Porter	Scott, Pa.	Vare
McLemore	Powers	Scully	Wilson, Ill.
Madden	Ramsey	Smith, T. F.	Wood, Ind.
Mann	Riordan	Snyder
Miller, Wash.	Robinson	Stephens, Nebr.
Moon	Rose	Stevenson

So the motion to lay the motion of Mr. MILLER of Minnesota on the table was lost.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. SEARS with Mr. DOWELL.

Mr. BORLAND with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. PHELAN with Mr GOULD.

Mr. COADY with Mr. COOPER of Ohio.

Mr. GANDY with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. PARKER of New York.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. CLASSON.

Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. CHANDLER of New York.

Mr. CAREW with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. DECKER with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. DONOVAN with Mr. CURRY of California.

Mr. DOUGHTON with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. DUPRÉ with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. EAGAN with Mr. FESS.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. FLYNN with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. FULLER of Illinois.

Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. HEFLIN with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.

Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. HOOD with Mr. HICKS.

Mr. HUDDLESTON with Mr. JUUL.

Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. KELLEY of Michigan.

Mr. KETTNER with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. KEY of Ohio with Mr. MILLER of Washington.

Mr. LARSEN with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. LOBECK with Mr. PORTER.

Mr. MCCLINTIC with Mr. RAMSEY.

Mr. MCLEMORE with Mr. MCCULLOCH.

Mr. MOON with Mr. ROSE.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. POLK with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. SANFORD.

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. SCOTT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. TEMPLE.

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. VARE.

On this vote:

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi (for) with Mr. HAUGEN (against).

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] vote?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. GOOD. I voted "no." I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], and I withdraw that vote and answer "present."

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote. On this vote the yeas are 166 and the noes are 166, and the Chair votes "aye."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote, it is so close.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

Mr. RUSSELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Can a Member who has voted on the roll call change his vote if he desires to do so? My understanding of the rule is that he can.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

The Clerk recapitulated the yea vote.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAVIS. If the recapitulation indicates one who has been erroneously recorded, when is the time to call the attention of the Speaker to it?

The SPEAKER. When his name is called.

Mr. REAVIS. May I ask whether my name is recorded in the affirmative?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded in the negative.

Mr. REAVIS. When the Clerk read my name, he read it among the ayes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] is recorded as voting "aye"?

The SPEAKER. He is recorded as voting "aye."

Mr. GILLETT. I am told that he is not in the city. Will the Chair inquire if he is present?

The SPEAKER. Does any Member know if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] is in the House?

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I just called his office a moment ago and was informed that he is not in the city.

The SPEAKER. Then, of course, his name should be stricken from the roll.

The Clerk then recapitulated those who voted in the negative.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no" and in the recapitulation my name was not announced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that he read the gentleman's name.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is recorded? The reason I inquire is that he was here immediately before the roll was called. My recollection is that he voted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. ANDERSON, is not recorded.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I heard the gentleman's name called on both roll calls, and he did not respond.

The Clerk recapitulated those who answered "present."

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recorded as voting "no."

The SPEAKER. How did the gentleman vote?

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. I answered "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not change his vote now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the decisions——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has read the decisions and they are antiquated—made before the new rules were adopted.

[For further explanation of Mr. FULLER'S vote see subsequent proceedings.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. PARKER, is recorded?

The SPEAKER. In the negative.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman from New Jersey in the city?

Mr. BROWNING. He was here a few moments ago.

Mr. BUTLER. He sat beside me a minute ago.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey entered the Hall.

The SPEAKER. On this vote, as corrected, the yeas are 165 and the noes are 165, present 8, and the motion to lay the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota on the table is defeated.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion made by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, has not the gentleman from Minnesota the floor?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I was standing here awaiting an opportunity——

The SPEAKER. The Chair saw the gentleman standing, but supposed he was listening.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I was doing that and trying to get the attention of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This situation is very well understood, and what the motive is behind it.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee wait until the Chair puts the request. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, we understand perfectly what is involved here, and we understand the motive that lies behind this proposition. We understand that answer has been given to a resolution that was passed by the House by unanimous consent.

So far as the parliamentary situation is concerned, I want to say, because I desire always to be fair, that if the gentleman desires recognition or demands recognition, in my opinion he is entitled to it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion I previously made, and in its place substitute the following—and I just give this for the information of the Speaker and the House: I move that this communication be referred to a committee of five, to be appointed by the Speaker, for their consideration as to its character, with an appropriate recommendation from them to the House as to its disposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to withdraw his motion and to substitute therefor a motion that this communication be referred to a select committee of five, to be selected by the Speaker. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the substitution.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, that the communication be referred to a select committee of five, to be selected by the Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SHERLEY. And on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 175, answered "present," 2, not voting, 82, as follows:

YEAS—172.

Alexander	Dies	Kehoe	Saunders, Va.
Almon	Dill	Kelly, Pa.	Scully
Ashbrook	Dixon	Kincheloe	Shackleford
Aswell	Dominick	Kitchin	Shallenberger
Ayres	Dooling	Lazaro	Sherley
Bankhead	Doolittle	Lea, Cal.	Sherwood
Barkley	Doremus	Lee, Ga.	Shouse
Barnhart	Doughton	Lesher	Sims
Beakes	Drane	Lever	Sisson
Bell	Dupré	Linthicum	Slayden
Beshlin	Eagle	Littlepage	Small
Black	Evans	Lonergan	Smith, C. B.
Blackmon	Ferris	Lunn	Snook
Blanton	Fields	McKeown	Steagall
Booher	Fisher	Maher	Stedman
Brand	Foster	Mansfield	Steele
Brodbeck	Gard	Martin	Stephens, Miss.
Brumbaugh	Garner	Mays	Sterling, Pa.
Buchanan	Garrett, Tenn.	Montague	Stevenson
Burnett	Garrett, Tex.	Nicholls, S. C.	Sullivan
Byrns, Tenn.	Goodwin, Ark.	Oldfield	Sumners
Campbell, Pa.	Gordon	Oliver, Ala.	Taylor, Ark.
Candler, Miss.	Gray, Ala.	Oliver, N. Y.	Thomas
Cantrill	Gregg	Olney	Thompson
Caraway	Griffin	Overmyer	Tillman
Carlin	Hamill	Overstreet	Venable
Carter, Okla.	Hamlin	Padgett	Vinson
Church	Hardy	Park	Walker
Clark, Fla.	Harrison, Va.	Phelan	Walton
Claypool	Hastings	Pou	Watkins
Cleary	Hayden	Price	Watson, Va.
Collier	Helm	Quin	Weaver
Connally, Tex.	Helvering	Ragsdale	Webb
Connelly, Kans.	Hilliard	Rainey	Welling
Cox	Holland	Raker	Welty
Crisp	Houston	Rayburn	Whaley
Crosser	Howard	Romjue	White, Ohio
Dale, N. Y.	Hull, Tenn.	Rouse	Wilson, La.
Delaney	Igoe	Rubey	Wilson, Tex.
Dent	Jacoway	Rucker	Wingo
Denton	Johnson, Ky.	Russell	Wise
Dewalt	Jones, Tex.	Sabath	Wright
Dickinson	Keating	Sanders, La.	Young, Tex.

NAYS—175.

Anderson	Chandler, Okla.	Dyer	Garland
Anthony	Clark, Pa.	Edmonds	Gillett
Austin	Classon	Elliott	Glynn
Bacharach	Cooper, W. Va.	Ellsworth	Goodall
Baer	Cooper, Wis.	Elston	Gould
Bland	Crago	Emerson	Graham, Ill.
Bowers	Cramton	Esch	Gray, N. J.
Britten	Currie, Mich.	Fairfield	Green, Iowa
Browne	Curry, Cal.	Farr	Greene, Mass.
Browning	Dale, Vt.	Focht	Greene, Vt.
Burroughs	Dallinger	Fordney	Griest
Butler	Darrow	Francis	Hadley
Caldwell	Davidson	Frear	Hamilton, Mich.
Campbell, Kans.	Davis	Freeman	Haskell
Cannon	Dempsey	French	Haugen
Carter, Mass.	Denison	Fuller, Ill.	Hawley
Cary	Dillon	Fuller, Mass.	Hayes
Hersey	McFadden	Pratt	Stiness
Hull, Iowa	McKenzie	Purnell	Strong
Humphreys	McKinley	Ramseyer	Sweet
Husted	McLaughlin, Mich.	Randall	Swift
Hutchinson	McLaughlin, Pa.	Rankin	Switzer
Ireland	Madden	Reavis	Tilson
Johnson, Wash.	Magee	Reed	Timberlake
Kahn	Mapes	Robbins	Tinkham
Kearns	Mason	Roberts	Treadway
Kelley, Mich.	Meeker	Rodenberg	Vestal
Kennedy, Iowa	Merritt	Rogers	Voigt
Kennedy, R. I.	Miller, Minn.	Rowe	Volstead
Kiess, Pa.	Mondell	Sanders, Ind.	Waldow
King	Moore, Pa.	Sanford	Walsh
Kinkaid	Moores, Ind.	Schall	Ward
Knutson	Morgan	Scott, Mich.	Wason
Kraus	Morin	Sells	Watson, Pa.
La Follette	Mott	Siegel	Wheeler
Langley	Mudd	Sinnott	White, Me.
Lehlbach	Nelson	Slemp	Williams
Lenroot	Nichols, Mich.	Sloan	Wilson, Ill.
Little	Nolan	Smith, Idaho	Winslow
Longworth	Osborne	Smith, Mich.	Woods, Iowa
Lufkin	Paige	Snell	Woodyard
Lundeen	Parker, N. J.	Stafford	Young, N. Dak.
McArthur	Peters	Steenerson	Zihlman
McCormick	Platt	Sterling, Ill.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—2.

Sears	Tague

NOT VOTING—82.

Borland	Gallagher	Kettner	Ramsey
Byrnes, S. C.	Gallivan	Key, Ohio	Riordan
Carew	Gandy	Kreider	Robinson
Chandler, N. Y.	Glass	LaGuardia	Rose
Coady	Godwin, N. C.	Larsen	Rowland
Cooper, Ohio	Good	Lobeck	Sanders, N. Y.
Copley	Graham, Pa.	London	Scott, Iowa
Costello	Hamilton, N. Y.	McAndrews	Scott, Pa.
Decker	Harrison, Miss.	McClintic	Smith, T. F.
Donovan	Heaton	McCulloch	Snyder
Dowell	Heflin	McLemore	Stephens, Nebr.
Drukker	Heintz	Mann	Talbott
Dunn	Hensley	Miller, Wash.	Taylor, Colo.
Eagan	Hicks	Moon	Temple
Estopinal	Hollingsworth	Neely	Templeton
Fairchild, B. L.	Hood	Norton	Towner
Fairchild, G. W.	Huddleston	O'Shaunessy	Van Dyke
Fess	James	Parker, N. Y.	Vare
Flood	Johnson, S. Dak.	Polk	Wood, Ind.
Flynn	Jones, Va.	Porter
Foss	Juul	Powers

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

The Clerk announced following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. GLASS with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. FLOOD with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. LARSEN with Mr. LAGUARDIA.

Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. DONOVAN with Mr. SCOTT of Iowa.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY with Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

Mr. GILLETT. Well, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called?

Mr. WELLING. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says he was in the Hall listening.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, am I recognized for one hour?

The SPEAKER. Of course, if the gentleman wants an hour.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I ask for recognition in support of the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman. The Chair desires to make a suggestion to Members of the House. When a gentleman simply stands up here and stands still, the Chair can not tell what he is up for, even if he sees him; and it is nothing but fair for a gentleman, if he has a motion to make or anything to say, to address the Chair so the Chair can hear. In the next place, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FULLER] wanted to change his vote from "aye" to "no" a while ago.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. From "present."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought he was one of those who came in here after the double call was over and asked to be recorded as present. The Chair thinks when a Member votes on a regular roll call "present" for any reason he is doing it because he has got a pair, and if he wants to change his vote he has got a perfect right to do it. Now, the only reason the Chair allows these stragglers who come in after the double roll call even to be recorded "present" is because he has a right to count them as present. The rule may be very narrow, but that is it.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. How will the name of my colleague [Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts] appear on the recorded vote?

The SPEAKER. It ought to appear the way he wants it. That would not change the result if he did.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Chair will not decide the question of the right of a Member to change his vote, made only after a recapitulation has been had. I submit to the Chair that the proper practice is that while a Member may change his vote at any time up to the announcement——

The SPEAKER. The final announcement.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the final announcement; but the final announcement is made when such an announcement has been made as to permit a recapitulation to be in order. Now, the only purpose of the recapitulation is to correct errors, and if it can be made the medium for a change of votes without regard to an error of recording, you are practically opening up by a demand for a recapitulation the entire question, and I submit, aside from this controversy, that the better practice is to hold that after a recapitulation has been demanded it is not in order to change a vote except for error.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on that point?

The SPEAKER. There is no point before the House.

Mr. RUSSELL. I would like to make this suggestion, with the indulgence of the Speaker and the House. It seems to me that the rule as stated by the Speaker—that is, that changes can be made at any time before the final announcement of the vote—is correct, and its correctness shown by the result to-day for this reason: It was first announced that the motion to lay on the table was carried, and the final announcement after recapitulation was that it was lost; hence the first was not the final announcement of the vote, but the final announcement was made after the recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. No; if it was announced finally that it was carried or lost it was too late then for a change of vote. The practice is extremely narrow. Now, here is what happened, as the Chair recollects it. Of course, the Chair's recollection may not be better than anyone else's: The Chair announced 166 ayes, 166 noes, and the number present, and then he announced he voted himself, and before the Chair announced that motion was lost or carried, whichever it was, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] demanded a recapitulation. But now, if he had waited half a minute later a vote could not have been changed on recapitulation. The Chair has no sort of objection to the House itself making a rule on that; but, according to the rule that has been made, the Chair ruled right.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. WEBB. I ask to take up Senate 383——

The SPEAKER. Not now. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. WEBB. With his consent, Mr. Speaker, it is a very important matter.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is willing——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to yield the floor for that purpose, providing I will not lose my right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will see to it that the gentleman loses no rights.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENT. On yesterday the House agreed to take up what is called the quota bill, Senate joint resolution 123, after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but it was to be taken up after the Journal was read and after business on the Speaker's table was disposed of. Well, the first thing that happened this letter from Postmaster General Burleson was on the Speaker's table, technically at least, and that was read to the House and then this parliamentary proceeding and row took place. As soon as we get through with that the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. For a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts. I would like to inquire how I am recorded on this vote.

The SPEAKER. Recorded as "present," the Chair thinks.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, that is not a parliamentary inquiry; that is past long, long ago, and the gentleman could find out——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can find out how he is recorded by coming to the Speaker, and we will take up the matter later. Now, the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, the Senate this morning rejected the conference report on the bill S. 383, known as the sabotage bill. They have sent that bill back to the House and ask for a further conference.

I therefore ask that the House agree to a further conference, but insist on the House amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendment to that bill and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the request is that they go into conference. If we do not go into conference, as this amendment is the only thing involved, does not that give us the status of standing by the original decision?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what the report of the conferees is. The Chair knows what the request of the gentleman from North Carolina is. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. WEBB, Mr. CARLIN and Mr. VOLSTEAD.

MAIL SERVICE ABROAD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very much time myself. I desire, however, that the membership of the House understand the motion I have made and my reason for making it. This is a motion to refer the communication from the Postmaster General's office, which has been read in the hearing of the House, to a committee of five men, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, to determine whether or not certain language contained in that communication is objectionable language to be sent in an official communication to the House of Representatives in response to the passage of a resolution asking for information. And as certain of the Members have come in since the original reading of the communication, I will, with the indulgence of the House, reread that part which has attracted our attention and meets with our objection. It is as follows, and I ask the membership of the House to observe the peculiar phraseology in which the gentleman sees fit so generously to indulge when he is speaking of one of the most reputable Members of the House of Representatives:

When Mr. TREADWAY stated in the House that he was "reliably informed that there has been a very large amount of that class of mail matter sent over," and "it is a well-known fact that great quantities of that class of matter have been placed in their hands overseas," he made assertion the absolute baselessness of which could have been ascertained by a telephone inquiry.

The resolution that asked for a reply, sending information from the Post Office Department to the House, contained no reference whatever to Mr. TREADWAY, no reference to any remarks he had made upon the floor of the House, but was confined absolutely to a request that the Postmaster General furnish the House with certain information in order that the House might be advised so as intelligently to act on a matter pending here. In order that the Postmaster General, apparently, might become equipped with the information desired, he asked the chairman of the Committee on Public Information, Mr. Creel, to inform him what matter, if any, of a certain character mentioned in the resolution was then being sent to France. Mr. Creel writes this letter, and in that he goes out of his way gratuitously to mention a Member of the House and the work he is doing in this House in a manner that is both flippant, disrespectful, and defiant.

Now, I have no criticism whatever of Mr. Creel or anybody else in private conversation speaking of the Members of this House in any way they see fit, but when in response to a resolution passed by the House a public official will go out of his way to mention a Member not necessary to refer to at all and speak of him in a way that is slighting, that is flippant, that is objectionable from every standpoint, I think the language is objectionable, and if the Members of the House have a proper respect for their dignity and the reputation of the House before the country they will insist that this language be cut out. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There is no reflection whatever upon the Postmaster General or his office in that part of my remarks that I have already presented, and I do not intend to present any contrary to these in that regard. It may be the Postmaster General felt it necessary to send here the full communication as he received it. I can readily see that had he cut out the sentence promptly there would have arisen the inquiry in the House, "What are the words cut out?" and "What right has the Postmaster General to cull certain things out of a communication and send the balance to the House?" And consequently he sends the whole thing.

And, gentlemen of the House, I submit, regardless on which side of the aisle you sit, is not this language such that you in your heart resent it as applied to a Member of this House? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] intimated a short time ago that there was some animus back of the motion. I beg to disabuse his mind entirely as to that. There is no animus of any character. There is no partisanship of any character. There is simply a desire on my part and I am sure on the part of the gentlemen who have voted in support of our contention to protect the dignity of the House and preserve us from these insinuating remarks, these belittling observations, that characterize this epistle.

Just observe that it is not alone the language that is used, but it is the setting around the language. "What right has the Member of Congress from Massachusetts to stand on the floor and criticize me or my work?" is apparent in every word that he uses. It is precisely a defiance toward the legislative branch of the Government for presuming in any regard to criticize the activities of a bureau of the Government. He says, "He made assertions the absolute baselessness of which could have been ascertained by a telephone inquiry." I would not use that language toward anyone on this earth for whom I had an atom of respect, or toward anyone on this earth from whom ever again I expected an atom of respect. If language could be found in the English tongue calculated to convey a biting, stinging, belittling rebuke to Congress and its membership, it is this. I believe this vote we are about to take will, in a measure, express our opinion as to whether the House, as a part of the Congress, deems itself a body of sufficient dignity, sufficient honor and respectability, to be immune from an insulting communication like this, which comes from a subordinate individual in a bureau capacity. And that is all there is to it.

So I ask gentlemen on both sides of the aisle not to confuse the issue or the motion, but to express their opinion as to whether this language is fit officially to be transmitted to the House of Representatives. The motion I have made is the usual and ordinary one, and I hope it will be passed unanimously without a roll call. The Speaker of the House will appoint the committee, and the majority of them will doubtless be members of the Democratic Party. We do not care for that. The Members on the Democratic side of the House must be, and I know they are, as jealous of the reputation and the dignity and the prerogatives of this House as the Members of any party that ever sat in it, and I call upon you to-day to manifest that spirit which I feel confident you possess. [Applause.]

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on the day before yesterday shortly after I had concluded a few remarks conveying an expression of my opinion, couched in very temperate language, of a speech made the day before by a gentleman who has again become the subject of discussion here, Mr. Creel, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], whom I see in the Chamber, rose in the defense of Mr. Creel, and he made the best he could out of a rotten case, I will say. [Laughter.] His first sentence was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I regret the fact that on a serious occasion like the present, when bills are being considered which have for their object the creation of efficient armies, the observing of our treaties, the execution in the future of our undertakings, of our contracts with other nations, that a Member of this House—> finds it necessary to indulge for partisan purposes in a criticism of an official of this administration.

Meaning myself—

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that if any Member of my party, either here or elsewhere, undertakes the slightest criticism of any action of any official of this administration he is invariably accused of doing it for partisan purposes. Mr. Speaker, if my criticism of Mr. Creel involved Republican partisanship, then the criticism of him by the New York Times this morning also involves Republican partisanship. And yet as every man here is well aware, the New York Times is perhaps the leading Democratic newspaper of this country; and if not, it is at least the most prominent supporter of all the policies of the present administration. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read an editorial appearing in this morning's New York Times, headed "Mr. Creel."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. CREEL.

> Actual or inferential responsibility for the doings and utterances of Mr. George Creel can not any longer, consistently with the public welfare and comfort, be borne by the administration. It is the general impression that when he speaks he speaks for the President, an impression he has not very energetically sought to dispel. His declaration that he should be proud to his dying day "that there was no rush of preparation in this country prior to the day the President went before Congress" could not have been made at a more inopportune time; but that is not the worst of it. It is an avowal never to be made by anybody at any time. It has aroused public indignation to a degree which is only faintly reflected by the denunciation directed against it in Congress.
>
> The usefulness of the Bureau of Public Information has never been satisfactorily demonstrated, but the demonstration that, if the bureau is to be continued, it should have a new head is complete and conclusive.

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman give me about three minutes?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is any gentleman going to rise and say that that is a Republican partisan statement?

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Are you serious in the statement you make that it is a Democratic newspaper?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why, certainly. Does the gentleman deny it?

Mr. AYRES. Why, certainly. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I might respond by asking the gentleman by what authority he speaks on that subject, but I am not interested, because it is so patently absurd. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the New York Times says precisely what I did, that if this administration does not believe as Mr. Creel says he does, that it is a matter of boast that this country went into this war inadequately prepared, and that it intends to see to it that after the war is over we are to be at once reduced to a condition of impotence to enforce an enduring and just peace, then Mr. Creel must resign, or he must be removed at once. I said that yesterday. It is repeated to-day in exact phraseology, nearly, by the New York Times.

My great hope, Mr. Speaker, is that when this motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] shall pass, and a committee will find that that language is insulting to a Member of the House and inimical to the privileges of this House, that of the Bureau of Public Information, to which this matter will be rereferred, its present chairman, Mr. Creel, will no longer be a member. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if I have any apologies to make to this House or to anybody for the opinion that I enunciated about this man who the day before yesterday insulted the patriotism of the American people and to-day insults the American Congress, it is that my language was far too temperate. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is——

Mr. HARDY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. HARDY. To reply to the last remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has the floor for an hour.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to ask for five minutes if there is nobody representing this side.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I am not completely familiar with the entire course and argument of the gentleman from Ohio, who poses before us as a nonpartisan advocate of great policies of the Government, but I want to say just this much about the Creel speech to which he took exception the other day and to which he repeats his exception to-day. The substance of it was that Mr. Creel, in a speech before the conference of American lecturers here in Washington presented with great force the efforts that the United States had been making to meet her enemy since we entered into the war, so much so that the papers say he received round after round of applause from the delegates. The opening sentence of that speech as given declared that he was proud of the fact that before we entered into the war we had been inadequately prepared for war. That was the sentence the gentleman seized on. He did not read what else he said. Mr. Creel continued: "Because," he said, "that demonstrated the sincerity of our profession that this great Nation was a Nation devoted to peace."

And then he showed the magnificent conduct of our people since we entered the war.

He may have been unfortunate in the first words he used, in that he gave a handle to men for political purposes to attack him. But the man that is not proud of the fact that when this war began America was not ready and armed as Germany was must be ashamed of the record of the Republican Party and the Democratic Party, which for all these years left this country in that condition. We boasted that our justice and humanity to all men and all nations was our shield and buckler of defense; that we were opposed to great standing armies in time of peace. We boasted we were a Nation devoted to peace. We boasted we were a Nation opposed to great preparation for aggressive warfare, and the man who simply refers to that fact and says he was proud that our life was consistent as a Nation has not insulted the American people. [Applause.] It is, indeed, strange that the great audience who heard the whole speech gave it rounds of applause if it was the craven and traitorous speech the gentleman would have you believe it was, by reading a single sentence, and the man who now uses that expression as a weapon with which to attack Mr. Creel or the party of which Mr. Creel is an humble representative and separates it from the context of the whole speech in order to do so is going out of his way to make political capital in a small way and to challenge an expression which would have found utterance in many a throat before we became involved in this war, and which was consonant with the life of the Nation up to the time we became involved in it. It seems to me that these little, petty, partisan flings are in line with other utterances that I have heard the gentleman from Ohio in the last three weeks indulge in, which have been full of party flings. He is always prating of his nonpartisanship and patriotism, of his moderation, and support of the administration, yet he lets no opportunity pass to attack every measure and every man of the administration where attack might seem to give some party advantage. He seized onto this just one sentence out of a whole speech as a sweet morsel of political claptrap to roll under his tongue. Not content with the discussion of the issues that come before us, every occasion that can give a pretext for criticism brings him to his feet. He talks about temperateness. I have seen him with flashing eye and with quivering cheek indulging in the same practice heretofore, so that I gaze on him with amazement and wonder why! [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I regret extremely that I was the originator of a matter which has occupied the time of the House for over two hours, when there is extremely important business pending. I introduced a resolution of inquiry which waited one week for action by the Post Office Committee, and no response was received to it. Under the rules of the House, at the expiration of the week, the resolution was called up and adopted. I made no personal references. That goes without saying. A Member could not make any personal references in such a resolution as that; and my object in asking for information on the subject covered was as sincere a motive as ever influenced a Member of this House in any action he might take. A day or two previously the announcement was made that parcels to soldiers overseas, sent by their friends and relatives, could no longer be received by the Post Office Department for transmission to them unless perchance the individual soldier to whom the package was going, sent from overseas, approved by his commanding officer, a request for the contents of that package, and that that individual approval was included in the package when offered for mailing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, coupled with the request for information as to the quantity being so transported was a further request for information as to the amount of matter being sent by the Committee on Public Information, the so-called Creel Bureau. I think in that connection I might say that it was a matter of very little interest to me as to what quantity might be going, or whether there was any going at all or not. But I did receive reliable information, which I can submit at any time, that such literature was being sent over. Now, I submit to this House, which is of the more interest to the boys in the trenches, to receive these little home packages, from mother, sister, wife, or sweetheart, or a speech by such a great man as we recognize the Secretary of the Treasury to be? My interest in the resolution that I offered was to find out whether that class of literature was still being sent across, and the package from home to the soldier boy was being refused.

In connection with the adoption of the resolution I made some remarks on this floor, and Mr. Creel has seen fit to reply to those remarks in the letter submitted by the Postmaster General, in such a way that I feel I am justified in asking this House to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. I do not need to offer any more explanation than he has so well offered. I have no personal grievance with Mr. Creel. I never saw the man in my life. I have a little enmity to him now, and any other man would have when he dignifies his position in a letter of absolute insult to a Member of this House for remarks made by the Member on the floor of this House in his right and says that the statement the Member makes is founded on "absolute baselessness." I have heard men called liars in various phrases, but I would much prefer that a man would come right outside the door here and call me a liar to my face now [applause] than write such an insinuating letter as that and submit it through such an instrumentality as a communication from the Postmaster General.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] says the remark of Mr. Creel was insulting, and I feel that it was insulting. Further, Mr. Creel questions a statement in my right as a Member of this House when he so characterizes my remarks. I leave the House to its own decision as to whether or not a public official, in answering a resolution of inquiry adopted by this House, can take that means of offering a personal insult to a Member of this House. I myself am now no longer concerned in this matter. It seems to me it is up to the House itself to say whether it cares to have a public official use his prerogative of letter writing to the extent of submitting an official response to a resolution adopted by the House, asking for information purely and nothing else, and including in his reply a personal insult for such remarks as the Member introducing it had the right to make on the floor. Mr. Creel quotes the statement that I say I had been reliably informed that there had been a large amount of that class of mail matter sent over. It is absolutely true. I have been so informed.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that the only thing to which the letter is directed?

Mr. TREADWAY. And then he goes still further. I have not the exact phraseology. I do not know exactly the words, but I take it for granted that he is correct in saying it is a well-known fact that great quantities of that class of matter have been placed in their hands overseas, practically confirming the same language. That is the extent of his quotation, which Mr. Creel says is "absolute baselessness." And, further than that, Mr. Speaker, he says I could have found out that it was absolutely baseless by a telephone inquiry. May I ask this House, when have we reached the point when a Member of Congress in order to secure information is under obligation to the subordinates of a department to call them on the telephone? Of course, if I had called for Mr. Creel I would have been shifted a dozen times, in the various offices down there, through a line of clerks, and I would have been blamed lucky if I could have reached Mr. Creel at all; because I see that just now he is devoting a good deal of his time and attention to going up in aeroplanes. He had one ride here the other day, and I saw that he got a little hurt over in Baltimore repeating it. So that it would have been a little difficult, probably, about the time this resolution was up, to have found Mr. Creel, to get him to answer the inquiry that I wanted to make. I was within my rights in asking for the information referred to in the resolution. I am still within my rights in confirming that statement, and I am still further within my rights when I say that a subordinate of a department of the Government has no right to offer a personal insult, and to question the veracity of a Member of this House for such statements as he makes on the floor of this House.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TREADWAY. My time has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to state that I am surprised at the attitude taken by most of the gentlemen on that side of the Chamber. This day was set apart for very important business. Then this matter came up suddenly. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] made his motion. A motion was made to lay that on the table and it was defeated, and then the gentleman from Minnesota changed his original motion—the objection to which on that side perhaps I could understand—and said that he simply wished to have the matter referred to a committee, and to have the matter investigated and reported upon. Why gentlemen upon that side of the House should with such unanimity have refused to allow a committee to be appointed by their own Speaker, whose impartiality is trusted by both sides of the House, which is all we asked, to investigate this matter and to report upon it, and why they should wish to take up two hours and a half in opposing that is beyond my comprehension. It seems to me that that was a most fair and moderate proposition. Some gentlemen on this side of the House thought it was unduly moderate and leaned backward——

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman see any fact in controversy; any question to be investigated?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly; it is in controversy whether that was a proper statement or not.

Mr. HARDY. That is a question of opinion and not of fact.

Mr. GILLETT. It is a question on which the gentleman from Minnesota very temperately and wisely said, "I will not ask the House to pass sudden judgment on that; I will give it time to get a report from the committee."

Mr. HARDY. Then the motion should have been postponed, it seems to me, to a future day and let us think about it.

Mr. GILLETT. If you want to think whether you will let the committee think about it, I do not think we will let it be done. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion and all amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to appoint a committee of five.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as the committee Mr. CARAWAY, Mr. HUMPHREYS, Mr. BOOHER, Mr. MCKINLEY, and Mr. MADDEN, and the document from the Postmaster General is temporarily referred to this committee of five.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 8753. An act to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

LIABILITY TO MILITARY SERVICE OF CERTAIN REGISTERED PERSONS.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], I desire to call up Senate joint resolution 123.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 123) providing for the calling into military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

Resolved, etc., That if under any regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," are placed in classes for the purpose of determining their relative liability for military service, no provision of said act shall prevent the President from calling for immediate military service under regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President all or part of the persons in any class or classes except those exempt from draft under the provisions of said act, in proportion to the total number of persons placed in such class or classes in the various subdivisions of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia designated by the President under the terms of said act, or from calling into immediate military service persons classed as skilled experts in industry or agriculture, however classified or wherever residing.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are four hours of general debate on this resolution. I ask unanimous consent that one-half of that time be controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] and the other half by myself.

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, has that been agreed to by the ranking minority member, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]?

Mr. FIELDS. That has been agreed to by the ranking minority member.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that one-half of the time be controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] and one-half by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this joint resolution, S. J. Res. No. 123, provides that no provision of the act of May 18, 1917 (known as the selective-service act), shall prevent the President from calling for immediate military service under regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President all or part of the persons in any class or classes except those exempt from draft under the provisions of said act, in proportion to the total number of persons placed in such class or classes in the various subdivisions of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia designated by the President under the terms of said act, or from calling into immediate military service persons classed as skilled experts in industry or agriculture, however classified or wherever residing.

I will state in the outset, Mr. Speaker, that under the selective-service act of May 18, 1917, or the regulations prescribed by the President in pursuance of said act, each registrant was given an order number, and the right of the President or the military authorities to defer the call of a registrant when his name is reached, who is not otherwise entitled to statutory exemption, is seriously questioned by high legal authority, and if it be true that the call of registrants can not be legally deferred when their order number is reached it will be impossible for the War Department to carry into execution its latest plan of classification under the questionnaire system, under which registrants having dependents are given deferred classification, or to defer the call of registrants in class 1 who are assiduously engaged in planting, cultivating, or harvesting crops, which the President desires to do. From my viewpoint the dictates of humanity demand that the call of registrants who have wives and children or other dependent relatives be deferred so long as there are available registrants who are unattached and who have no dependents, and the growing scarcity of food products, the supply of which depends upon farm labor makes it of national and international importance to conserve farm labor. Therefore, if there was no other points of merit in the bill, these two points are of such importance as to not only warrant, but to demand its speedy enactment into law. But there are other important features in the bill worthy of your consideration, one of which is to cure an inconsistency in the selective-service law. The law as enacted places the burden of military service upon the citizen population but provides that the whole population shall be used in ascertaining the quota of the various States and subdivisions thereof. The department, of course, took the latest census—1910—as a basis on which to ascertain the total population, and in administering the law in the first call under the selective draft it was found that that method placed great hardships upon many sections of the country for various reasons. First, local conditions have changed since 1910. There has been a great influx of population into some centers, and other sections of the country did not have as much population in 1917 as they had in 1910. Therefore, estimating it upon the 1910 census, or taking for the basis of its estimate the 1910 census, must necessarily result in inequalities.

There is another feature that enters into it. In the cities and some sections of the country we have a large foreign population. That foreign population is not subject to the draft, but it was used in ascertaining the quota from those communities. In those instances the people suffered. That hardship, however, has been or is being largely obviated by our recent treaties with our cobelligerents. So, in order to get away from these iniquities, the passage of this resolution is deemed advisable by the War Department.

In the administration of the draft law, under the first draft there were, if I remember correctly, two classes of registrants—the exempt and the nonexempt. Discretion was lodged largely in the local board as to who should be exempt and who should not, and we see in the administration of the law by these boards most glaring differences in classification, even in contiguous territories. In many sections some local board failed or refused to grant any claim for exemption, while others would go as high as 40 or 50 per cent, and in one case 74 per cent. So, in order to get away from that condition the War Department worked out a new classification, classifying the registrants into five classes, beginning with class 1 under what is known as the questionnaire system, which is considered by all who are familiar with the subject to be an improvement over the first system of classification.

Now, of course there will be some inequities between local boards in the classification under this new system. It would be impossible to work out a classification system for a great country of 100,000,000 people that would apply exactly alike to each and every community. But the figures from the War Department show that the inequalities are far less under the new classification than under the method used in the call of the first increment under the selective draft. And the War Department has said that the passage of this resolution is absolutely necessary to carry out the new classification to which I have referred. Then there is another proposition embodied in this resolution, and it is the one that appeals to me most.

The resolution authorizes the President to call any part or all of any one of the classes. The purpose of that is to authorize the President to lay the burdens of military service upon the men in class 1 first. There seems to be a difference of opinion among members of the committee as to the intention of Congress when we passed the selective-service law. Members of the minority who have joined in the minority report, or some of them, are of the opinion that a man's liability to service should be determined solely and exclusively by the number that he drew in the drawing, and I agree that it should be, so far as it applies to the class to which he belongs, but I was of the opinion, and I am of the opinion now, that it is better for all concerned that the men who have the least responsibilities at home, the men who have no dependents, the men who are not so vital in the industrial and social life of the country, to first answer their country's call. In other words, I believe that it is better, and I believe it is right and proper, to call a single man who has no wife and children before you call the man who has a wife and children or other dependent relatives. That was my idea when we were enacting the selective-service law. If this resolution is adopted as reported by the committee, it gives the President authority to exhaust all of class 1 in all sections of the country before he invades the other class in any part of the country. I know that there is some argument on the other side of this proposition, but our arguments rest upon our viewpoints. If we hold local interests above national interests, of course the argument that this arrangement is unjust might hold good in some localities, but if we hold that this is the war of the Nation and that the best interest of the Nation should be paramount in the mind of every man, we must concede that that method is the best that will least injure or disturb the citizenship of the Nation and place the least hardship upon the dependent women and children.

Other Members of the House may judge as they like, but it is my opinion that we will least disturb even local conditions by calling into the service men in class 1, so long as that class exists throughout the country, rather than invade the other classes in some sections, thereby taking fathers from their children, husbands from their wives, or sons from their dependent parents. There will be an amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], and inasmuch as there is a great demand for time and I may not have an opportunity to speak later on I desire to refer to that amendment now. It is an amendment to base the apportionment upon the total registered population. If I understand that proposition, when a community furnishes all of the registrants that it has in class 1, but has not filled its quota, it must then draw from the oher classes, hereby invading the class that has dependents. To that part of the amendment I am absolutely opposed.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I ask the gentleman if that is a committee amendment that the gentleman is speaking of?

Mr. FIELDS. The amendment was not offered or discussed in the committee. It has been prepared by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] since the bill was reported. It will be offered as an amendment on the floor. I hope that no amendment will be adopted which will make it possible in the future administration of this law to call into the military service men who have wives and children or dependent parents to support while there are other available men in the country who have no dependents, regardless of where they may be located. This war is not a sectional question; it is the biggest problem that this country has ever faced, and it is the Nation's problem, and I hope that every man here and elsewhere will view it from a national viewpoint. There will be another amendment offered, that will provide that credit shall be given for the numbers that have volunteered in the service from time to time. Credits have already been given for those who have previously volunteered, and as there is but little volunteering at this time it will mean but little either way whether that amendment is adopted or defeated. I am somewhat like the new squire on that proposition—there is a good argument on both sides; but one is evidently better than the other.

If a local community contends that it should have credit for the men who shall volunteer from that ommunity, I see no reason why it should not, unless the calculations necessary to ascertain the credits due it would impede the progress of the draft when the call shall come; but if that should occur, or if it is the belief of the War Department that it will occur, shall we impede the progress of the War Department by forcing it to delay the call sufficient time to figure out and properly place the credits due each community at a time like this when our country is facing the greatest crisis in its history; and, Mr. Speaker, there is another thought worthy of consideration, which is. For what purpose did those volunteers give their service to the country? Did they volunteer for the benefit of the country or did they volunteer for the benefit of other registrants whose call would be deferred because of their voluntary enlistment? I maintain that every man who volunteered into the military service of his country volunteered not for the benefit of his neighbor registrant, but for the benefit of his country, for the preservation of the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.] So I say if crediting these voluntary enlistments will impede the progress of the draft and the prosecution of the war, then the country for whom these men volunteered should be given the benefit of their voluntary enlistment. As I have previously said, credits have already been given for those who have previously volunteered. That question was raised in committee by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIDSON] by a question propounded by him to Gen. Crowder. Mr. DAVIDSON said:

To illustrate: My home city was very greatly interested in the National Guard and sent out very full companies—there were three companies from my home city. The result was that in the first draft not a single man was drafted, and the boys writing to me report that there are enough volunteers to fill the next draft. If enough boys volunteered from my home city—the city of Oshkosh—to not only fill the first draft but to fill their quota in the second draft, how can I explain to them that in addition to that they are going to draft men from that city?

Gen. CROWDER. I have tried to cover that situation before. The officer who has done a large amount of the figuring on the quotas is here, and I am going to ask you to let him have a try at it in new language.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I want to understand it myself. I believe there is much merit in your plan.

Col. JOHNSON. Let us suppose that Oshkosh started out with 100 men liable to military service. Fifty of them volunteered in National Guard or Regular Army, and now we come in with the new rule. Oshkosh, instead of having 100 men in class 1, only has 50. The new quota for Oshkosh will be based on 50 instead of 100, and thus Oshkosh automatically gets credit for all the men of Oshkosh who volunteered with the National Guard and Regular Army.

There is another thought in connection with giving credit for voluntary enlistments that we might well consider. I am told that in some sections of the country practically all men who are in sympathy with the war movement have volunteered. I do not know whether that is correct or not. That is a pretty broad statement, and I do not attempt to vouch for its accuracy, but I was told a few days ago by a Member of this House that he had been in a section of the country where that condition exists. If that be true, and we give credit for voluntary enlistments, this is what will happen in sections like that: These men who have not volunteered and who are charged with not being in sympathy with this war movement will remain at home largely because of the fact that their neighbors have volunteered for service.

Mr. REAVIS Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? What sort of a soldier does the gentleman believe these disloyal men would make?

Mr. FIELDS. I did not say they were disloyal.

Mr. REAVIS. What sort of a soldier does the gentleman think a man who is not in sympathy with the purposes of his country would make?

Mr. FIELDS. I think a man who is in sympathy with the purposes of his country would be a better soldier than the man who is not.

Mr. REAVIS. Would it not be a good idea to give these fellows some employment and keep them out of the Army?

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman is getting back to the volunteer proposition, which is past, and I do not care to open up that discussion. Mr. Speaker, there is one more provision in the bill——

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. FIELDS. Let me finish this statement. The last provision of the bill provides for the calling of men who have been given deferred classification, in class 2, as skilled workmen regardless of their classification or location. The Military Establishment may from time to time be in great need of skilled mechanics, and this provision of the resolution makes it possible for it to call these men regardless of their classification or their location. I think that a very valuable feature of the resolution. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman is quite familiar, I know, with the provisions of this resolution, and I am asking the question for information purely. My understanding is that if this resolution prevails the first call to be responded to will be those of class 1.

Mr. FIELDS. Exactly.

Mr. HAMLIN. Suppose there is to be a million men raised on the first call. Will that million of men be apportioned among the different States in class 1 according to the number of men in those different States in class 1? That is the way I understand it.

Mr. FIELDS. They will.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, this question: This classification is submitted by different boards in the different States, and there are no hard and fast rules by which this classification should be made by those boards. Does the gentleman concede that this thing might happen, that a board in one State or one section of a State might put very few men, in proportion to the population of that State, in class 1, and if the call comes exclusively to class 1 and it is taken according to the population in class 1, without regard to the population of the State, the gentleman's State, for instance, might have to give three times as many men to that first call as my State would, because the boards in my State might classify very few in No. 1? Does the gentleman anticipate some unfairness in that?

Mr. FIELDS. I am glad the gentleman raised that question. There is no hard and fast rule under which the classification is made, but there is a general rule laid down by the War Department, and the classifications, the records show, are much more uniform under the new classification than under the classification of the first draft. In fact, the range of variation of percentage between the classifications by the different boards is not nearly so wide under the new classification as under the old. As I stated in the start, of course, there will be some instances where there will be differences. I know of no way, owing to the different conditions that exist, or no rule that could be worked out that would cause men of the local boards to act in the same mind and under exactly the same decision in all cases; in fact, so long as there are men of different capacities there will be men of different opinions, even in matters of fact; but, speaking broadly, the figures show that the range of inequality is not nearly so wide under the new classification as under the old.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman has passed from the point I wanted to recur to, but the gentleman stated a moment ago in regard to the question whether the men who were really anxious to help in this war have enlisted voluntarily and several gentlemen got the impression that the gentleman was in doubt on that question. I do not think there is any doubt so far as our own State is concerned because I know of thousands who are ready and waiting to be called to the colors whenever the country needs them.

Mr. FIELDS. I should regret——

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think the gentleman meant that.

Mr. FIELDS (continuing). If I was so understood. That was not what I meant to say at all, but what I meant to say was that every man who has volunteered was willing, but some are not, speaking of one section of the country—I shall not name the section, for the information given to me may not be correct—but a Member of the House has said that that condition exists in one section that he visited recently. If it does, I suppose, of course, that it is only a small section of the country, and the great mass of the registrants who are waiting to be called throughout the country are just as anxious to get in as the men who have volunteered.

Mr. LANGLEY. They are merely waiting until the country calls them to go. Let me suggest to my friend, the gentleman may be too modest to call attention to the fact that the gentleman is one who represents a district one county of which, Breathitt, at least, had more volunteers than the entire quota.

Mr. FIELDS. Fifty-two more volunteers than the quota, is my recollection.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I do.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to get a little information. The call has gone out for the raising or inducting into the service of 150,000 men under a call for a second draft army. I noticed in the Official Bulletin, and have also seen it stated in the press that the number that my State—Georgia—should furnish under that call is about 6,300. I also noticed that the State of New York, with a great many times the number of population of Georgia, the great city of New York, having probably twice the population of the entire State of Georgia, is to furnish under this call only 10,000 and some odd hundreds. I would like to know on what basis or plan the quotas are called, under the old plan, or is it under the idea that this bill is to be enacted into law and the call based on the number of class 1?

Mr. FIELDS. I think it is fair to assume that the War Department is not calling men under the provisions of this bill on the assumption that it is going to pass. I am not familiar with the particular case that the gentleman cites and would therefore not attempt to explain it.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman, then, can not give me any information as to why that great disparity in the number?

Mr. FIELDS. With regard to that particular case, no; and not being familiar with it, it would not be fair to the War Department for me to attempt to answer it.

Mr. CRISP. The State had furnished its entire quota under the first call. This is under the second call. And their quota is about 6,300. And I notice that Indiana and other States with a population about as great have to furnish only three or four thousand men. I would like to know the basis for that.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that these are only the remaining numbers of the first call, who have not until recently been summoned to camp. The second general call has not yet been made.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Speaker, supplementing the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN], as I understand it, the scheme to raise this army is based very largely upon the idea of local responsibility and local control. Now, does not the gentleman anticipate that unless you change your machinery for raising this army you will remove from the several communities a strong incentive from everybody outside of class 1 in seeing that nobody that ought to be in class 1 escapes the responsibility which is incident to the position in class 1.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman I do not know where this removes the local machinery in any way. The local boards will continue to exist, and they will still classify the registrants.

Mr. SUMNERS. Directing attention to the inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri, if you provide that these men are to be taken from all over the country, then in any community its local board can prevent its citizenship from getting into class 1—shields that community from its responsibility of helping to contribute this army.

Mr. FIELDS I am glad the gentleman raised that question. There are some cases of that kind throughout the country; but the War Department carefully scans the figures, and in every case where upon the face of it there seems to have been some favoritism played an inspector has been sent into that community and the board has been ordered to make an investigation and reclassification.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. The question I had in mind was this: If there is partisanship on the part of the local board, so as to exempt those from class 1 who should have been placed in class 1, will not public sentiment in that community on the part of parents of boys who have been sent, while boys equally responsible for service are kept at home, compel those who are fraudulently exempted to go into the service eventually?

Mr. FIELDS. Certainly so.

Mr. SUMNERS. Does the gentleman think public opinion would be as strong in that direction if every man should stand just behind the lines in class 2 now, if that community did not furnish that quota out of class 2? Now, if that community did not furnish its quota out of class 1, he would be called on to help furnish the quota.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman is drawing on his imagination very extravagantly. The War Department would not accept such a classification from any board without investigating it. And in addition to that, if this resolution passes, they have the right to draw on class 2 even before class 1 is exhausted, regardless of the order, number, or location of those in class 2.

Mr. HAMLIN. Right on that point. As I understand the resolution, it gives the right to the President to call from any class certain mechanics——

Mr. FIELDS. Experts, who, if classified as such, are placed in class 2.

Mr. HAMLIN. We all understand that is pretty broad authority.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The resolution gives him authority to call not only mechanics, but call any man in any class from any place at any time.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is exactly what I say. It is broad authority, and it looks to me like the President has the right to call anybody from any class.

Mr. LAZARO. Has the gentleman any idea of the percentage of the men who were registered in class 1 who have volunteered and been permitted to select their branch of the service away from the firing line?

Mr. FIELDS. I have not those figures at hand.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. If you will make your question brief.

Mr. KNUTSON. What provision is there in the bill to protect agricultural labor?

Mr. FIELDS. There is no provision in the bill. But the Provost Marshal General has said in a letter that he published to the country that he would place at the foot of class 1 or defer the call of every man who is engaged in planting, cultivating, or harvesting of a crop, and on March 11 he sent the following telegram to governors of all the States. The telegram reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 11, 1918.

Governors of all States:
(No. B–80.)

A new National and State quota will be announced as soon as Congress acts on pending legislation governing the apportionment of quotas. In the meantime it will be necessary to call a new increment of about 90,000 men to be distributed equally throughout the United States. The call for these men will go out later in the day. In several cases this call will run over the current quota of the State and boards upon which it is made, but the excess will be credited on the new quota of each State and board affected, as will all other excess due to special calls.

The situation arising from the scarcity of farm labor demands that the call to the colors of men actively, completely, and assiduously engaged in the planting or cultivation of a crop, but who are in class 1 and within the new quota, should be deferred until the end of the new quota. Please instruct your local boards, therefore, that the President directs that, in filling this emergency call, they shall pass the order numbers of such men and defer their call for the present. It must be borne in mind that this step is taken solely in the need of the Nation and not for the benefit of any individual. Therefore, while boards should consider it a grave duty to exercise this power to conserve and augment the agricultural production, they should observe closely the conduct of those deferred, and immediately upon becoming convinced that any person so deferred is not giving his entire time and earnest attention to agricultural duty or that he is trifling with the deferment thus granted him, the board should forthwith call him to the colors. All citizens should assist in making this expedient effective and in bringing to the attention of the boards cases meriting deferment as well as cases in which deferment is being abused.

CROWDER.

And I will add in this connection what I have previously said, that it is seriously questioned by eminent legal authority as to whether the War Department can execute this order or proceed under the new classification without the enactment of this legislation. Therefore, the War Department is extremely anxious that it be passed without delay.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FIELDS. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to find out if the proposition is to base the quota of a State on the number of those in class 1 (A) or upon the number of all those who are ultimately liable to military duty? I see your report says:

First, to provide that quotas under the selective-service act shall be based upon the number actually liable to military service under said act instead of upon population of the several States.

Now, do you mean by that that those in class 1 (A) or those who would ultimately be liable to military service?

Mr. FIELDS. Of course, if the war continues until all men shall be called, it would mean all those liable to military service, but in the first call, which applies to class 1, it will be based upon the number in class 1. In other words, it will be based on the number in the class they are drawing from at the time.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the justice of that? I want to know. I am trying to get information. Ought it not to be based on the entire population rather than on military service under this act?

Mr. FIELDS. If we do that, when a community has exhausted all of its men in class 1 and has not yet filled its quota it will be forced, as I have previously explained, to send men who have dependents to make up its quota.

Mr. STEVENSON. When they have sent all their men in class 1.

Mr. FIELDS. Yes; if a community sends all the men it has in class 1 before its quota is filled, it will have to draw from men in other classes according to their order numbers, unless this bill is enacted into law.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. Thirty-six minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 36 minutes. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] is recognized for two hours.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, it has been charged that the fact that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs took time to consider this important bill has delayed the draft. Of course there is not one scintilla of foundation for any such claim as that. The Provost-Marshal General of the United States Army, under the law as it exists now, can call every man of military age in the United States and put him in the ranks to-morrow under the law we enacted heretofore. This new law that we ask for will not add a single man to the Army of the United States if it becomes a law. It only seeks to change the rules of the game after the game has begun, and some of us think it changes them unfairly between the different States and communities.

I have undertaken to put into the RECORD here the tremendous variation between counties and districts, running as low as 9 per cent in one county and as high in one county, in the district of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], as 98 per cent. I finally have gotten the Provost Marshal General to recognize it. Gen. Crowder is quoted as follows in the public press to-day:

Provost Marshal Gen. Crowder to-day ordered a thorough investigation of local draft board classifications in districts where the percentage of class 1 men is singularly small.

The inquiries are the result of congressional opposition to Crowder's plan to base the quotas for future drafts on the number in class 1 instead of the total number registered or the population.

In some districts the percentage of class 1 men is only 17, while in other districts it is 45 or 50. Several Congressmen claim that some local boards have deliberately adopted the policy of cutting down the percentage of class 1 men to keep their quotas lower.

"The investigations are being ordered just as rapidly as it is found there is the least cause for one," it was stated at the Provost Marshal General's office.

Now, if you will adopt the amendment that I am going to offer you will not have need of any investigations. There will not be anybody sent around to look into these matters, because we propose to base it, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] indicated, upon the total registered military population of military age in each district, and there can be no manipulation of that.

Now, in order that I may be exact in my statements, I want to read to you some provisions of the existing law, and the changes in that law made by the bill that we are considering. The very purpose of this bill is to hereafter take away the credit that was given in the previous draft for volunteers. It proposes that the drafted men shall be called in proportion to the total number of men placed in such class or classes or various subdivisions of the Territories and States and the District of Columbia designated by the President under the existing act, and that no provision in the act that we passed last May shall prevent him from doing that thing. The provision in existing law that would prevent him from calling the total number placed in class 1 provides that credit shall be given upon draft quotas for the men who volunteer or who are mustered into the service from the National Guard, and when we raised that point Mr. DAVIDSON, of Wisconsin, said to Gen. Crowder, "What shall we say to the people of Oshkosh, where we have not as yet drafted a man?" He said, "We have now many volunteers ready for the next call." Col. Johnson, the deputy provost marshal, said a man is not entitled to much credit who volunteers. He should let the provost marshal send for him when he wants him.

The existing law bases the quotas called for from the various draft divisions of the country upon the total population of the district. For the reason that the population statistics available at present are only estimates, the Provost Marshal General states that the quotas called for under the present law in the first draft were not equitably distributed. In determining the population aliens who are not liable for military service were counted in the estimates of population, and therefore those draft districts having large alien populations were required to furnish soldiers out of proportion to the numbers of those taken from districts whose total population was largely or entirely citizens.

We seek to correct those two things.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman made the statement that the draft was made upon the population of districts. Is it not based upon the population of States?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. On the population of States and subdivisions or districts thereof.

Mr. MADDEN. No; it says "the States."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It says "States, Territories, and Districts, or subdivisions thereof." I have the law right here.

In order to eliminate these two inequities, which are generally admitted, the joint resolution S. J. Res. 123, which is now before us for consideration, was prepared by the office of the Provost Marshal General and submitted to Congress for its approval.

I have prepared an amendment to the bill under consideration which I propose to offer at the proper time, and which I have published in the RECORD at the end of my remarks for the information of the House, which will completely correct the above-enumerated inequities of the present law and yet preserve entirely the basic principle of all compulsory military laws of every country. [The basic reason urged for the draft law was that every man owes military service.]

The present law provides that the draft—shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens between the ages of 21 and 30 years, both inclusive. Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, and subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof.

My amendment provides that the quotas for each draft district shall be determined in proportion to the total number of persons registered and liable for military service therein, including resident aliens who have waived claims for exemption.

The reason for including aliens who have waived claims for exemption is because Gen. Crowder states that they have been placed in class 1, and therefore are as ready for military service as any citizen. The reason for abandoning total population as a basis is that it is a guess at present and includes aliens who can claim exemption. My amendment eliminates both of these objections and bases the quota upon a census made by the War Department itself, and eliminates all aliens who refuse to serve in the Army. [Applause.]

The Provost Marshal General's office by the adoption of the bill now under consideration without amendment proposes to change completely the basic principle of the present law and determine the quotas in proportion to the number of men placed in classes by the local draft boards. Gen. Crowder has stated to the Military Committee and to me personally in discussion about the bill that if this bill is adopted he expects to base the quotas hereafter to be called upon the total number of registrants placed in class 1 by the various draft boards of the country.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. DENISON. Under your amendment that you are going to propose is the quota determined before the physical examination or afterwards?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Before the physical examination. That does not leave any chances for manipulation. The bill as reported by the majority of the committee is intended to no longer allow credit for volunteers or those inducted voluntarily into the service.

In regard to that call for the first men under the second draft they sent out notices to the States saying that they were not to allow credit for volunteers. I addressed a letter to the Provost Marshal General and called attention to the provision of the present law. His office replied that they wanted to know that they would get a certain number of men at this call. He notified them not to take credit for volunteers, but he says he expects in the future to give credit for volunteers in subsequent quotas.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. If that credit is not allowed for the volunteers, how does it occur that discrepancies exist such as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] referred to?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is because of the power the President has to call them for special units. We granted a greater power perhaps than Congress intended. We are told by the Judge Advocate General's office that they do not have to come to Congress for any further legislation on that score. We opened the door wide enough for anybody and everybody.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand that the gentleman's amendment proposes to base the quota on the total registration?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. On those found liable to military service. I omit all aliens and all those excluded under the law between the ages of 21 and 30.

Mr. MADDEN. That excludes convicts and everybody?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; excludes convicts and immoral persons and aliens who have claimed their alienage. Those are included in class 5. My amendment only includes in the military population those in the first four classes—all good Irishmen and other good men who are willing to fight for this country. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. The same inequalities that are complained about will hereafter exist as they exist to-day?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No. I have eliminated all of them. I have eliminated all chances of that. Now, we know what they are. I eliminated all aliens who claim exemption. Every alien who waived exemption is put in class 1.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. If I understand the gentleman correctly, if this bill is passed it will wipe the slate clean of all credits which the States or counties may have by reason of volunteer enlistments?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It will allow no credit for volunteers. No; they will have none whatever hereafter if you adopt the bill as reported by the committee. It is the intention of the War Department to allow no credit hereafter for volunteers upon future draft quotas if this bill becomes a law as reported to the House.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I should like to finish my speech if I can, and then I will answer questions.

Mr. FIELDS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that all aliens who do not claim exemption are placed in class 1?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. If the gentleman will recall, I asked Gen. Crowder that question in the committee, and he said they were giving the same rights to aliens on claims for exemption as to any others.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; but he says directly, and I will put his language in the RECORD, that every alien who did not claim his exemption is placed in class 1, and he said it to me in the presence of the Assistant Secretary of War. There is no question about it. Now I will yield for one more question, and then I want to go on.

Mr. KREIDER. I should like to know whether the gentleman's amendment provides for the giving of credit for those who have enlisted since the last draft?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; for all volunteers. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do I understand the gentleman from Nebraska to say that hereafter the Government will not accept volunteers?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It will accept them, but hereafter no credit will be allowed, if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Allowing no credit is a very different thing from not receiving them.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They will receive them, but they will not allow your district any credit for it. I am going to show you what that means.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They will allow men to volunteer to go and fight for the country——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; but they will allow no credit to your district for them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To take the place of drafted men——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But give them no credit for them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As a matter of fact, the Provost Marshal's office ceased giving credit some time ago, did it not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will allow me, I think there is some misunderstanding about this question of volunteering.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. All right.

Mr. DENT. The Government has stopped receiving volunteers, except in the Navy and in the Marine Corps.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They volunteer for service in the Engineers.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will explain that, if the House will permit me. After the 15th of December they changed the name for the man who wants to serve his country voluntarily. They no longer call him a volunteer, but if he comes within the draft age he is called an inducted man, and under the present law that man's draft district would be entitled to credit for him.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Will the gentleman state this fact, that this bill not only denies credit for enlistments hereafter, but it takes away credit for the enlistments that were already made?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Just one question.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman is in error as to inductions. The local board is given credit for the men who are inducted. I had a case a few days ago of an accountant whom they needed in the service, who was inducted, and they wired the local board the authority to induct him.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If he came from class 1, they will get credit for him, but otherwise not.

As I said to you, the bill as reported is intended to deny and does deny these credits for volunteers. The law as it now exists allows credit to the draft district upon its draft quota for the number of soldiers so furnished, and my amendment adheres to that just principle. The purpose of raising armies is to get soldiers to fight the country's battles. It is immaterial to the Nation whether they come as volunteers or drafted men. But it is a vital thing to a community whether or not it is dealt fairly with as between other communities of like obligations in the matter of furnishing soldiers for the sacrifice of war. Under this law a draft district may have furnished voluntarily the entire number of soldiers required of it under a draft call, yet if its local board has put as many of its men in class 1 as has another district that has furnished no volunteers whatever, the county that has already given its full quota of men for the trenches of Europe will be required to give as many more as the county does that has furnished no volunteers. This is true of many counties in Nebraska. I do not believe that this House or the country will accept as a just application of the principle of universal liability to military service a law that will result in some sections furnishing several times the number of men to go to France and die in battle that other districts of the same military population are required to do.

Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. LENROOT, the new Senator from Wisconsin, placed in the RECORD a statement showing that five States have been given four-fifths of all the great war contracts made by the General Government up to the date of his speech. The labor of those contractors becomes very profitable if it can be retained for use on these contracts. If the local boards in those States place a small per cent of their registrants in class 1, it may easily result, if this bill becomes a law, that some States will grow rich during the war from the profit of the labor of their men who remain at home, while the rest of the States send their men to fill their places in the battle line. [Applause.]

The attempt is made to justify the bill that is now before the House upon the ground that the men of military age who stay at home because they have been placed in favored classes render a service that in some degree can be compared with that which the soldier gives to his country upon the field of battle. But no fair-minded man will contend for a moment that there is a similarity of service or sacrifice required from those who stay at home with that which is asked of the soldier in this war. No man makes a sacrifice at this time that can be compared in the slightest degree to that of the soldiers who are now fighting, struggling, and dying upon the blood-soaked battle fields of France. [Applause.] Hundreds of thousands of these men whom we are going to draft under this law are going to certain death before this war is over. Thousands of our boys may be dying there to-day. Those who stay at home are going to get rich and enjoy peace and happiness because the sacrificing soldier wins the war for him. The soldier starves and suffers from wounds and struggles through the mud of Flanders and dies in the trenches upon the sodden and trampled plains of Picardy. The man who stays at home receives bigger wages than he ever knew before; the products of his labor command enormous prices, compared to those paid for them in time of peace. You can never make the soldier nor the people of this country accept the plea that the man who stays at home in peace and plenty and gets rich because of the inevitable opportunities for money making in war time is in any sense giving service that is military in the meaning of the present law. [Applause.]

The selective-draft law, fairly and properly applied, can mean this and only this: Given a thousand registrants of military age, every man of them owes to his country the sacrifice of his life, if need be, upon the battle field to defend his country's rights or her existence. Only those are to be excused from among those registrants who are physically unfit to fight or to do other military service. The principle of selective conscription allows a board of local men to determine only the order in which those found liable and fit for service shall be called. If it is claimed that the bill under consideration does not specifically state that quotas are to be determined by the number in class 1, the Provost Marshal General has stated to the Military Committee that that is the rule which is to be put in practice—and it is the rule that this bill is asked to make possible—and he says that if he is given this bill as it comes from his department he does not expect to have to invade any other classes except for experts, and that with the light and information that he has before him now he believes we will fight this war with the number of registrants in class 1.

To base the quotas upon the number of men placed in class 1 will result in the number of soldiers furnished by any draft district being the result of the opinions of men who, either through intent, ignorance, or misunderstanding, may so classify the men as to result in the grossest inequalities as between different communities and States.

In my own State of Nebraska the report as to the classifications made by the different boards in every draft district and furnished me by the governor shows the most glaring inequalities and variations as between counties of like numbers and character of population. I have placed some comparisons in the RECORD, and for the information of the House I had printed yesterday the entire report showing the total number of registrants, the number placed in class 1 by each draft board, and the number of registrants who have appealed in every county in the State. My information is that a very small per cent of exemptions from class 1 assignment are being allowed by district boards upon appeal. In the counties where I made inquiry they are so few as to have little effect upon the final figures.

Mr. ROGERS. Suppose a man is placed by a local board in class 2, who, in view of the general rulings and directions of the Provost Marshal General, should have been placed in class 1, is there any way of reviewing that action of the local board?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is very difficult. There is a county agent, a lawyer, appointed to advise every board, and if he advises against it nothing can be done. In most of the counties they are told that they do not want any interference, and but few appeals are being granted.

But, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this proposed overthrow of the basic principle of the present draft law and the proposal to fight this war with an army to be raised solely from class 1, because I believe that it will result in disaster to the country and a wholesale delivery of men from liability to military service at a time when every thinking man knows that if we win this war we will have to arm every man of military age, as provided by the terms of the present act, and in all human probability raise the age limit high enough to make possible the levying of at least 10,000,000 of fighting men.

Let us have done with foolish fancies about winning this war with food, with ships, with speeches, with revolutions in Germany, with men behind the plow, with men in manufacturing plants and all other places where men are safe from German bullets and making money while the soldiers die. This war will be won, can only be won, when we put more fighting men in France than the central powers of Europe can muster; men with rifles in their hands and cannon and machine guns at their backs. We will only win it when we understand it is only with blood and iron and man power in overwhelming numbers that we can drive our enemy from one field to another, from trench to trench, from fortification to fortification, and across the Rhine; until we nail the Stars and Stripes upon the very gates of Berlin. [Applause.]

Let us look for a moment at the picture that the battle field of Picardy presents to-day. Though we have never been furnished the figures as to the comparative size of the armies now engaged in a death struggle, we know beyond any possibility of dispute that Germany was only able to start this great drive on a 50-mile front and plunge 40 miles deep into the center of the allied lines because, and only because, she had more men, overwhelmingly more men, with rifles in their hands and cannon to support them, with which to overcome the valor and the skill of the outnumbered allies. She has no better soldiers nor better guns; no more efficient leaders; she simply has more men and more guns. We must only expect to defeat them with a bigger and better armed force than they can possibly muster.

Why has Germany and Austria been able to muster a larger army than the allies do at this critical hour in France?

The allies outnumber them in population. The superiority in numbers of the German armies has been brought about because they have applied to the limit the principle of universal liability of their men of military age to render military service. Every man who is able to stand in the ranks is on the firing line, high and low, rich and poor, prince and peasant. You ask who does the work of Germany and France? I answer, it is done by those who are unfit to fight, too old or too young to be soldiers. The women and the children and the prisoners of war supply the rest. This is true of every nation in Europe which is in this war. We must prepare to do the same thing here. Many men are possessed of the soft notion that this war is a task that will not push this Nation to the very limit of its powers in order to win it. Too many men are thinking that this is a time to make money; many of those who cry for this very bill which we have under consideration shout loudly that industry must not be disturbed. I say, Mr. Chairman, that every good American must get out of his head every thought of making money out of this war, or we are liable to lose it. Let those who are eager for war profits beware, and turn their attention to furnishing fighting men, or they may discover at the last that they have only been making money while their country bleeds, to at the last have to contribute their war profits to the Kaiser. [Applause.] We have decided that $30 a month is sufficient pay for the soldier, who is asked to give his young life for his country's salvation. Let every man fix his mind on the soldier's pittance and resolve to contribute his surplus above that amount to his country as long as her very life is at stake.

The Provost Marshal General in advocating this very bill before the committee stated that the reason that he would fight the war with class 1 was that the prime object of the Nation should be to protect the economical and industrial life of the country. But we can not safely protect that life with the limited army that can be drawn from that class as at present selected.

It is in the printed hearings that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GORDON] asked the Provost Marshal General whom he considered the greatest military genius that the present European war had produced. The General replied that no great military genius had arisen as a result of this war. He stated that this was a war of minor tactics, a war of commanders of small units, of captains and lieutenants. Well, it may be so in Washington; there are plenty of them here, I admit [applause], but in my opinion history will not record that verdict as the lesson of the battle fields of Europe.

Was it a war of minor tactics when five great German armies, composed of more than a million and a half of men, after the conquest of Belgium came pouring down into northern France and Marshal Joffre, that grand old hero of France, turned them back at the Marne, on a battle front of a hundred miles, and saved the democratic civilization of western Europe? [Applause.]

Was it a war of minor tactics when this man Hindenburg that now overtops the Kaiser with his fame in Germany, overthrew at Tannenburg, after seven days of battle on a front of 70 miles that great invading army of the Russians with a loss to them of 250,000 men and gave them a defeat that struck the first blow at the very vitals of the Russian Empire?

Was it a war of minor tactics when a year later, Von Mackensen swept with three great armies up through Galicia and united with the Germans who had captured Warsaw and overran Poland and finally put the Russian Empire out of the war and lost to our allies a force that only America is able to make up to them?

And is it a war of minor tactics that is being fought on the bloody plains of Picardy to-day, upon a battle front of almost a hundred miles? Millions upon millions of brave men are there straining in a colossal struggle with the whole world as a possible prize. The battle front at Waterloo extended for less than 3 miles. Gettysburg, Austerlitz, and Jena about the same. The armies that fought in those wars of the past were counted by thousands. The great battles of this world war are fought by millions of men upon either side.

Mr. Speaker, we must get out of our minds these fields of small dimensions, these ideas about small tactics. Captains and lieutenants are essential in this war, but in places of high command we must have men of unquestioned vision and understanding of the magnitude of the task we have undertaken. We have such a man in Pershing, who commands our troops in France. [Applause.] Let us give him the Army he must have to bring certain victory to our cause.

The idea behind the bill under consideration contemplates an army unequal to the task that confronts the country. The world is the stage of this great war and we should strive to become the chief actors in the drama and perform the principal part. The age of military service should be raised at once to at least 40 years, where the House put it when we passed the draft law. [Applause.] Personally, I am in favor of raising the limit to 60 years. It is over 50 in some of the European countries now. Many a man between 50 and 60 is still good for some kind of military service. Let him be required to render that service at the salary of the soldier. Let us preserve inviolate the basic principle of the present law, which, in my opinion, the proposed bill will destroy, and that is that every hundred men in America of military age that are physically fit shall be required to furnish the same number of soldiers, and that the only thing that the classification shall determine is the order in which those men shall be called to serve their country upon the field of battle. And also let us give credit for those men who are brave enough to volunteer for the service of the Nation when she needs volunteers. [Applause.]

I append the amendment which I propose to offer to Senate joint resolution 123, which is the bill under consideration:

Amendment by Mr. SHALLENBERGER: On page 2, line 5, strike out all after the word "act," down to and including the word "act" at the end of line 8, and in line 11, after the period, at the end of the bill, add the following: "Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia or subdivisions thereof, called under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, shall hereafter be determined in proportion to the total number of persons registered and liable for military service therein, including resident aliens who have waived all claims for exemption, and credit shall be given on its quotas to any State, Territory, Districts, or subdivision thereof for the number of men who have entered the military service of the United States from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof since April 1, 1917, including members of the National Guard who were in Federal service on that date."

Mr. FIELDS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, it will be utterly impossible for me to discuss the merits of this measure in 10 minutes or to answer the criticism of my eloquent friend from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]. As I sat in my seat and listened to his portrayal of the great struggle going on on the fields of Picardy, I wondered how he could take the floor in this House and undertake to strike down a measure that is intended above all things to help our country win this war. When we enacted the selective-draft law, we did it for the purpose of raising an army. There are two great fundamental facts underlying that law. One is that every man physically fit in this country is liable for military service. The other is that the Government has the undoubted right to say to a man, "You shall put on the uniform of a soldier and fight or you shall remain at home and perform the duties that will best tend to win the war."

Under that law boards were organized to register the young men of this country between the ages of 21 and 31, which this House and the Senate determined that between those ages we could find the men best fitted to build up an army. Nine million men and more were registered. After they were registered the call came, and they started in to call the first number—687,000. They went up the line, beginning at No. 258, the first number drawn, and they found under the law drafted men with dependents might be exempt. Are you opposed to that? They found the law provided that men engaged in agricultural enterprises in the United States should be exempt. Are you opposed to that? It provided further that students, doctors of divinity, ministers, and other classes should be exempt, and so they went up the line searching for men that properly fell in class 1, as provided in this bill, and we got the first 687,000.

Mistakes were made, men were put into the service that should have been exempt, others were exempted that ought to be put in the service, but we know that it is utterly impossible for boards to perform this duty without making some mistakes. They did make some mistakes, but every man on the Committee on Military Affairs, including the gentleman from Nebraska, is estopped from making complaints of the boards, for we insisted that the boards should be composed of men living in the various communities in which the men were to be selected, in order that they might know who were best fitted to go into the Army and the men that must be left out and the men who were necessary to agriculture and industry.

They selected 687,000 on the quota based on population. It took in women, aliens, and everybody, and did injustice to a great many communities. That would be fair if everybody composing the population was capable of being a soldier; but they are not.

The amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska, which bases it on the registrants rather than on the men in class 1, is equally unfair, for in the registration we have the aliens, cripples, halt, blind, deaf and dumb, and all the different classes that must be exempt.

What does this bill propose? It proposes that the quotas shall be based on the number of men in class 1 in each State in proportion to the number of men in class 1 in the United States. It proposes that of the men in any district, in any State, in class 1 the quota shall be in proportion to the number of men in class 1 in the State.

Who are in class 1? Why, the young men, the unmarried men, the married men supported by their wives—they and a few other classes not necessary to carry on the business of the country at home. Is there a man in this House who would say he would not stand for that proposition, but would prefer to enter into class 2 and class 3 and take therefrom the man from the cottage, leaving his wife and children behind; to take the man from the plow, who ought to be left at the plow; and take the man from the factory, whose services are needed? Surely you would not; and yet the gentleman from Nebraska impugns practically the motives of the Judge Advocate General of the United States, a man whose heart, I believe, beats with patriotic fervor every moment in the day. He impugns the motives of the boards in his own State and in the State of every other man in this House—that they have corrupted themselves, that they have debauched the office to which they have been appointed, by exempting men from class 1 and putting others in class 1 that should not be there.

Gentlemen of this House, if there is any complaint to be made, it is not of the law but it is of the men who live in our own communities who administer the law. This amendment proposed by the War Department, passed in the Senate on March 1 and pending here ever since, will give the United States Government an army composed of men capable of serving the country and one which will do the least injury and disturb least the agricultural interests of the country.

Now, I have not time to discuss the bill and I wish I had. I want to say this, If there is any man who has a controlling feeling for his district in which he resides, for the State from which he comes, greater than his love for this great land in which we live, then vote for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska.

I want to mention one thing more before I leave it. That is, in relation to the volunteers. Gentlemen, we got credit for the volunteers in the first draft. The most of the men enlisted since that time and since the mobilization of the National Guard are men who are between the ages of 21 and 31, who felt they would rather enlist than be drafted. They were all properly in class 1. Therefore we got credit for them. The only ones we will not get credit for are those below 21 and above the age of 31. When we get into the discussion of the resolution under the five-minute rule, I perhaps will have a little more time; but I simply want to say this to you: The great State of Illinois, which I have the honor in part to represent, furnished its quota of volunteers, and furnished more men for the Marines than any State in the Union. It was second or third in the Navy, and went far beyond its quota in the Army of the United States, but I have not even taken the interest to look to see how this resolution will affect my congressional district, and why? Because, notwithstanding I love that old spot—I was born there, it is my home, I am proud of the history of my native State—I feel this way about it: If the thirteenth congressional district of Illinois has any young men in it who fall within class 1 under this resolution, and some county in Nebraska has not as many men in class 1 as Illinois, I want those Illinois boys taken to go into this army before I invade the district of my friend from Nebraska and take the married men and those men who are needed in Nebraska. [Applause.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Just one moment. We must not forget that this is not a battle of Nebraska; this is not a battle of Illinois; but is a battle of the Nation, and it is a most terrific one. I want to say in conclusion that when the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] talks about the army of ten million, he has not anything on me. I am for whatever sized army is necessary, and I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that when the bill was up for consideration in the House to provide an army of 1,000,000 men I did not hear him move to amend it to make it 10,000,000 men or 5,000,000 men. If you want to waste your time talking about getting a fellow over here who ought not to go, or a man over there who ought not to go, then vote against this bill, turn down the War Department, turn down your administration, and go back to your districts and tell your people that you did the best you could to keep them out of the war.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman just stated that if we wanted to vote to turn down the administration or the War Department to vote against this resolution. I want to ask the gentleman if the Secretary of War in the hearings did not state specifically several times the opinion that credit should be allowed for volunteers?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is true.

Mr. WISE. What does the gentleman mean when he says that we would turn down the War Department if we vote against the resolution? To whom does he refer? The Secretary of War said that this bill ought to be amended.

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not help but think of the Secretary of War as I do of my friend, as a civilian in responsible position, for whom I have a good deal of respect; but I prefer to take the word of a man who is a real soldier on a matter of this kind. I want to say one other thing, and that is that the Judge Advocate General said, and I know my friend believes it, that it would be an absolute impossibility to administer that provision of the law.

Mr. WISE. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. In reply to that, I will state exactly what was said, and all he did say. The only reason he gave for not wanting to allow credit is because he was trying to relieve himself of an administrative difficulty; because of the trouble that it would put the department to to get the names of the people who volunteered and give credit; and that is the only reason he gave, and that is his language.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman think that it is a practical impossibility?

Mr. WISE. I do not.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And I want to say, in regard to the comment of the gentleman in respect to the married boys in Nebraska, that the gentleman, of course, is aware that nobody knows how many married men are in class 1. Every married man between the ages of 21 and 30 who did not claim exemption is in that class, and we know that 60 per cent of the men did not claim exemption. We also know that 262,000 of those who failed to respond, the delinquents, in the last draft are now in class 1; and figuring there will be as many more delinquents in this call, we would have 500,000; and no one knows at all how many of them are married, but we do know the counted population.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say in reply that, viewing the subject from my standpoint, I would take those out of class 1 who ought not to be there and put them where they belong.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman would not turn down the War Department, would he?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, the speech to which we have just listened did not discuss the joint resolution before the House, and therefore I shall read it:

Resolved, etc., That if under any regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," are placed in classes for the purpose of determining their relative liability for military service, no provision of said act shall prevent the President from calling for immediate military service under regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President all or part of the persons in any class or classes, except those exempt from draft under the provisions of said act, in proportion to the total number of persons placed in such class or classes in the various subdivisions of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia designated by the President under the terms of said act or from calling into immediate military service persons classed as skilled experts in industry or agriculture, however classified or wherever residing.

This proposed amendment to the draft law subjects to the arbitrary control of the military authorities all of the men in the United States between the ages of 21 and 30, inclusive, who are not in the military service, excepting only those who are unconditionally exempted from the draft by the provisions of the act of May 18, 1917.

Under section 2 of the aforesaid act it is provided:

Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens or male persons not alien enemies who have declared their intention to become citizens, between the ages of 21 and 30 years, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act.

It is not my purpose to press upon the attention of the House any considerations in opposition to the act of May 18, 1917; my views upon that legislation were fully expressed at the time of the passage of the act, and while I have seen no reason to change the opinion then expressed this House, by a very large majority, indicated by a vote of its Members a different opinion than that entertained by me, and I have no disposition to renew the arguments which I then made. I know of but one thing in connection with the administration of the conscription law which won the universal approval of good citizens throughout the country, and this was the manifest fairness and impartiality with which the drawing by lots whereby the order in which the men registered should be called for military service was fixed. This was done under a regulation authorized by the law and carried out by the War Department in a manner that won universal approval throughout the country, and I have never heard a criticism of the justice and fairness by which the order in which these 9,600,000 men should be called into the military service was fixed and determined.

This proposed joint resolution repeals and revokes all the proceedings by which the order in which the men should be called into the military service was determined, save and except those already in the military service, and authorizes the military authorities by regulations "heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President" to determine the order in which the remaining men shall be called into the military service.

The elaborate classification set forth in the majority report is important and instructive only in so far as it illustrates the possibilities of reclassifying the men in any way the military authorities may hereafter decide will be most convenient and expedient.

After the enactment of the draft law appeals were made throughout the country by many governors and other inferior officers to the people of the States and the several subdivisions urging them to enlist in the Regular Army or National Guard and thus relieve their States and localities from the obligation of furnishing men under the draft law. These appeals were unquestionably made in good faith, and thousands of voluntary enlistments were made in response to these appeals. This joint resolution repeals so much of the draft law as requires credit to be given to the different States and subdivisions for voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army or National Guard since April 1, 1917, and of members of the National Guard who had been called into the service of the United States prior to April 1, 1917, as provided in the act. It is sought to justify this legislation by calling attention to the injustice imposed by the administration of the draft law, whereby localities having a large alien population were required to furnish citizens for the Army where the alien claimed exemption upon that ground. The injustice resulting from the administration of the law to the several communities having a large alien population grew out of the manner in which the law was administered rather than out of the provisions of the law itself. The law required that quotas be apportioned to the several States and subdivisions thereof in proportion to their population, and in determining population the War Department divided the total registration on June 5, 1917, by the total estimated population, including aliens, and the quotient, 9.32 per cent, was assumed to represent the proportion which the registrants in each geographical unit represented of the total population thereof, and then to determine, for the purposes of the draft, the population of each county or division, the total registration in each geographical unit was divided by 9.32 per cent, and the quotient was accepted as the correct population of that county or division. It is obvious that this would result in a gross discrimination against all industrial localities which had a large proportion of men between the ages of 21 and 30, inclusive. For example, the city of Cleveland, which by the census of 1910 had a population of 560,663, was given an estimated population for the purpose of determining its quota under the draft of 1,125,440, while the city of Cincinnati, which by the census of 1910 had a population of 363,591, was given a population, for the purpose of the draft, computed from the registration of those between the ages of 21 and 30, inclusive, of 436,352. The city of Akron, which by the census of 1910 had a population of 69,067, was by the method of computation above referred to given a population for the purpose of this draft of 338,348. The only just rule for apportioning the allotment to the several States and subdivisions is to base the apportionment of each locality upon the men actually liable for military service plus the aliens who waive their exemption from liability for such service.

With the information in possession of the War Department provided by the answers to interrogatories designated "the questionaire," there is no longer any reason or excuse for estimating the population or the number of men in each locality who are liable for military service under the law, including the aliens who have waived their claim for exemption on the ground of alienage.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The population was not determined by the Provost Marshal General.

Mr. GORDON. It was determined by the Census Bureau under a rule prescribed by the Provost Marshal.

Mr. KAHN. The rule, as I understand it, was based upon the proposition that they took the census of 1910 and then made an allowance of so many people to the family and multiplied it by that figure.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is mistaken. It had no reference to the census of 1910. They took the total registration of June 5, 1917, and divided that by the total estimated population in continental United States on that date. The quotient was 9.32 per cent; and in order to determine the population for the purposes of the draft in a particular subdivision thereof they divided the registration by 9.32 per cent.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Multiplied it.

Mr. GORDON. No; not multiplied—divided.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is the population of Akron, Ohio?

Mr. GORDON. I have given the population of 1910. It is a city that has grown quite rapidly, but I never heard a claim of over 100,000 or 150,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A hundred and fifty thousand?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I will.

Mr. KREIDER. Do I understand the gentleman that the population was based on the registration?

Mr. GORDON. Yes; it was determined by a method of computation based upon the registration.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It was not based upon that, but attempted to be estimated from that.

Mr. GORDON. It was estimated from that. Of course it assumed every person registered had a family of four or five—represented a family of four or five, to be exact.

An amendment will be offered to the joint resolution by Gov. SHALLENBERGER fixing the quotas of the various subdivisions in accordance with the rule above stated and crediting each State and subdivision with all voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army and National Guard, as provided in the act of May 18, 1917, and also the men already called under the draft. This will correct every past injustice done to communities with large alien populations in the administration of the law and answer every useful and proper purpose subserved by placing aliens who claim exemption on that ground in a deferred class, as proposed by the majority report. If the power to reclassify is retained in the joint resolution, the effect of the proposed classification is purely speculative, because it may be abolished at will and a new system adopted.

The temptation of local boards to place their registrants in deferred classes and thus relieve their communities of their fair share of the burden of military service is the most patent objection proposed in the majority report, and the only answer to this is that arbitrary power is conferred upon the military authorities to alter, reform, or abolish this classification at will and create a new one, and this is equivalent to subjecting to the absolute control of the military authorities the bodies of these 9,659,382 men who are not unconditionally exempt from military service under the law or are already in the military service. This power is admitted in the closing paragraph of the majority report, where it is contended that persons improperly placed in deferred classes may be called into the service as "skilled experts" regardless of the class in which they may be placed. Every man of common sense knows that any man in the country who may fairly be said to possess special skill in industry or agriculture, and whose special services would be of real value, would promptly respond to a request of the President to render such service, whether he is liable to the draft or not, and the disposition of local boards to grant deferred classification in response to the importunities of registrants and their friends regardless of the interests of the public at large or the military service is too obvious to require extended comment.

The act of May 18, 1917, provides that it is based upon the liability to military service of all citizens between 21 and 30 years, both inclusive, and provides for certain absolute exemptions which have been recently enlarged by the inclusion therein of alien declarants from neutral countries. The law authorizes the President to exempt from military service "persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to the maintenance of the Military Establishment, or the effective operation of the military forces, or the maintenance of national interest during the emergency." The majority of the committee now proposes this amendment "to protect each and every community of the country against extreme hardship" by taking all of its young men who are not placed in deferred classes and relieve those communities who place their registrants in such deferred classes. This joint resolution proposes to increase the burden upon those communities in which the young men do not ask to be placed in deferred classes and to allow no credit to the counties and subdivisions which have furnished large contingents of volunteers for the Regular Army and National Guard. It adopts and legalizes every criticism made in the debate last year against the volunteer system, and yet deprives these young men of the credit, honor, and glory of making a voluntary gift of their services and lives to their country. It will not add one man to the available military resources of the Government; it repudiates and repeals the order fixed by the drawing last year and discriminates against the men already drafted into the service and in favor of those who happened to be drawn a little lower down in the list. This joint resolution is a paradox and an inconsistency. If the draft law should be administered under it with all the rigor authorized, it can be made an instrument of oppression and favoritism by the military authorities. On the other hand, if, in its administration, men who request it be placed in the deferred classes, it is a return to the volunteer system, and "the stone which the builders rejected will have become the head of the corner."

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Ohio, before he takes his seat, allow me to call his attention to the hearings as to what Gen. Crowder said about the different proportion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORDON. I can save the gentleman that trouble. I have here a report of the Census Bureau which sets it out, and I have copied in my remarks the language of that report. There can be no mistake or misunderstanding about it whatever.

Mr. KAHN. The hearings show that Gen. Crowder said they made no suggestion to the Census Bureau about those figures.

Mr. GORDON. Well, I do not think that is important or material whether it is an error committed by one or the other; it was an error just the same and ought to be corrected.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, all this camouflage here about the great injury and injustice that is going to be worked on somebody because the War Department is endeavoring to correct the former evils of the draft law and put in the fighting men necessary to win this war should not be countenanced by this House. Over across the ocean now, as brought by the electric current and printed in the morning papers, American soldiers are on the battle front doing honor to themselves and this glorious Republic. Think of it, 40 miles of territory formerly occupied by the allies has since the 21st day of March up to the 11th day of April, including important towns, been captured by the Kaiser's hords. Great dangers confront not only the civilization of our allies but of the American Republic itself. Our institutions, our religion, our language, our Government, our civilization, our homes, and the virtue of our womanhood are now at stake, and yet we hear men talking about the espionage bill ought not to pass. Thank heaven, I heard it read here a moment ago, that the Senate had at last passed the espionage bill, which this House had passed some time ago. Some people during this awful war want free speech, want to allow a spy to be in every neighborhood of this country when our armies are in jeopardy over yonder. My friends, if I had my way, as soon as a spy was convicted I would send him to the graveyard at once. [Applause.] Free speech! With several millions of alien enemies in this country now when we are engaged in the stress of a holy and just war, and the civilization of the American Republic is hanging in the balance, some people talk about allowing anarchists, pro-Germans, and bolsheviki to stand on the street corners and cuss this Government of the United States when we are engaged in a great war. Of course, the bolsheviki, the pro-German, the anarchist, all anti-Americans, desire free speech. Free speech turned Russia over to the Kaiser. That type of free speech might turn America over to the war lords of Germany. Free press! All of us know we have a free press in time of peace, and we will have it as soon as this war is over, but every infernal newspaper in this country which publishes articles against the interests of this Government should be suppressed right now.

These pro-Germans and their henchmen, who are talking with traitors' hearts, endeavoring to pour the poison of disloyalty into the ears of the people, and, while doing this, outwardly pretending to be patriotic, should be arrested and put in jail or sent into the Army to fight for our liberties. [Applause.] Why should we not pass this pending military measure that the Senate passed 1 month and 11 days ago? My good friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], says that he wants an army of 10,000,000 men. We can not now get an army of that strength ready and trained over across the seas. If he wants an army of 10,000,000 men, why does he object to this proposition? The President of the United States said on the 5th day of June, 1917, 10,000,000 Americans between 21 and 31 years of age volunteered en masse to serve their country. We are going to bring out a bill from our committee in a few days that will volunteer 1,000,000 more who have reached the age of 21 since that day, and 1,000,000 consecutively each year thereafter. My good friend from Nebraska knows that under this bill we have here now we take, all the way through from California to Maine and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canadian line, every man between 21 and 31 years of age in class 1, regardless of what State he is in, providing, my friends, that man has no dependent family on him; providing that man may have a wife and children but he does not support his family, but his family supports him; providing that man is a single man supporting no dependent mother nor orphan sisters; the idler, the man around who does nothing for the country; the man who is unessential to industry; the man who does not produce food for the support of somebody. Those are the men who are going to be taken in class 1 all over this Republic, and who objects to that? Do not you think that a man who has no encumbrance upon him, as old Cæsar said, who has no "impedimenta" upon him, is the man who should be first called upon to volunteer under this law and go fight for the liberty and the civilization of the country? I do not want to go into the humble home and take the poor citizen, the husband who has a wife and four or five little children around his hearthstone, for whom he must go out and labor and support, but I want to take the single man; I want to take the married man who is too trifling to support a wife and children. [Applause.]

I want to take the man who allows his wife to work in a factory or teach school and support him in idleness. I want to take the class of parasites, my friends, who are not in the productive activities of this Republic, and the War Department has given you a bill which will do this thing. After we take them we may need more men. When we need them, we are going in and take the others of classes 2, 3, 4, and 5. We will take them all, if it becomes necessary, in order to win this war and save our Nation.

I want to say to my good friend from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] that having only class 1 this bill provides that we take the ones which can be best spared, which will be more than a million men a year, and that is all that we can get over to Europe with the shipping facilities which we now have in sight. If we raise an army of 10,000,000, what good could the gentleman's amendment accomplish, as it is plain all of the men in all the five classes would be drafted?

And I believe, like he does, that this war must be won by the man with the rifle and a bayonet on the end of it. You can not win this war with these aid societies and automobile drivers. You have got to win this war by men in uniform, with bravery in their hearts, who have got the bullets in their rifles, marching over the top and shooting the devil out of the Germans. [Applause.] That is the man who is going to win this war. Of course we need such side issues as aeroplanes, and such as that, but you have got to come down to the practical sense which has recently been demonstrated on the battle fields of Europe.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not the time.

On the western line, when old Von Hindenberg set that army of trained Dutchmen and Hungarians and Austrians marching across with rifled bayonets in their hands, he drove back the bravest army the world ever saw. You do not believe that these English and French soldiers fell back because they were cowardly. Artillery did not drive them back. It was the Dutchmen with rifles and bayonets on them.

My friend from Nebraska said that we can not adopt this bill which the War Department has put over here and raise the men. Do you believe that Gen. Crowder would be such a blatant fool as to want to reduce the capacity of the Government to raise an army?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not the time.

Do you believe, my friends, that any one of the war officials would want to get less soldiers? Why, this bill is to get more soldiers. This bill puts it up to this Congress to get more soldiers who can be most easily spared from the plow and other industries. Here we are engaged in this desperate conflict, on the plains of Picardy, around Toul, Arras, Montdidier, and Amiens, and some fear from this discussion one State might be called upon to furnish a few more over its quota. Nonsense. This is the Nation's war. It is not the war of any particular State.

The men are in this Republic. This pending measure reported by our committee will draft the ones who ought to go first. We can raise an army of many millions, beyond a question, and at the same time we will develop the list of activities and industries and everything that will keep this country with all its industries humming, with all the fields growing grain, with all the meadows growing live stock, with the war-munition activities in full operation, and at the same time have the men in camps and training, on the seas and on the battle front yonder in Europe, killing Germans. You can not be mealy-mouthed and talk in Sunday-school language about not fighting in this war. This is a war, and a hell of a war. [Laughter.] And we may just as well wake up to it, and let our people back home know it. No man now should come up and talk about not wanting to fight. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky give me two or three minutes more?

Mr. FIELDS. I am sorry, but my time is all taken.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL.

The SPEAKER. This morning when we had up the squabble about Mr. Creel, things got mixed up a little. In the first place, the clerks, although there were three of them doing the counting, got the count wrong. Anyhow, the vote was announced in such a way that it gave one majority against the motion to table. It turns out they made a mistake of one; and they went out and corrected it. If it had been counted as it ought to have been, there would have been one majority for tabling. At the same time the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FULLER], who had answered "Present" when the roll was being called, asked to change his vote to "nay." The Chair, under the impression that he was one of these gentlemen who come in here after everything is over and ask to be recorded as "present," said that he could not vote. The Chair has examined the authorities thoroughly, and finds that he is entitled to vote, and the Chair ordered the Clerk to record the vote as "nay." And, by a curious turn, that restores it to exactly the way the vote was announced to start with. The only reason the Chair did not let him vote at last was because the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] impinged, and we had a sort of interlocutory performance, and by that time the Chair had forgotten it. It seems to the Chair that the Committee on Rules ought to take those propositions and fix a rule that is as clear as day on the subject. As I stated this morning, the only reason the Chair permits these gentlemen to come in here and vote "present" after the roll call is over is because, in ascertaining if a quorum is present, he has a perfect right to count them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the vote was being taken on the demand for the yeas and nays, and not on the question of no quorum being present.

The SPEAKER. The only reason for which the Chair can count a gentleman who is sitting in his seat and does not respond is in order to make a quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Even if they are present, after their names are called twice they are not entitled to be recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER. I know; but since they gave the Speaker the power to count those present and not voting, it seems ridiculous not to let them answer "present."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a very clear distinction between the roll call and the demand for the yeas and nays coming under the rule and a roll call when the point of no quorum is made.

The SPEAKER. I think that is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And I really think the rules are clear upon that. The Speaker has the right, of course, to count only in the event that the point of no quorum is made.

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Speaker never can tell when the roll is called that there is a quorum until the vote is announced.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Speaker does not have to determine that. The Speaker always determines that in advance; that is, upon the point of no quorum being made.

The SPEAKER. That is right. The way the vote was first reported by the Clerk was—yeas 165, nays 165, present 10. The way they got it when they went out and carefully went over it was—yeas 165, nays 164, present 10, and the Fuller vote restored it to where it started.

LIABILITY TO MILITARY SERVICE OF CERTAIN REGISTERED PERSONS.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this is a very happy occasion. There seems to be no difference of opinion between the majority and the minority except as to the best way to raise an army large enough to whip the Kaiser.

I deem this resolution in its present form unjust to my district, unjust to the State of Iowa, and unjust to all those other great States that have responded so nobly to the call to arms. In its present form it practically repeals the original conscription law, under which we have already built up a great Army. It wipes out the fundamental principles of many of the important features of this law and it takes away from the various counties and States rights and privileges already granted them and under which they have been doing their utmost to provide an army for the Nation.

When the conscription plan was agreed upon, it met with little opposition either in the committee or in the House. Both those who were for volunteers first and conscription afterwards and those who wanted only conscription, agreed absolutely on the provisions of the conscription law as it is now, and it was so placed in the bill when reported to the House nearly one year ago. There were some of us at that time who thought that a volunteer army should have preceded conscription—who believed that an army of older, hardened fighters, such as Theodore Roosevelt, would have collected, should have been given an opportunity to go first. We thought they could have been put on the battle line quicker and would have created greater enthusiasm. However, in the wisdom of this Congress this plan was rejected, and since it was enacted into law the conscription act has received the hearty support of every loyal citizen in this country. It has been administered with excellent justice, and I congratulate the President of the United States and the Secretary of War upon their equitable plan of selecting those who were to be our first National Army fighters.

The conscription bill was a promise to the American people that any county or State should be given credit for the men within their confines who enlisted in the Regular Army or the National Guard. In some counties and in some States the enthusiasm for this war was much greater than in others and, as a result, a much larger number of men voluntarily enlisted. These men were anxious to fight, they were able to arrange home ties so they could go at once, and they went. I congratulate the War Department that the promise in this conscription bill has so far scrupulously been kept and that each county and each State has been given credit for that advance guard that preceded the assembling of our National Army. In providing a fighting force for the United States, most of the counties and most of the States have acted in good faith on this promise that was made, and it seems to me that if we pass this resolution in its present form we are breaking faith with the people and in so doing we will work a great hardship upon those communities that have responded so loyally to the original conscription plan. In many instances communities will be forced to send several times the number of men to camp when the next draft comes that they would have had to send if those who went first had not voluntarily given their services to their country.

The second congressional district of Iowa patriotically furnished to this Nation 10 organized units of National Guardsmen and many times its quota of Regular Army enlistments. The State of Iowa enlisted four times its quota in the Regular Army and the National Guard. We have received credit already for these enlistments. You now propose in this resolution to take those credits away and compel us to furnish, in addition to our regular future men liable for military service, the number of men that we have already been given credit for as going out in the Regular Army or National Guard as volunteers. This makes an "Indian giver" out of your Government.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I am interested in that remarkable statement that the gentleman is making. How can we recall credits which the Government has already conferred by way of credit for these voluntary enlistments?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am very glad the gentleman asked that question. That is one point that is hardly understood. It is a hard one to understand. But it is true that you take back what you have already given. I called the attention of the Secretary of War to this and he did not deny it, and I am not going to try to debate it in my own words; but I am going to tell you what the Secretary of War said on that very point, because he caught the idea at once and he was fair enough to admit the truth of it, and he put it in better words than I can. I read from the hearing:

Mr. HULL. In regard to changing the quota, is it not true, Mr. Secretary, that if you change the quota, to a certain extent the law becomes retroactive? For instance, in our State there are certain counties which, owing to the enlistments in the National Guard, for which they are given credit, had enough men in the Army so that there were no men taken in the draft at all. They have a larger proportion of people in class 1 than would have been left if they had not had those enlistments in the National Guard. If you take away those credits they would go right back and take those boys. Is that not true?

Mr. GORDON. Is there not an error in your statement that there is a larger quota in class 1 because a larger proportion enlisted?

Secretary BAKER. The persons who enlisted must have been wholly outside of the draft age or they would have been originally in class 1.

Mr. GORDON. But if everybody in the draft age had enlisted in the National Guard I do not see how you can say it would have that effect.

Secretary BAKER. It would depend upon whether your enlistment in the National Guard meant the enlistment of men who would have otherwise been in class 1.

Mr. HULL. Usually they were not, and that leaves the men in class 1 in there.

Secretary BAKER. I am not sure of that; but I should think it would be practically true everywhere.

Mr. HULL. The point is this, that men in some communities enlisted in the National Guard and men in other communities did not. They have already received their credits.

The CHAIRMAN. They will not receive credit if this resolution is adopted. That part of the draft law will be repealed if this resolution passes; Gen. Crowder admits that.

Secretary BAKER. They have received credit, and there is no express repeal of that part of the law. But I think Mr. Hull is right; that in communities in which men beyond the draft age enlisted in any large numbers it will have the effect of increasing the size of class 1, and therefore increasing the quota basis. I do not know how large that will be.

Mr. GORDON. We passed a military bill which fixed the age for service between 21 and 31 years, inclusive. Because persons outside of that age are enlisted, would the same rule apply in crediting quotas?

Secretary BAKER. No; but what you did, Mr. GORDON, was this: You passed a law which fixed the draftable age from 21 to 30 years, and you fixed the National Guard age from 18 to 40 years, and then provided that to the extent that persons from a State volunteered in either the Regular Army or the National Guard that should be credited on its quota.

Let us take Ohio, for example. Suppose 10,000 persons in Ohio between the ages of 30 and 40 years volunteered in the National Guard. When we came to the draft in Ohio, we credited Ohio with 10,000, and that exonerated an equivalent number of persons who would have been between 21 and 30 years if we had relied solely upon the draft in that State.

When the second draft comes, the number of Ohio's quota will depend not upon those who have previously gone into the military service, but upon the total number of persons in class 1 in the State; and then all the persons previously exonerated because somebody else volunteered, being in class 1, become a part of the basis upon which the assessment of that State is based, and so the limitations of that State are increased.

Mr. GORDON. Could not an amendment be included in this resolution that would cure that?

Secretary BAKER. The original law gave credit.

Mr. KAHN. The law gave credit for those who had volunteered.

Secretary BAKER. Why would you not accomplish the whole purpose if you say that the basis shall be the number in class 1, but there shall be credited to that—use the language of the old law, giving credit for the number in class 1?

Does the gentleman understand?

Mr. SLOAN. I see your drift.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then Secretary Baker asserted that this bill ought to be amended, saying:

We all agree that if this rule in the joint resolution had been proposed from the beginning it would have been a wiser rule. The only question now is whether, in view of the fact that we have already started on the other, we can fairly change it now.

Now, that is the contention of myself, at least, and I think most of the minority Members on this bill contend that it is unfair to change this plan after you have started to form an army under the other plan. Right here I want to call your attention to the following letter which I received from the governor of Iowa:

COMMONWEALTH OF IOWA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Des Moines, April 4, 1918.

Hon. HARRY E. HULL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have done everything possible from this end of the line in an effort to convince the War Department that the proposed plan of apportionment will be inexcusably unfair to Iowa.

I know that you will not cease in your endeavor to secure a square deal for this State, and trust you will be able to get the other members of the Iowa delegation to view the matter in the right light.

With sincere personal regards, I am,

Cordially, yours, W. L. HARDING.

I understand also that the President of the United States has made a statement to the effect that, inasmuch as this conscription plan was drawn and operated with the promise that counties and States should be given credit for volunteer men, there was grave doubt that it should be changed at the present time.

Let me call your attention to another grave objection to this proposed legislation. Heretofore our boards of registration were for this one purpose only, but this resolution practically makes exemption boards of them. They were never intended as such; they were not notified that they were to act in this capacity. Is it right to hold them responsible for acts that they did not know they were to perform? And the result shows that nearly every board has placed a different interpretation upon the law, and that exemptions have varied accordingly.

Another grave defect in this resolution, in my opinion, is the fact that it abolishes county and State quotas; in other words, it does not equally distribute the burden of this war. Counties and States who have interpreted the conscription law strictly, and thereby placed large numbers of their men in class 1, will be penalized under this provision. Under this law the State which has been lax in providing sufficient men will shift the burden to the State which has been diligent in so doing. Why should Iowa provide men to make up Connecticut's quota, or vice versa? Because Massachusetts exempted a large number of men and Michigan, perchance, did not, why should Michigan men go into Massachusetts camps to make up its quota? Because some counties in my district held every man available, why should they necessarily send men to make up some other county's quota? That is what this resolution provides. It is a sad feature that complete statistics of the number of men in each State placed in class 1 and the percentage in respect to the total registration are not available. In fact, that is one objection to the passage of this resolution at this time. It seems to me that we should not pass a matter of this importance until we have all the information we could secure. Admittedly, we are sadly lacking in this instance. Practically no States are complete, and I am satisfied that not 50 Members of this House know the figures from their own district.

However, I can give you some figures from my own State showing the enormous discrepancy in the percentage of registrants who were placed in class 1. For instance, in the second district of Iowa 13,294 registered, and of these 4,209 were placed in class 1, 31 per cent of the entire registration. In the eighth district of Iowa 14,398 men registered, and only 2,959 were placed in class 1, just 20 per cent. In other words, the eighth district of Iowa had 1,104 more registrants than the second district, while the second district placed 1,250 more men in class 1. Under the original conscription law the eighth district would be compelled to furnish more men than the second, but under the proposed law, when the eighth district had exhausted its supply of men in class 1 the War Department would have the authority to make up its quota from the men in class 1 in the second district. I think you can readily understand the injustice of this.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. What has the gentleman got to say as to the practical difficulties which Gen. Crowder refers to in making allowances for voluntary enlistment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There has been no difficulty at all.

Mr. HUSTED. As I understand it, Gen. Crowder says there has been great practical difficulty in making these allowances, and that is the reason for the legislation.

Mr. SLOAN. They have men there who keep track of it, and I understand they have done it correctly.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I should like to ask the gentleman if a record is not kept in the War Department of every man who enlists or volunteers, so that they know exactly where he is?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Why, certainly. Now, let me call your attention to a discrepancy in counties: Muscatine County, in my district, registered 2,671 men, and of these 1,002 were placed in class 1—38 per cent of the total; Louisa County, which adjoins Muscatine County, registered 1,025 and placed only 230 in class 1—22 per cent. Under the proposed resolution Muscatine could be made to fill out Louisa County. I deem this unfair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has any effort been made, or is any effort being made, to bring the figures up to an equality in the counties where they have been unequal?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand there have been warnings sent out, but I call the attention of the gentleman to this fact, that after a man has been once placed in one of these classes it is a very hard thing to get him placed elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is possible, however, to bring a man up out of class 2 into class 1, is it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I presume that it is possible, but I do not know where the law is for doing that.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say for the information of the gentleman that the Provost Marshal General informs me that in every case where, on the face of the return, it appears that there has been favoritism, the board has been ordered to reclassify.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, I understand that. That has all been gone over. The trouble is that the statement put out by Gen. Crowder in to-day's paper is camouflage pure and simple.

Mr. ROGERS. Has the gentleman any information as to whether there has been a tabulation by States?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have one or two States here. If the gentleman will let me go along I will tell him about that.

Mr. ROGERS. A tabulation showing the classification into the different classes?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. Clinton, a city of the second district, placed over 35 per cent of her registered men in class 1; Cedar Rapids, in the fifth district, placed only 23 per cent of her registered men in class 1. If the same rule had been followed in Cedar Rapids as was followed in Clinton there should have been 482 more men from Cedar Rapids. Is it a square deal to ask Clinton to make up what Cedar Rapids has exempted through a different interpretation of the rule? Waterloo, a rival town and in every way similarly situated, has placed 42 per cent; or, in other words, Cedar Rapids, with 4,000 registered, placed only 958 in class 1, while Waterloo, about 50 miles northwest of Cedar Rapids, placed 1,554 out of 3,715 registered, or nearly twice as many men are to be called from Waterloo as from Cedar Rapids, although Cedar Rapids apparently is a larger town. Can anyone explain why Waterloo should be forced to help Cedar Rapids make up her deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has referred to Cedar Rapids as having a comparatively small number in class 1. I will say to the gentleman that there is a little college in Cedar Rapids that sent 160 men, every man of them a volunteer, and every one of whom would have been in class 1. Instead of that they are placed in class 5. The young men of Cedar Rapids enlisted in such numbers that, of course, it reduced the number in class 1. So when the call came not a man was drawn from Cedar Rapids, because the patriotism of that town was such that her boys had enlisted and had not waited for the draft. That is the reason.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say for Cedar Rapids that I know the people of that town. I lived there myself. I was raised there, and I know the people, and they would feel humiliated at the idea of having Waterloo send any men to war in the place of men that Cedar Rapids ought to furnish.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say that Cedar Rapids would furnish her quota, but the trouble comes from the false interpretation of the rule and the difficulty that it is going to create.

Hardin County, in the third congressional district of Iowa, out of 623 registered placed 547 in class 1, or 87 per cent. Wayne County, in the eighth congressional district of Iowa, a very similar county, south of Hardin, out of 1,196 registered placed 180 in class 1, only 15 per cent. Could anyone ever convince the Hardin County farmers that they were treated fairly when, after furnishing all this fighting force, they were compelled to make up a deficiency in Wayne County?

Let me give you another illustration showing a State discrepancy. According to Gen. Crowder—figures not complete—South Dakota registered 54,103 men; of these 20,423 were placed in class 1—43 per cent. Rhode Island registered 51,648; of these 13,216 were placed in class 1—25 per cent. Under the proposed resolution when Rhode Island had exhausted the men placed in class 1 the men in class 1 in South Dakota would be taken to make up Rhode Island's allotment.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have but two minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. The explanation is that the men of Rhode Island and the East have gone into the Navy, and they will perhaps go to class 5.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have heard a much better explanation than the gentleman gives, and that is that the East took the Army contracts, and they filled their munition factories with their young men, and they want to pass this law in order to exempt them. That is the real truth of the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. SIEGEL. I have the figures right here.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Figures prove nothing in this case. I have no time to yield further. I decline to yield. Let me make another State comparison. According to the figures furnished by Gen. Crowder, Utah, with 40,040 registered, placed 8,873 in class 1, or 22 per cent. Wyoming, with 21,211 registered, placed 8,546 in class 1, or 40 per cent. Is there any Member of the House of Representatives who can explain why Utah, nearly twice as large, should furnish only as many men as Wyoming? I presume the answer to this will be that Gen. Crowder can be depended upon to see that these communities do their duty; but why should this Congress repeal a good law in order that Gen. Crowder can reenact it by rules and regulations?

This Nation must have a great army; anywhere from five to eight million men must stand ready at our call. If you will let the conscription law alone and not try to tinker it, this law will produce an army of 4,000,000 men from those now registered. This, with the number of young men who will come into class 1 when the boys arriving at the age of 21 years are enrolled, and with the present enlisted Army, will make a grand total of over 6,000,000 men. To do this, however, you must ask every community to furnish every man that should have been placed in class 1.

In looking over the figures that we have already received we find that some States have placed 40 per cent of their men in class 1; any number of counties have done the same thing. Surely with these figures we can safely say that 40 per cent of those registered in the entire country should be held liable for military service.

We should all stand loyally behind the President, Commander in Chief of the Army—give him the best laws that we can in order to raise money and men. It is my best judgment that it is a better plan to follow the present law and expect every community to abide by it, than it is to let the idea get abroad that because the board has failed to place the men in class 1 that it should it has thereby avoided that community's liability for furnishing men to make up this army.

Iowa is practically a farming community, and any change in the law by which Iowa has to furnish more men than her share is to just that extent reducing the number of farmers. A good farmer is a skilled worker and should never be taken in order that any man in some other community working in a munition factory should be exempted as a more useful citizen than the Iowa farmer. Imperial Iowa asks no favors. She will furnish her share of money, much more than her share of food products—more than any other State—and is willing to furnish to the last drop of blood the number of men that she should in proportion to the population or those found liable for military service. All she asks is to be treated on the square, that the Government scrupulously keep its promises, and when Iowa has done her duty this Government hold rigidly to the line and say to any who hold back, "Look at grand old Iowa. Go thou and do likewise." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am impressed with the seriousness of the situation that confronts the country at this time. I am not concerned with the question whether this or that district provides more men for service for the country, when the country needs their service and needs it urgently.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It will be impossible for me to get through in 10 minutes, unless the gentleman can give me more time.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I am sorry that I can not give the gentleman the time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I represent a district of more than 300,000 people, and while the majority of my people in my opinion would have preferred the volunteer to the draft system, there has never been a whimper from one of these 300,000 people. I have never had any communication or protest of any sort against the way the law was enforced, nor, although it has been discussed in the newspapers, has there been any complaint of the proposed law, the wisdom of which I believe in.

Of course, this suggested amendment to the draft law comes from the War Department. It deals exclusively with a military question, and we must assume that it is the matured, well-considered view of our military experts as to what is necessary to win the war as quickly and completely as we all hope to see it won.

That is the great task to which our hands are set, and those of us not trained in such matters should not reject the advice of military and naval experts on purely professional questions without being absolutely certain that our own contrary view is the right one. It is generally understood that this proposal originated with Gen. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General, a man whose judgment I greatly respect.

I was originally opposed to the conscription law, and I am not in love with it yet; but it is law, and as such I shall respect it and will do all I can to make it as effective as possible. It is a tool to be used in the prosecution of the war, and we should use it as intelligently as possible to put an end to the horrors of war and to try to save liberal government from the tyranny of militarism.

This resolution impresses me as an effort to justify the word "selective" as it has been used in connection with the draft. The selection should be intelligently done and not left to chance, as it is when a blindfolded boy, by taking a numbered disk from a box, says who shall serve. That process is fair as between the individuals whose numbers are in the box, but it is not intelligent.

Certainly it is better for society at large to take a man who has no wife or child or parent or other person dependent on his earnings than to take one with either of these responsibilities. It is a lot better to take a man who is an unskilled farm laborer than to take one who knows all about the cultivation of the soil and the planting and harvesting of crops at a time when all the world is clamoring for food.

Every man in the country between 21 and 31 years of age is liable to military service, and under the authority given the President by Congress may be called to service. Is not it better to first take those who by reason of their age and social relations can be taken with the least disturbance of the social order? And is not it right before the actual work of selection begins to quietly sit down and divide all availables into classes as the Provost Marshal General has done? It insures a better selection and expedites the work, and every day we are conjured by our allies and our own newspapers to hurry.

That this new plan departs from that first adopted is not of great importance. We learn by experience, or we should. There is nothing sacred about the original plan of taking registrants from the States and Territories on the basis of population as ascertained by the census of 1910.

Nor is the law as it stands entirely fair. As the report submitted by Mr. FIELDS says, some States, or communities, to use his own language, have decreased in population while others have increased. A moment's reflection will convince anyone that where that is the case the community that has lost population will be unfairly forced to send a disproportionate number of its young men to war, while the community that has increased its population will not contribute a fair quota to the Army. Aliens, unless they happen to be enemy aliens, will not be forced to leave the country, and under the law as it is to-day can not be put into our Army or Navy. Thus, communities that have an excessive alien population can go on with their ordinary industries, their opportunities to prosper being made secure by the sacrifices of Americans from other and less prosperous sections. This resolution will correct that situation, partially at least.

The fact that trained, experienced farmers and expert mechanical and industrial workers are placed in class 4 appeals to me as a wise provision of the proposed law.

There is an embarrassing shortage of both classes, and it is necessary to keep both employed in the particular sort of labor for which they are best suited if we are to keep our armies properly fed, clothed, and armed. A few days ago I read in a county weekly newspaper a story of the departure for camp of 42 drafted men, of whom 28 were farmers, and that in a county that is embarrassed by a labor shortage.

I am not impressed by the argument of the minority that the proposed change in the law will give the military authorities control of the bodies of 9,000,000 of our citizens. We will be fortunate if it does not control twice nine million men before the war is ended. To save its life the country can command the lives and fortunes of all our people. We may yet be forced to advance the age limit to 50 or more, as our powerful enemy has done, as Great Britain is doing, and as France, the only great Republic in Europe, has been compelled to do to preserve the liberties of her people.

Let the American people understand what is expected of them in the war, and they will respond freely, spontaneously, completely. I refuse to believe that there are more than a negligible number of people in the country, even of foreign birth, of Teutonic origin, if you please, who are not loyal to the American Republic.

Immigration from central Europe to our country has been relatively unimportant for 20 years. Those who came earlier are loyal as are their sons, who volunteered in large numbers, and who have, in the main, responded uncomplainingly to the draft. They are doing their duty in other respects, also.

The San Antonio Daily Express that reached me this morning contains three news items of unusual interest. Two are from Comal County, which was settled by a German colony in 1845, and one from my own county of Bexar, and all tell about the enthusiastic support of the liberty loan. And, by the way, these subscriptions were made on the 5th of April, the day before the loan was officially on the market. If there is any special distinction or reward of any sort, for being first in the country in the way of subscriptions I now formally file the claim of Comal County for that honor.

Let me read you these news items:

NEW BRAUNFELS, TEX., April 5.

All business houses were closed two hours this morning to give everyone an opportunity of attending a liberty-loan rally at the courthouse. An enthusiastic meeting was held; a number of local speakers, with convincing arguments, told of the need of every citizen doing his utmost to aid this oan and carry Comal County "over the top." Every preparation has been perfected for launching the great drive on the opening day.

A later telegram of the same date says:

NEW BRAUNFELS, TEX., April 5.

New Braunfels and Comal County have gone "over the top" in subscribing $125,000 to the third liberty loan. This amount was wired the Federal reserve bank to-night by two local banks, oversubscribing the county's quota by nearly $1,000.

Gov. Hobby has offered a silk flag to the first county subscribing over its quota. Comal County lays claim to the prize.

That subscription represents about $15 each for the population of the county.

Another encouraging fact reported in the same paper is that the Sons of Hermann, a benevolent and social organization, subscribed for $10,000 worth of the bonds, having placed the order with a Texas bank before the bonds were on the market.

I will print that item also, for it may help to calm the minds of some excited and unjustly suspicious people who forget that all the population of our country, except the native Indians and the descendants of Africans, are of European origin, and that names, whether English, French, Spanish, or Teutonic, only suggest origin. They forget Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, the preacher, patriot, and statesman, who was the first Speaker of this House, and his brother Peter, also preacher, patriot, and statesman, who served in the First, Third, and Sixth Congresses. Their names would bring them trouble now if they lived in some States.

Karnes County, in a district where crops have failed for two successive years on account of drought, oversubscribed its quota by 10 per cent on the 6th. It took no driving to make the people of Karnes do their duty.

Mr. Speaker, I submit these facts as an appeal for tolerance, justice, and union. Let us all pull together in facing a powerful and common enemy. Let us learn the lessons of the casualty lists where Teutonic names appear with English and French names. From my district young men who are descendants from these early German colonists in Texas have died on the field of battle fighting for the liberty typified in the American Republic. Some of them lie buried on the bleak seashore of Scotland or in the waters that wash those shores, victims of the submarines.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend—or for a cause. [Applause.]

SONS OF HERMANN BUY $10,000 WORTH LIBERTY BONDS; MAY BUY MORE IN SAN ANTONIO.

Alfred W. Rhode, secretary of the Hermann Sons' Home Association, of this city, has received a letter from the grand president of the order of the Sons of Hermann of Texas, Julius Schramm, of Granger, stating that he had just placed an order for $10,000 worth of the third issue of the liberty bonds with the Taylor National Bank. Mr. Rhode knew of the contemplated purchase by the grand lodge and wrote to the grand president with a view of having the order placed here in San Antonio.

He stated further in his letter that he would take a trip to San Antonio in the near future and may purchase another $10,000 of these bonds in San Antonio while here.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the difference between the resolution and the Shallenberger amendment does not involve the size of the Army. Neither resolution nor amendment adds a single soldier to the number now authorized. Nor does the Shallenberger amendment affect the classifications of the questionnaire, in so far as the classification pertains to the relative military duty in a community between the registrants thereof. To this extent the Shallenberger amendment carefully preserves the five classes. The radical difference between the two propositions in principle is that the Shallenberger amendment seeks to fairly distribute the burden throughout all sections of the country and requires each community to bear its fair share of military service. The original resolution seeks to obtain the soldiers without the slightest consideration as to the duty of the several communities.

As the gentleman from Nebraska, Gov. SHALLENBERGER, has so well said, the real burden of this war falls on the fighting men, and the real burden of the war falls on the community that furnishes the fighting men. Whatever burden a community must carry, the real burden is the contribution it makes of man power to the firing line. If you believe that this burden should be equitably borne by each community, with a relative duty amongst the registrants fixed by the classification of the questionnaire, you will vote for the Shallenberger amendment. So many people—so many fighting men. The draft law prescribed the distribution of this burden amongst the communities by population. In some communities owing to the alien population congested there this worked an undoubted hardship, but the hardship was very much localized. It was only in a few spots. The Shallenberger amendment preserves the principle of population, but corrects the irregularities justly complained of. The registrants represent the population, and the inequalities are corrected by excluding aliens and those not liable for military duty.

By adopting this method not only is the burden fairly placed but there is no possibility of the local boards escaping the responsibility of making a fair adjustment of the relative liability between registrants of their community. Under the so-called resolution of the War Department the temptation will be for each board to relieve its own community at the expense of some other community. This has been called a War Department measure, but I can not conceive how that can be called a War Department measure when the Secretary of War himself condemns it in an important particular, and when the President himself, as I understand it, has condemned it in a like manner. I have the testimony of the Secretary here showing that in the principle, the very radical principle, that I am contending for he stands with the minority, and I shall read his testimony on that point. He says:

> The actual population of any place in this country is indeterminate or undeterminable by anybody's guessing, and if we can find a rational way to relate it to the Army, comparing the liable population of communities without doing injustice by reason of anything that has already gone on, I should think that would be highly desirable.

In other words, the Secretary of War has said to this Congress that if you can find a method by which this quota can be apportioned to those liable for military duty, he will stand for it. We claim that the proposition made by Gov. SHALLENBERGER meets that very requirement. He provides that all these registrants in all these classes shall be counted as liable to military duty, and that the quota shall be based in any community upon the number that are liable to military duty. Then, too, the Secretary has said credit should be given for volunteers. As I say, I do not see how it is possible to call this an administration measure when it is condemned in an important particular by the Secretary of War himself. Another thing I desire to direct attention to. This bill was framed by a gallant old soldier who evidently had in his mind simply and only the sole consideration of how he was going to get men for his armies, and he gave very little consideration, I think, to anything else. I have his testimony, which I would be glad to read here. The question was, On whom does the burden fall—on what community? It falls on the rural communities; it falls on the farmer. That is what Gen. Crowder says. In his testimony he says:

> There is another thing to be taken into consideration. Class 1 ought to be uniform; that is, the same proportion of citizens ought to go into class 1 in all States, except where skilled labor must be considered. Skilled labor is not generally found in rural communities; it is always found in urban communities. Class 1 in the urban communities is not going to be quite as large as it will be in rural communities, because there are a greater proportion of skilled men found in class 2.
>
> You might say at first that there the rule would work inequitably in transferring the burden to the rural population, but I do not think it will operate in that way, because I have to invade the deferred classes for skilled men. We shall have to take the men right out of classes 2, 3, and 4, where they can be found, in order to fill these special requisitions. So there is a compensation there that ought not to be lost sight of.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KING. What I would like to know is this: Has the President of the United States requested that this legislation be adopted without amendment?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. He has said that it ought to be amended.

Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman ought not to make a statement of that kind without giving authority for it.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I give as authority a letter which I understand the President wrote to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FIELDS. I think the letter would not bear out the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Does not that letter distinctly say it should be amended in so far as giving credit for volunteers is concerned?

Mr. FIELDS. I recall in referring to one point that it said the question was debatable, but the President was inclined to think the War Department's side of it was right.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Not as to giving credit.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. KING. Can the gentleman secure that letter and have it put in the RECORD as a part of his remarks?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I will say that the chairman of the committee has the letter, and I understand it is going to be put into the RECORD so that there will be no question as to what the President said. I want to explain, for Mr. HARRISON's benefit, one thing. He has stated the general proposition that the President thinks the bill should be amended so as to allow credit for volunteers, but upon the other side of the question, including the proposition to base the quota that I propose, he says it is a debatable question, and he rather leans the other way.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think my colleague yielded to me.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman says that Gen. Crowder states that class 1 is going to be larger in the rural than in the urban communities?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Does not that come about in this way, by an arbitrary ruling on the part of Gen. Crowder that men who spend their lives in the profession and pursuit of agriculture are not skilled laborers in that respect?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; that it was unskilled labor in the country.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And that men who have spent their lives in that particular work are not skilled laborers as a result of it?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The Army view is that the labor of the country is generally unskilled.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And as a result of that ruling class 1 is made bigger in the rural than in the urban communities?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Surely.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to understand what is meant by the War Department. It seems the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] thinks that the War Department is some general or other, and not the Secretary of War. He tells of what the War Department wants, and when you come down to it, it is nobody but some general, Gen. Crowder or somebody else, and I would like to have settled the question as to who is the War Department.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. He will have to do that.

Mr. FIELDS. If the gentleman will permit, the Provost Marshal General is the man designated by the War Department to carry into execution this draft law, and is responsible for raising the Army.

Mr. BURNETT. That is what is meant by the War Department, is it?

Mr. GORDON. He is an executive officer; he is not responsible.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Now, gentlemen, I want to tell you when you go back to your homes and investigate how this thing is going to affect your own district, you will find that it is going to work a gross injustice among the several counties of your district, and it will be in a way in which you can not justify yourself before your people.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And is not there a reason, since the gentleman raised that question, that the counties that find they have some lower numbers will not complain, but that every county that has too many soldiers taken is going to complain?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Surely, and some sections of this country, in places like that of my friend from Nebraska, have had an extraordinary burden placed upon their State as against some other sections, where the burden has been very light. Before I get away further, when this thing was first proposed I telegraphed to every board in my district to send me word how it was going to affect their counties. I have two counties lying right side by side, each has exactly the same number of registrants, and one of them, as I say, in the same community virtually, has a large credit for volunteers, much larger than the other, and yet the county which has furnished a very large volunteer force will have to furnish twice the number of soldiers as the other. I have another county that has 1,125 total registrants, and it lies right opposite another that has only 570, and that county which has only 570 registrants will have to furnish two soldiers for every one that the one that has 1,125, and the one that has 570 registrants is the one that has the most farmers in it. I obtained the information as to the number of farmers in class 1 at the same time I obtained the other information. So when you go back to your district, how are you to face the injustice worked between counties of your own district? You go into one of your counties and you are met by the people there, and you find that by this rule its burden has been just double that of another county, without any excuse for it, without any necessary public policy requiring it, the character of people being the same. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I want to bring out some more facts, gentlemen, and I am going to do it under the five-minute rule if I get the opportunity. I would ask the gentleman to yield me two minutes more in order to answer the proposition about credit.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. It is said here that counties with volunteers get credit by reason of the fact that volunteers are not placed in class 1. It is claimed that by reducing the number of class 1 by the volunteers credit is thus given. Now, I will just illustrate it at once so you will see that can not be true.

Here are two boards, and each of them has exactly the same number in class 1. Each has 1,000, but one has a credit of 1,000 in the shape of volunteers. Now, under the resolution, each of those two boards has to contribute the same number of men, although one has a credit of 1,000 volunteers. They say if you put all the volunteers in class 1 of the county contributing the class 1 would be increased, and that would make up the difference. Let us see how that works: Suppose the call is for 50 per cent of class 1. Under the resolution each board would contribute 500 men. Under the credit system the first county would contribute 500 men unreduced by credit; and 50 per cent of the second county with 1,000 volunteers added to its class 1 would be 1,000, which would be reduced by a credit of 1,000 to none. So that one county would contribute 500 and the other none by virtue of the credit for its volunteers. It is perfectly evident, therefore, that credit is not given a county by reason of the fact that its volunteers are not placed in class 1.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on this bill may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all those who may speak on this bill may have unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent to us all that in 10 minutes no one familiar with the customs or the atmosphere of the House of Representatives could expect to dwell to any considerable extent and to much completed purpose on the true merits of this proposition, because this proposition resolves itself down not so much into a matter of mathematics as it does into a question of philosophy, and I mean a practical philosophy, the philosophy upon which this country was organized and the philosophy upon which it must be maintained, or else it will fall. In other words, while we have been listening to some of our distinguished colleagues, who with great earnestness and in all good faith have dwelt upon what seems to them to be the real crux of this question, I could not help thinking all the time that this is a question of a terrible national war and not of neighborhood militia bookkeeping. It makes all the difference in the world whether you approach the question from the viewpoint of trying to keep the count of each town and hamlet and county and district with mathematical exactness, so that no man shall go out of one region to fight for the country until an equivalent number of men have gone out of another region, or whether we shall follow the spirit and philosophy we see all through those brilliant romances of Dumas, which romances are now being reenacted so gloriously in real life on the fields of France. "Each for all and all for each."

It is not a question of mathematics. It is a question of national purpose and one common purpose of a people who are truly nationalized. [Applause.]

Now, if we depend upon the process of apportioning the quotas of States by the naked figures of the State's population, it is manifest at once that the very ratio we use for determining how many people shall be sent out of that State for war is itself an undependable factor, because when we get down into the figures of population that make that ratio to get the men to send to war we find part of that population ineligible, part exempt on stautory grounds, part physically unfit, and part aliens, or in this and that or the other status of unavailability. And we do not start, therefore, with a constant factor. If we start, on the other hand, by apportioning to each State as its quota that number of soldiers under the ratio that the number of men in each class in that State available for military service bears to the total of the men in that class in the 48 States, then we are figuring all the time on the men who are liable to go, are available to go, and in the most part must go, and our factor is almost constant. Of course, it can not be absolutely constant, because physical examination or other consideration may disturb it, but it is certainly static to the extent that it eliminates all the people that we know will not go in all circumstances.

But, says our friend who proposes the amendment, instead of making the apportionment based upon a ratio of class by class—that is to say, taking that proportion to the total of the country in class 1 which one State number in class 1 bears to that total—we ought to take the total of all the registrants in that State and make that the ratio as it relates to the total of all the registrants in all of the States. But I think one may easily see on second thought that if we do this we are practically getting back again to the uncertainties of the old population basis more or less. Because, while we are now expecting only to take out of class 1 for the purposes of this war, broadly speaking, and almost completely speaking, we are by his process still estimating the number of men we shall take out of class 1 on the basis of reckoning and including also the number of men in classes 2, 3, and 4, whom we do not expect to take.

There is no mathematical justice in that, if we are trying to get an accurate and fair apportionment and distribution on the basis of bookkeeping.

I can not expect to dwell, even if you had the patience to listen now, in amplification of these ideas, and I am glad to believe that I am talking to men who need only a suggestion; they will know how to apply the reasoning, if, happily, there is any reason in my suggestions.

Again, our friends in the minority report contend that these young men having drawn out of the box a number, their relation to the call for military service ought to be in all justice and equity by that fact fixed and determined, and that it is unfair and unjust to these young men now to disturb that order in which they were to have been called. Well, that would be all right if we sat over the green cloth with the cards, where the code determined our relations to one another. If this drawing of the ball out of the urn, the gambler's hazard, is to determine what allegiance he owes to and what sacrifice a man must make for his country, then we certainly have departed from the old idea, that no matter when his turn came, or when his country needed or called him, it should be a man's duty not to stand upon the order of his going but to go at once. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Of course, you have defined very fully there the voluntary system; but these men who have already been drafted into the service were drafted because their ball happened to come first.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. True; but suppose this country, with no experience of a draft law to govern it, undertook an experiment, as it did; we have had since that experiment began now nearly one year of experience under it. The Provost Marshal General has compiled statistics as to the operation of this experiment; and what would we be, what kind of legislators would we be, if we should shut our eyes to the significance of the lesson taught us all through those archives of his, that the experiments conducted through the year showed many things which no human being could have foreseen or have anticipated or provided for in the statute law; and that knowing those things, knowing how indirectly and obliquely, sometimes, this law had begun to work in places, to the manifest injustice of communities and of men, we should still say, "No; we will stake all on that little lead pellet that was drawn out of the urn and will not change it." How absurd! [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. A matter that has given very considerable trouble about this legislation is this: As I understand, in classifying the men under the questionnaire, different rules were adopted from those which the local and district boards operated on the first classification. In other words, there are thousands now gone into the service who, if they had been examined under the questionnaire, would have had a different classification, a district classification. Is that correct or not?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I presume it must have in some individual instances worked out that way.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is the gentleman sure it is only in a few instances?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know, because, of course, it is obvious that the individual instances have not been inquired into to get their aggregate; the men are in the service, and they are gone, and, fair or not, it is an accomplished fact.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The justice of basing the draft on registrants instead of on population has appealed to me very strongly, but that which has given me most trouble is the change in the classification under the questionnaire and under the original registration.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. FIELDS. Under the questionnaire they have a system of rules under which the local board operates. Under the old system they left discretion to the boards.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But does not the fact remain that there are thousands of men——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two more minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I can not do much in two minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Then I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Another point that has been raised here—and I must trust again to your kind indulgence; you will do your thinking for yourselves and make your own application of my mere scant suggestions—another thing suggested by our friends is that this is a great departure from any contemplated idea of universal military service. Now, to state the words "universal military service" to a company like this means to carry with it incidentally the idea of its utter impossibility. There is no such thing, there can be no such thing as universal military service. If all the people of one country were out in the field to fight all the people of another country, the war would last about 24 hours.

There must be some means of sustaining armies in the field. That is obvious. The question simply comes down as to the most practicable way of determining what men shall be left at home to sustain the army in the field, and that is not a matter of geography, but a matter of personal availability and fitness. If you are to determine that by geography, then you upset all the schemes of logic by which men transact their own private business. They would pick out men to stay at home to make munitions who ought to stay there, and they would send men to fight who ought to fight. It is humanly impossible, of course, to make that distribution absolutely equal. It is humanly impossible to make it absolutely exact. Nothing that we can do will be anything more, perhaps, than a well-intentioned approximation. But if we depend on the philosophy that is behind the selection of men by the terms of class 1, we have practically approximated what the experience of this year, in dealing with the selective-service law as it was first instituted, permits us to believe is the safest and the fairest way.

Then it is urged by our friends that if we favor this bill as it stands, it is only another way of protecting from active military service those people who live in districts where the munitions plants are. Well, we all start, of course, with the proposition that we have got to have the munitions plants or else we will not have any army in the field at all. We all start with the next proposition that the munitions plants must be somewhere, or else there will not be any. Then some men must work in them, or else there is no use having them at all. Now, will those people in the regions where there are no munitions plants send their men over to us where there are munitions plants, and thus avoid having those men put into the military service? Obviously our general population is not distributed, and we can not distribute it, with reference to the munitions plants. So it comes down again to the simple, practical matter of expediency, of taking those men to operate the munitions plants where the munitions plants are, and where the men are absolutely needed to operate those plants, regardless of geography, or else you will have no army in the field, whether you have any geography or not.

If in the old days when this Government was founded we had proceeded on the idea that because there was not a munitions plant in some particular locality we would not go into the war, where would we be now? Apply the analogy to my home region in New England. If all the pioneer settlers there who did not live within 50 miles of a blockhouse had said, "We will not chase off Indians and fight redcoats, because there is no blockhouse in our neighborhood," then we who sit in the House of Representatives of the United States of America would not be here to-day, and there would be no House of Representatives and no United States of America.

Then, the next objection proposed here is that, while this may be good for a general law, the weakness of it is in local enforcement; that exemption boards here, there, or somewhere else may not play square with the Nation, and therefore, because they will not play fair with the Nation, will defeat the general purpose of the law. I am not a lawyer, but I am familiar with one legal phrase which runs in Latin, "Abusus non tollit usum"—the abuse of a thing is no argument against its proper use. If we say that we will never pass a national law because it will have to be enforced in 48 different States, with the varying personal equations in the minds, temperaments, and habits of the men who are to enforce it, then our Government is a failure. You and I know that we ought not to deny the efficacy of the application of a general principle because of the fact that somewhere at some time it may be abused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Another thing ought to be borne in mind as one of the practical aspects of this situation and the proposition submitted here. It should be remembered that it is the avowed purpose of the Provost Marshal General in his calls for men to exhaust the availables in class 1 in all the States before he makes a call for the men of class 2 in any State. Therefore when all the men in class 1 in any State have gone, that State will not furnish more men under the call until all the class 1 men in the whole country are gone. If it is true, therefore, that in some neighborhoods the exemption board will be so unfair as to exclude men from class 1 who ought to be there, all they are going to do in the long run is to bring nearer by just that same proportion the time when the country will have to go into class 2, and then their men certainly will be drawn.

There is no escape from that. The more men you leave out of class 1 the quicker class 1 is exhausted by the call and the quicker you get into class 2. Thus you have not gained anything by it, not a thing.

The question of getting credit for volunteers is a moot one. There is much to be said on both sides, and I think you will agree with me, partly at least, when you come to the second thought about this matter, that when you are exempting a man to-day from the service of his country because another man went before him you are resorting to something little short of the old Civil War "substitute" proposition, that is, that one man need not go by compulsion because another man went willingly. Perhaps both men ought to go. When you come to analyze what the credit system means that can not be a matter of mathematics; it is a question of principle.

I would like to continue, but I can not abuse your patience any longer, and my time has run out. It is a broad, deep, and tremendously important subject. I realize the good faith of those men who oppose this law, but I believe it is time for us to forget our own neighborhoods in the contemplation of the whole noble country and the solemn call to patriotic duty that rings through it to-day. We must all turn in to save each other or surely all will be lost. On the battle field of France you have two great nations that have surrendered their national prejudices and put themselves under the hands of one commander, a Frenchman. Great Britain, stubborn Great Britain, is no longer attached to her neighborhood idea of controlling her own army. It is time for us, too, to give up all this idea of a bookkeeping account of our proportionate local sacrifices and all of us fight for Uncle Sam, no matter how many men are needed, no matter where they come from, and no matter where they are to go. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, the War and Navy Departments have furnished me with a list of States showing the number of men enlisted. I ask unanimous consent to place it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter is as follows:

Number ordered to camp up to Apr. 10, 1918.

United States.	White and colored, first and second draft—General.	White and colored—Special.
Alabama	17,631	93
Arizona	4,090	25
Arkansas	12,817	30
California	23,138	575
Colorado	6,135	203
Connecticut	13,950	795
Delaware	1,851	34
District of Columbia	1,523	60
Florida	8,073	25
Georgia	23,348	26
Idaho	3,133	1
Illinois	60,115	739
Indiana	22,495	950
Iowa	16,151	1,731
Kansas	8,947	101
Kentucky	17,041	507
Louisiana	16,490	.....
Maine	3,157	110
Maryland	9,538	159
Massachusetts	28,259	883
Michigan	36,881	1,002
Minnesota	21,291	2,069
Mississippi	13,314	31
Missouri	23,308	1,423
Montana	9,635	30
Nebraska	10,131	76
Nevada	1,392	.....
New Hampshire	1,990	60

Number ordered to camp up to Apr. 10, 1918—Continued.

United States.	White and colored, first and second draft—General.	White and colored—Special.
New Jersey	27,077	281
New Mexico	2,824
New York	91,215	1,734
North Carolina	20,232	50
North Dakota	6,300	60
Ohio	50,604	735
Oklahoma	18,353	50
Oregon	2,000	100
Pennsylvania	77,623	1,149
Rhode Island	3,323	224
South Carolina	12,393	63
South Dakota	3,633	36
Tennessee	18,517	77
Texas	33,905	355
Utah	3,235	25
Vermont	1,624	60
Virginia	17,038	75
Washington	9,530	100
West Virginia	11,654	102
Wisconsin	16,415	250
Wyoming	1,279	20
Alaska
Hawaii
Porto Rico
Total	853,837	17,376

All men ordered is the sum of columns "General" and "Special."
Total, 871,213 sent to camps for draftad Army.

—

Number of enlistments by States from Apr. 6, 1917, to Feb. 18, 1918.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1918.

Alabama	1,998
Arizona	646
Arkansas	1,826
California	5,430
Colorado	2,527
Connecticut	2,536
Delaware	838
District of Columbia	729
Florida	1,006
Georgia	2,398
Idaho	638
Illinois	9,072
Indiana	3,879
Iowa	3,602
Kansas	2,388
Kentucky	2,129
Louisiana	2,415
Maine	1,264
Maryland	1,578
Massachusetts	6,259
Michigan	3,336
Minnesota	4,027
Mississippi	1,689
Missouri	5,946
Montana	1,269
Nebraska	2,284
Nevada	202
New Hampshire	536
New Jersey	3,131
New Mexico	515
New York	13,183
North Carolina	1,271
North Dakota	823
Ohio	3,771
Oklahoma	2,424
Oregon	2,301
Pennsylvania	8,118
Rhode Island	994
South Carolina	1,480
South Dakota	795
Tennessee	2,353
Texas	8,940
Utah	713
Vermont	484
Virginia	2,673
Washington	1,249
West Virginia	2,158
Wisconsin	2,071
Wyoming	296
Total	132,190

—

Total number of men enlisted or enrolled in the United States Navy from Apr. 6, 1917, to Feb. 18, 1918.

Total increase in the—
Regular service	132,190
Naval Reserve	53,986
National Naval Volunteers	15,000
Making a grand total in the United States Navy	201,176

NOTE.—Records to show Reserves and National Naval Volunteers by States not complete.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. Under the leave to extend my remarks I insert the following table:

Summary of classification as shown by reports received from States in response to Provost Marshal General's Office telegram c-257, Apr. 2, 1918.

State.	Date.	Classified.	Class 1.	Pending.	Per cent class 1 to total classified.
Alabama	Mar. 31	167,045	51,823	2,248	31
Arizona	Mar. 27	25,806	5,944	65	22
Arkansas	Mar. 29	141,526	43,225	883	31
California	...do....	123,623	23,376	1,481	21
Colorado	Mar. 31	74,314	17,541	478	24
Connecticut	Mar. 27	137,478	31,265	3,079	23
Delaware	...do....	19,665	5,364	293	27
District of Columbia	Mar. 31	29,461	10,166	63	35
Florida	Mar. 27	74,185	26,365	350	36
Georgia	Apr. 1	213,839	68,130	11,142	32
Idaho	Mar. 27	38,024	10,243	532	27
Illinois	Mar. 28	545,956	150,703	13,801	28
Indiana	Mar. 27	230,640	67,769	6,088	26
Iowa	Mar. 30	207,815	56,938	938	27
Kansas	Mar. 29	116,223	32,984	9 208	28
Kentucky	Mar. 31	177,781	50,192	877	28
Louisiana	Apr. 2	141,033	52,975	2,122	38
Maine	Mar. 27	56,568	18,680	400	33
Maryland	...do....	112,031	33,042	4,324	29
Massachusetts	...do....	319,802	82,782	5,075	26
Michigan	Mar. 30	314,148	91,939	5,655	29
Minnesota	Mar. 31	200,712	62,670	3,460	31
Mississippi	Apr. 1	130,960	42,252	1,917	32
Missouri	Mar. 29	281,742	77,580	3,928	28
Montana	Mar. 27	78,905	24,502	904	31
Nebraska	Mar. 29	104,979	27,350	2,412	26
Nevada	Mar. 28	9,466	2,347	164	25
New Hampshire	Mar. 27	35,171	9,980	208	28
New Jersey	Apr. 2	277,069	69,244	3,371	25
New Mexico	Mar. 30	29,286	8,654	660	30
New York	Mar. 27	818,713	203,056	10,451	26
North Carolina	Apr. 1	190,491	55,682	2,278	29
North Dakota	Mar. 31	61,496	18,469	93	30
Ohio	Mar. 30	481,888	122,428	11,251	25
Oklahoma	...do....	134,101	39,949	14,751	30
Oregon	...do....	61,067	18,584	2,524	30
Pennsylvania	Mar. 28	551,388	132,984	9,607	24
Rhode Island	Mar. 27	51,648	13,216	37	26
South Carolina	...do....	118,421	34,788	630	29
South Dakota	Mar. 29	54,103	20,423	824	38
Tennessee	Mar. 27	177,129	49,230	2,492	28
Texas	Mar. 30	364,930	100,598	10,281	28
Utah	Mar. 31	40,040	8,873	68	22
Vermont	Mar. 27	25,283	6,608	145	26
Virginia	Mar. 31	161,771	48,694	2,192	30
Washington	Mar. 27	101,573	23,830	307	23
West Virginia	Mar. 30	114,057	35,515	.....	31
Wisconsin	Mar. 27	228,830	66,939	.....	29
Wyoming	Mar. 31	21,211	8,546	1,041	40
Total	.....	8,175,263	2,265,446	155,691	27.71

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extent his remarks.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert two telegrams in the RECORD in regard to the liberty loan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The telegrams are as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 10, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Requirement of full payment of income taxes in June is seriously hampering the banks of this district in financing liberty-loan purchases for their customers and working great hardship on individuals and corporations desiring to buy liberty bonds. If payment of taxes in installments is permitted it will greatly relieve this situation and contribute materially to the success of the third liberty loan in the great Middle West.

H. L. STUART,
Director of Campaign.
HEMAN GIFFORD,
Illinois Director of Sales.
GEORGE H. DUNSCOMB,
Indiana Director of Sales.
WM. L. ROSS,
Wisconsin Director of Sales.
F. R. FENTON,
Michigan Director of Sales.
C. H. MCNIDER,
Iowa Director of Sales.
CHAS. W. FOLDS,
Chicago and Cook County Director of Sales of the Liberty Loan Campaign Committee, Seventh Federal Reserve District.

—

CANTON, ILL., April 10, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON,
Congress Hall Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Requirements of full payment of income tax in June is seriously hampering banks of this district in financing liberty-loan purchases for their customers. It is also working great hardship to industrials and corporations desiring to buy liberty bonds. If payment of taxes in installments is permitted it will greatly relieve this situation and contribute materially to successes of the liberty loan in the great Middle West.

U. G. ORENFORFF,
Chairman Fulton County Liberty Loan Committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on April 10, 1918, approved and signed bills of the following title:

H. R. 2316. An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes; and

S. 3400. An act to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Public Printer, transmitting schedules of useless files of papers and records of the office of the superintendent of documents that are no longer of any value or use to that office (H. Doc. No. 1034); to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of War submitting a claim for damages by river and harbor work which has been adjusted and settled by the Chief of Engineers and approved by the Secretary of War (H. Doc. No. 1035); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2207) for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 484), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3106) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Keefe, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 11392) to authorize the coinage of 15-cent pieces, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WHALEY: A bill (H. R. 11393) to authorize the Columbia Railway & Navigation Co. to construct a canal connecting the Santee River and the Cooper River in the State of South Carolina; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FRANCIS: Resolution (H. Res. 307) directing the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department to institute an examination of the accounts and expenditures of the Post Office Department, and for other purposes.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: Resolution (H. Res. 308) providing for pay for examiner detailed to the Committee on Invalid Pensions from the Bureau of Pensions; to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOOLITTLE: A bill (H. R. 11394) granting a pension to Bertha Zwicker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRUKKER: A bill (H. R. 11395) granting an increase of pension to Wilson Lord; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 11396) granting an increase of pension to Allen B. O'Conner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 11397) granting an increase of pension to Montrose Washburn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11398) granting a pension to Mary M. Gunsolus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11399) granting a pension to Jane Tilly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11400) granting an increase of pension to John T. Glover; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 11401) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Seiger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 11402) granting an increase of pension to Daniel A. Larkin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMYER: A bill (H. R. 11403) granting an increase of pension to David W. McMeen; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUBEY: A bill (H. R. 11404) granting an increase of pension to G. S. Scott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 11405) granting a pension to Lillie E. Justice; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 11406) granting a pension to James R. Mowry; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of New York State Ice Manufacturers' Association, against passage of increased second-class postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESCH: Memorial of Boy Scouts of America, pledging help in every way to win the war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of the county and ward workers of the La Crosse County (Wis.) Council of Defense, favoring giving power to Food Administrator to commandeer the barley in the malt houses in the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: Petition of C. E. Lufkin, Mahaska County, Iowa, asking law to permit payment of Federal taxes in installments; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Memorial of the Bismarck Clearing House Association on April 5, 1918, recommending that the payment of income tax and excess-profits taxes be permitted upon the installment plan; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 12, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in these terrible times we bless Thee that the American people are learning to pray. We have found from the problems confronting us that human wisdom is not sufficient for human life and that the power of the human arm, no matter how great, how strong, is not sufficient for the battle of life. We turn to Thee, the God of all nations and of all men, whose mighty arm is not weakened and who has still power to save. We pray that Thou wilt guide us and make us Thine own instruments for the establishment of justice and peace and brotherhood in all the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore assumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Saturday, April 6, 1918, when, on request of Mr. OVERMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

STREETS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 213).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 1st instant, a report relative to the proceedings that have been instituted for the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of alleys and minor streets in the city of Washington, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the following enrolled bills, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

S. 2917. An act to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes";

S. 3528. An act to suspend for the period of the present war sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes; and

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to present resolutions sent me from the National Security League. They are very brief, and I will read them:

Whereas it is evident that any information that may be issued by the Government to the American people must be absolutely correct, lest the confidence of the Nation be undermined and credence be finally denied to news from such sources, though reliable; and

Whereas it is the inalienable right of the American people that such news as is given them be reliable in order that the administration be upheld through the unity of the people and the war prosecuted to a successful issue: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the executive committee of the National Security League that national safety requires that the Bureau of Public Information be under the direction of a committee of three or five men not holding any other public office, selected because of their high standing and experience and irrespective of political affiliations; and it urges on Congress the enactment of legislation to that end.

Very truly, yours,

S. STANWOOD MENKEN.

Mr. Menken is president, Elihu Root is honorary president, and Alton B. Parker honorary vice president. I move that the letter be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I also present resolutions of the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange favoring the appointment of Government experts to fix the price of raw cotton. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I present a protest from the Woman's Club of Puyallup, Wash., and also one from the Olga Energetic Club, of Olga, Wash., against the zone system in second-class postal rates.

I wish to say that I have received a great many protests and a great many letters of the same tenor that I have not presented to the Senate, but I simply take this opportunity to make that statement for the RECORD. I move that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I also present a memorial from the Woman's Club of Puyallup, Wash., against permitting grazing within the limits of national forests. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING. I send to the desk a resolution adopted by the board of education of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, in favor of universal military training. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the President of the United States of America, Woodrow Wilson:

Resolution adopted by the board of education of the city school district of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, at a meeting held March 18, 1918, No. 7374, introduced by the president, Mr. M. L. Thomsen, indorsing universal military training.

Whereas there is a bill now pending before the Congress of the United States providing for universal military training and education for men between the ages of 19 and 21 years; and

Whereas one of the purposes of said bill is to improve the character of the young men of our Nation mentally, morally, and physically; and

Whereas the passage of said bill in our opinion will materially aid and strengthen the resources of our national defense: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the board of education of the city school district of the city of Cleveland, That it is the judgment of said board that said bill now pending in Congress deserves the active support of the citizens of the United States, and that we favor its general purpose; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the clerk of this board to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, to the Senators for the State of Ohio, and to the Representatives in Congress of the twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second districts of the State of Ohio.

M. L. THOMSEN,
President Board of Education.
ROBT. I. CLEGG,
Vice President Board of Education.
F. E. SPAULDING,
Superintendent of Schools.
SARAH E. HYRE,
Clerk Board of Education.
T. G. HOGEN,
Director of Schools.

Mr. THOMPSON. I present resolutions unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, held at Topeka, Kans., March 20, indorsing the administration of the draft law with respect to deferred classification, and also as to the policy of fair-price regulation of wheat and other farm products. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD. They are short.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution unanimously adopted at the quarterly meeting of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, held at Topeka, Kans., March 20, 1918.

We, the members of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, in quarterly meeting assembled, representing the farmers of the State of Kansas, do hereby declare our patriotic support to the Government of the United States in this time of stress, and do pledge to our country all the resources that we have.

We desire to express our approval and satisfaction with the present interpretation and administration of the draft law with respect to deferred classification.

We indorse the policy of fair-price regulation of wheat. But in order to maintain a just equilibrium as between other agricultural products and wheat, we feel that it is necessary to extend such regulation to all substitute products. We believe that a fair price on agricultural products should be determined by the cost of the factors entering into production.

We realize the necessity of encouraging the wheat grower to continue in the production of wheat, and suggest that corn and wheat at approximately the same price means a larger acreage of corn and a smaller acreage of wheat. Furthermore, it is practical to encourage greater production of wheat by the Federal Government paying a bonus for every acre of wheat as the administration may deem best, or reimbursing the grower who loses his entire crop, from agencies over which he has no control, to the extent of the cost of his seed.

We recommend that 1917 wheat and all other wheat produced previous to this time, that is not now at the command of the Food Administration, should be made available for consumption immediately.

Mr. STERLING. I present a resolution sent to me by the Methodist Episcopal Church Sunday School of Mitchell, S. Dak., relative to the prohibition of the use of foodstuffs, fuel, and so forth, in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution.

The world is cold and hungry because of lack of sufficient fuel and food. Because of this fact the people of the United States are asked to deny themselves many things that have heretofore been considered necessities. At the same time millions of dollars worth of foodstuffs is being destroyed and thousands of tons of coal are being wasted in the manufacture and distribution of malt and brewed liquors. Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Sunday School of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Mitchell, S. Dak., this 24th day of February, 1918, That the waste and destruction of fuel and food in the manufacture and distribution of malt and brewed liquors in this time of need are hereby condemned; and be it further

Resolved, That the beer drinkers of America be asked, in the name of patriotism, to deny themselves the harmful luxury of beer drinking; and be it further

Resolved, That we hereby earnestly request and urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to do all in their power to secure the speedy enactment of a law that will assist these people in this very useful form of self-denial, and that will fully and effectually prohibit the waste and destruction of fuel and foodstuffs in the manufacture and distribution of malt and brewed liquors in the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

LAURITZ MILLER,
Chairman of Committee.

Mr. STERLING. I present a petition of certain citizens of Hot Springs, S. Dak., to the same effect, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the United States Senate:

Believing that, to win the war, we must rid ourselves immediately of the whole intoxicating-liquor business, in order to conserve foodstuffs, fuel, transportation space, labor, and efficiency, we, citizens of the United States, do earnestly urge Congress to pass a war prohibition bill, to take effect immediately and continue through the duration of the war and for one year thereafter.

Mr. STERLING. I also present a resolution passed by the South Dakota Life Underwriters' Association, relative to universal military training. I ask that it may printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution passed by the South Dakota Life Underwriters' Association at Sioux Falls, March 30, 1918.

Resolved, That we pledge our earnest and unqualified support to secure the enactment of Federal legislation providing that the millions of young men, descendants of all races and nationalities, annually arriving at military-training age, shall have at least six months' intensive physical and military training, coupled with such opportunity to learn our language and our ideals of government as is consistent with making the alert, broad-gauged, self-reliant, and red-blooded Americans which the country needs for its future progress and security, the training to begin as soon as the cantonments are conveniently available for that purpose.

Mr. JAMES. I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD resolutions adopted at a patriotic mass meeting of citizens of Henry County, Ky., held at the courthouse in New Castle on April 1, 1918.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a patriotic meeting of the citizens of Henry County, Ky., held at the courthouse in New Castle on April 1, 1918, it was unanimously—

Resolved by said meeting, That Congress should immediately pass laws whereby those persons who in any way interfere with the United States or any of its representatives or citizens in the preparation for war against the central powers of Europe, or in any way give aid and comfort, or attempt to give aid and comfort, to our enemies shall be adequately punished as traitors to the United States; it is further

Resolved, That this resolution shall be immediately forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

JNO. A. CRABB, Chairman.
S. J. DOUTHETT, Secretary.

Mr. JAMES. I also present resolutions of like character passed at a patriotic mass meeting of citizens held in Owensboro and Daviess County, Ky., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas our country is now engaged in a war in which her own liberty and the general welfare of all the nations are at stake; and

Whereas our young men are offering their lives in a mighty struggle to stay the deluge of barbarism which threatens to engulf the world; and

Whereas the German method of waging war by insidious propaganda, espionage, murder, arson, and other subtle crimes is endangering the lives of our soldiers and citizens and jeopardizing the success of the cause; and

Whereas the inadequacy of our laws and the leniency of our courts in dealing with such crimes are creating a serious situation in which the frenzy of the mob may take the place of courts of justice: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Owensboro and Daviess County, Ky., in mass meeting assembled, urge our Representatives in Congress to pass such legislation as will bring to speedy justice the traitors, spies, and propagandists whose activities constitute so serious a menace to our country.

JAMES H. RISLEY,
LAVEGA CLEMENTS,
LEE D. RAY,
M. G. BUCKNER,
S. R. EWING,
Committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present a petition signed by a great many citizens of Iowa relating to the continued use of cereals in the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. I ask that the memorial itself be read at the desk, omitting the signatures.

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

PULASKI, IOWA, March 20, 1918.

To our Congressman, respectfully submitted:

For the sake of more efficiency among the laboring people of our land, and for the sake of a better moral standard in our Army, encouraged by better environments, and as a further means of encouraging food conservation in our homes and eating places, and as a very urgent and even absolute necessity to win the war for democracy, we, the undersigned citizens of Davis County, Iowa, ask for immediate war prohibition by congressional enactment. "Food will win." Why, then, waste millions on millions of bushels of grain every year in the liquor traffic?

Mr. PHELAN presented petitions of the Alameda County Medical Society, of sundry citizens of Alameda County, and of the Santa Barbara County Medical Society, of Santa Barbara, all in the State of California, praying for advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps of the Army, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the North Owosso Farmers' Club, of Owosso, Mich., and a petition of sundry citizens of Dundee, Mich., praying for national prohibition as a war measure, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for the protection and help of secret organizations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Clearing House Association, of Flint, Mich., favoring the enactment of legislation to prevent a congestion of the funds in the Treasury Department and a disturbance in the financial affairs of the country on the occasion of the payment of income taxes at one date, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Clearing House Association, of Flint, Mich., favoring the payment of income taxes in installments, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Johnson Post, No. 78, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Detroit, Mich., favoring the deportation of disloyal citizens, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry rural mail carriers of Marcellus, Mich., praying for an increase in salaries of postal employees, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Benzie County Medical Society, of Benzonia, Mich., praying for an advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have received a telegram, which I desire to read that it may go into the RECORD:

DENVER, COLO., March 31, 1918.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Democracy must be realized in deeds, not words. Twenty million women are waiting the action of the Senate for justice and freedom in our Nation. We regret the delay and believe that the immediate passage of the Federal suffrage amendment will speak for freedom throughout the world.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that within the last two weeks a law that provides for the participation of women in the primaries of Texas was passed in the senate of the legislature of that State by a vote or nearly 3 to 1, and was passed in the house of representatives of that legislature by a vote of more than 2 to 1.

I want also to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Democratic national committee by a vote of 2 to 1 has indorsed the Senate joint resolution which is now pending before this body proposing a woman-suffrage constitutional amendment. I wish further to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Republican national committee has by an overwhelming majority passed a resolution indorsing this identical Senate joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is there anything to prevent other States, if they desire woman suffrage, from pursuing the same course which Texas has pursued, or Colorado, or Utah, or any other States that have woman suffrage?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No.

Mr. KING. If this is a democracy, it is a democracy by reason of having local self-government through the instrumentality of the States, and there is not a State in the Union that may not have woman suffrage if the people within the State desire it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no doubt about that right; but that right is founded upon the general principle that is enunciated in our Declaration of Independence, that the just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, and it is not only applicable to the government of a State but to the Government of the Nation. Unless each citizen of the Nation possesses the right to participate in its government, then there exists government without the consent of the governed. Consequently we can not have a democracy according to that principle unless we have that right recognized by the United States Government, so that the governed of the Nation can vote as to who shall govern in the United States through the President and through the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that, according to that principle, that right morally must exist and inhere in everyone governed by the Nation; and, that being the case, it is not just to deprive anyone of the right. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am in hearty accord with the sentiment expressed in the telegram which the Senator has read and with his statement, but I want to ask him, in reference to the Texas law to which he has referred, does it permit the women to vote at any election except at primary nominations?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I think not; and I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just wanted the information.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the primary in Texas is practically the election in Texas.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That being the case——

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is practically so; but legally so, it is not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but it is true that it gives them a voice in the determination of who shall control that State with almost as perfect certainty as if they also had the right to participate in the election itself.

Mr. President, I ask that this telegram be incorporated in the RECORD, and I call attention to the fact that it is signed by over 100 of the leading citizens of Denver, the first of whom is Dr. Margaret Long, daughter of an ex-Secretary of the Navy of this Government.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENVER, COLO, March 31, 1918.

Hon. JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Democracy must be realized in deeds, not words. Twenty million women are waiting the action of the Senate for justice and freedom in our Nation. We regret the delay and believe that the immediate passage of the Federal suffrage amendment will speak for freedom throughout the world.

Margaret Long, Dora Phelps Buell, Mrs. T. P. Major, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Wallace, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Melrose, Rowland K. Goddard, Hon. Hugh Steel, Hon. Leon M. Hattenbach, Frost Craft Buchtel, Dr. and Mrs. R. K. Arndt, Mr. and Mrs. S. Osborn, Minnie Osborn, Margaret Hunter, Anna Hunter, Mrs. Ellen Marsh, Mrs. J. J. Bradley, Mrs. M. M. Ketner, Sara P. Keger, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Linton, Ray R. Lacroix, Norma Dickinson, Madeline Baker, Tildon Watson, Mae Tibbits, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Barnett, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mil'ard, Mrs. Ollie Oakes, Hazel Bennett, Ann Templeton, Iva Dunklee, Mrs. Ray David, Kate Brown, Mary Anderson, Lorena Geer, Mary Schoepflin, Gussie Oakes, Dora M. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Graham, Isabella Stewart, May B. Kruse, Mrs. A. N. Mitchem, Katherine C. Waters, Harriette Dunklee, Emily A. Hayward, Mildred Taube, Mrs. Ralph Barney, Julia Burke, Mrs. C. N. Bills, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Quackenbush, Elizabeth S. Bradford, Mary A. Carruthers, Norma Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. William Thomas, Mrs. Cinta Dillon, Antoinette Hawley, Ida Taylor, Cora Streeter, Mrs. S. M. Caspar, Garnet I. Pelton, D. C. Burns, Jessie Parks, Belle Shields, Martha E. Walton, Ida Kruse McFarlane, Frederick McFarlane, Carlotta Kruse, W. K. Harris, Clara K. Rogers, Hazel Dicer, Grace Matthews, Cora B. Morrison, Halcyon Morrison, May Hill, Madel Haynes, Annie Johnson, Lillian Morse, Clara Williams, Francis Buchanan, Margaret Beeler, Rose Jamieson, Emma D. Pronger, Lyda Russell, Lillian Pollock, Ella H. Griffith, Frona Abbott, Pearl Wheeler Dorr, Mr. and Mrs. N. O. Pierce, Mary Tower Bigelow, C. W. Bigelow.

PRICE OF WHEAT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have a telegram in the form of a petition, the text of which I ask may be read, and then I desire the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] concerning it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

WEST HOPE, N. DAK., April 10, 1918.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
Washington, D. C.:

We are busy sowing wheat, and want you to stick for the Gore amendment on the price of wheat. We think flour substitute should be relieved; considerably too high.

J. F. Lamb, Pat Canavan, R. C. Bellew, F. G. McCann, Olum Haugen, A. N. Baumann, J. H. Lattimer, W. J. Treynold, A. Deschamp, Casper Jensen, Elmer Trimble, James Acheyon, Deschjrbe Gebhard, Ed Evoy, William Kratt, Axel Houmann, Dave Kyle, B. D. Goss, A. K. Wooden, Anton Nesting, G. H. Burns, Robert S. Harvey, Henry Kleinert, J. P. Flynn, A. S. Durnin, J. M. Schroeder, John McPhee, G. B. Fletcher, Ross Trimble, H. Hawkes, John Bryce.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have been speaking for the $2.50 wheat, supporting it by voice and by vote. The bill passed the Senate some time ago. The Senate amendment was not agreed to by the House. It has been before the committee of conference for several weeks. I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether there is any prospect of coming to an understanding in the committee of conference. I wish the Senator to understand that the farmers of the Northwest have a suspicion that the matter is being held in abeyance until the seeding is all done, so that the excuse may be made that the extra price accorded by this amendment would not produce a greater acreage, and therefore would not be necessary; and that argument would be made before the House and before the Senate. I hope that we will get some speedy action on the part of the conference committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I appreciate the force of the point made by the Senator from North Dakota. If this amendment were permitted to lie at anchor for any considerable period, the argument would then be made that seeding time had passed. That would be used as an argument to prevail upon the other House to insist upon its disagreement and perhaps to prevail upon this body to recede from its amendment.

I do not think the seeding time is the only point involved, because it is a matter of justice even if the seeding time had passed, and for my part I shall not relax my insistence upon its enactment into law. I will say to the Senator, however, that I hope to bring in the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill this afternoon. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture in the other branch of Congress gave assurances to that body that he would bring that amendment back from the conference for a separate vote. There were a number of amendments in conference. Some of them have required protracted consideration. The Senate conferees, however, this morning decided, perhaps I might say, to make a sacrifice hit in order to bring in the report now, to obviate any further delay. It is my hope to bring in an agreement on every other amendment this afternoon except the Gore wheat amendment. I shall then ask the Senate to-day to consider and agree to the conference report and insist upon the wheat amendment, in order that it may go to the House for immediate action.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator, and I sincerely hope that will be done.

PROHIBITION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, yesterday I reported a bill (S. 3808; No. 386) which had been submitted to a subcommittee of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I desire to call it to the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I yesterday afternoon reported from the subcommittee of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads a bill, known commonly as the "bone-dry bill," for the District of Columbia. I was not present when I was made a member of that subcommittee, but I inquired of my colleague if we as a subcommittee had a right to report that bill. I was told that we did have. I am now informed that it was our province simply to report the bill to the full committee, as is the usual custom, and that we had no authority to make such a report to the Senate.

I therefore ask that that report be withdrawn and the matter referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 530) for the relief of James Gilfillan, submitted an adverse report (No. 393) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 924) for the relief of Delilah Siebenaler, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 392) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 57) for the relief of Kate Canniff (Rept. No. 389);

A bill (S. 463) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls (Rept. No. 391); and

A bill (S. 1804) for the relief of George T. Hamilton (Rept. No. 390).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 4341) for the relief of warrant officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps who accept commissions in the Naval Reserve Force or Marine Corps Reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 4342) to provide compensation for maritime workers of the United States suffering injuries while in the service of merchant vessels of the United States, their owners, or charterers, and for the dependents of such maritime workers in case of death, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4343) granting a pension to L. F. Pampe (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 4344) granting a pension to Albert M. Griffith (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4345) granting a pension to James Besheers (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 4346) granting an increase of pension to Lucy M. Capron;

A bill (S. 4347) granting a pension to Mary A. Hillman;

A bill (S. 4348) granting an increase of pension to David Krant;

A bill (S. 4349) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Leher;

A bill (S. 4350) granting a pension to Amy B. Mitchell;

A bill (S. 4351) granting an increase of pension to Feracane Paola;

A bill (S. 4352) granting an increase of pension to Samuel W. Scoggins; and

A bill (S. 4353) granting an increase of pension to Henry Stone; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4354) for the relief of William J. Perkins and Sarah Alice Perkins, parents of George Herman Perkins, deceased, late fireman, third class, United States Navy; and

A bill (S. 4355) for the relief of Sarah E. Straughn; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 4356) granting a pension to John K. Miller (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 4357) granting a pension to Louisa M. Ferrier, now Wright (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 4358) granting a pension to Louis N. Mallet (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 4359) to provide further for the national security and common defense by providing for the acquisition by eminent domain of property and rights necessary for the improvement and increase of facilities for the development, transmission, distribution, and supplying of electric energy; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COST OF FARM IMPLEMENTS, ETC.

Mr. THOMPSON. I submit a resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation and report relative to the high cost of farm implements and other articles required to be purchased and used by the farmers on the farm. I ask that the resolution be read and lie over.

The resolution (S. Res. 223) was read and ordered to lie over, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, directed under the authority of the act entitled "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its purposes and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, to investigate and report to the Senate the cause or causes for the high prices of the articles hereinafter mentioned required to be bought and used by the farmers of the country on the farms, and to investigate and report the facts relative to the existence of any unfair methods of trade or competition, and relative to any and all violations of the antitrust laws of the United States by manufacturers and dealers in any of the articles hereinafter mentioned in respect to any act, combination, agreement, or conspiracy to restrict, depress, or control the prices thereof, and whether such manufacturers or dealers have committed any acts, agreements, combinations, or conspiracies tending to a restraint of trade in the manufacture, production, or supply of any of the articles enumerated as follows, to wit:

Agricultural implements, including plows, listers, harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, mowers, drills and planters, horse rakes, cultivators, thrashing machinery, wagons, buggies, carts; utensils and machinery and equipment required for the production of food, foodstuffs, grains, fuel, fuel oil, natural gas, hides, leather, cotton, and wool.

Bags, bagging, gunny cloth, and grain sacks.

Cream separators, churns, and internal-combustion engines.

Brooms and articles of household utility of tin, wood, or other material.

Necessary wearing apparel, including gloves, jumpers, overalls, shoes, and shirts.

Leather products, including harness, halters, saddles, and buggy whips.

Tools and hardware, including axes, hatchets, nails, staples, padlocks, pitchforks, hoes, shovels, picks, corn knives, grindstones, wheelbarrows, and saws.

Axle grease, lubricating oils, fertilizers, salt for stock, and oil cake.

Lumber, shingles, barrels, rope (hemp), binding twine, barb wire, galvanized wire, steel wire and wire fencing, and farm labor.

And that the Federal Trade Commission report whether, under the facts found, the farmers are required to pay an unreasonable price for the things they are required to purchase and use on the farms in the production of food products, and whether they are thereby prevented from making a fair profit for their labor and money expended toward production.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 11th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 3994) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes.

STATEMENT BY SAMUEL GOMPERS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I present a statement, which was published in the Washington Star of April 11, 1918, by Samuel Gompers in view of the matter before the Senate yesterday and the conference report. I think it is worthy of attention, as the interview is in reference to the vote taken in the Senate on the proposal contained in section 3 of the conference report, and which was acted on. I ask that the portion indicated between marks be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

"There is now going on in the Halls of Congress a discussion on the proposal for legislation making participation in a strike an offense heavily punishable," Mr. Gompers said. "You may make the stoppage of work unlawful, but you can not thus prevent it; instead you will only make men lawbreakers as well as strikers. I warn Congress not to commit the deviltry and the folly of enacting such a law."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all of the statement I care to have read. I wish to present further, Mr. President, on the issue joined in the statement and the action of the Senate yesterday, a finding on reports made by the National Industrial Conference Board, and if the Senate will permit, instead of asking the Secretary to read this I should like permission to read it myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I read from page 5 of this report, in contradistinction to the statement which has just been read by the Secretary of the Senate, that there has been no serious interruption of the industrial program of this country.

The serious aspect of the 1,156 strikes included in this report is clearly seen from the fact that the number of employees made idle was 283,402, the number of days of production lost was 6,285,519.

The magnitude of the production lost in even this incomplete list of strikes would at any time be serious. In war time, when every day of production of essential materials has definite influence on the war situation, it is little short of appalling.

To visualize better the magnitude of the waste it may be pointed out that it would require the labor of 251,400 persons for a whole month to make up for the reported loss of production, or that a manufacturing plant employing 1,000 workers would have to operate for about 21 years of 300 workdays each in order to offset the time thus lost.

The high average amount of time lost in the strikes here included, amounting to 22.2 days per worker, may be accounted for by the fact that while many of the smaller strikes were adjusted in less than a week, some within 24 hours, many of those in which large numbers of workers participated were long drawn out. Since most of the major strikes occurring during the period are included, while many small ones are not, this tends somewhat to raise the average.

The statistical data in this report are summarized in four tables, in which the number of establishments, the general basis of settlement, the number of employees made idle, and the number of workdays lost are listed according to—

1. Industries.
2. Demands.
3. Proportion of union strikers.
4. Means of settlement.

In computing the number of workdays lost, which is perhaps the most important factor, and the one that indicates clearly the seriousness of the strikes, all Sundays and holidays were excluded, except in a small number of cases where it was stated that it was usual to work on those days. Where two or three shifts were worked, each shift was counted as a workday. Time lost after April 6, 1917, on strikes started before that day was excluded; also, all time lost after October 5, 1917.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, can the Senator from Illinois inform the Senate who are the members of that commission?

Mr. SHERMAN. The chairman of the conference board is Mr. Frederick P. Fish, the managing director is Magnus W. Alexander, and the membership is composed of employers—the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association, the American Hardware Manufacturers' Association, the National Metal Trades' Association, and a number of others. They are employers of labor.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, since the distinguished Senator from Illinois has raised this question, I may be excused if I state what I did not state day before yesterday, and that is, that the American Federation of Labor is stoutly opposed to any legislation which will prevent peaceful strikes. The Senator from Washington stated that he doubted whether the American Federation of Labor was officially opposed to the passage of the so-called sabotage act without the inclusion of section 3. At that time I had had no communication with any of the officials of the American Federation of Labor, and so I allowed the statement to pass. Yesterday afternoon, however, after the conference report had been rejected, Mr. Gompers called me up and told me very earnestly that the American Federation of Labor is opposed to the passage of the bill unless section 3 is included in it. Mr. Gompers called my attention to the fact that it is all very well to ask him to keep labor loyal and at work; he has done that, and he has been complimented on the floor of the Senate by many Senators who were opposed to section 3 of the bill as contained in the conference report on yesterday; but Senators can easily see that if Mr. Gompers can not prevent legislation of that kind he will very soon lose the very salutary influence that he has over labor, organized and unorganized.

It has been my fear all winter and all the spring that the Senate would take some such action as was taken yesterday; that is, adopt some law that might be construed by a court somewhere to prevent peaceful strikes. If we could prevent strikes by legislation, if we could make labor more efficient by statute, that would be a very easy solution of the problem; but the only thing that laboring men have with which to improve their condition is their refusal to work and their ability to unite for that purpose, for it is easy for anyone to see that the single laborer has no power against aggregated capital. It is only when labor has the same right to organize to enforce its views that it can stand up against capital. The experience of the labor movement has been that when labor is weak capital will refuse to arbitrate; when labor is strong, labor will refuse to arbitrate That is so wherever the labor movement has been developed to an advanced stage.

I think it is conceded—I know that my friend from Illinois has expressed himself quite unfavorably to Mr. Gompers in the past—and I think the Senator himself must admit that Mr. Gompers has tried patriotically and earnestly to keep labor at work for the benefit of war activities.

I merely wanted to make this little statement to show the attitude of Mr. Gompers toward legislation of this kind, not with any idea of stirring up the old trouble, because I believe that the vote on yesterday is probably a fair test of the attitude of the Senate on the question of preventing strikes.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator before he takes his seat, and it is inspired by my confidence in the clarity of the Senator's judgment as a lawyer. I understand the Senator to state that Mr. Gompers's objection was that this legislation should not be passed without section 3 being included; that I understood; but what I should like to know is the Senator's opinion. Does he think that the bill without section 3 would penalize a peaceful strike?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. KNOX. That is contrary to the impression that I myself received from reading the bill, and I am very glad to know what the Senator's position is.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it is not a matter of snapshot judgment with me, for there has been no question in which I have been so deeply interested for the past 20 years as that of organized labor and its proper advancement. I have never advocated or encouraged the use of force in connection with strikes. I think that is a mistake from every standpoint. In the first place, it leads to lawlessness; and, in the second place, it defeats the object of those who are on strike. Strikes can not be successful unless they are heartily backed by public opinion; and as soon as there is anything lawless about a strike, the better element, which controls public opinion, will make the strike unsuccessful. That is recognized by Mr. Gompers and other leading labor men just as well as it is recognized by me.

Any bill which makes it an offense for men to agree together or to conspire to obstruct or hinder the manufacture of any article will be sure to be construed by some judge who has to pass upon it to include an agreement to quit work in that occupation. There are many cases in the reports where statutes of that kind have been so construed.

As the distinguished Senator well knows, the matter first arose in the construction of the Sherman Antitrust Act. It was not understood by those who passed that law that it would prevent the ordinary peaceful strike, but it was so construed. I myself think it was a wrong construction; but that construction will undoubtedly be followed by similar constructions in the case of other statutes.

A year ago I expressed myself on this question in connection with the bill to permit priority of shipments on railroads. The same question was then up and debated. Good lawyers, honest men, sincere citizens actually believed that the bill as drawn could not be construed to prevent peaceful strikes. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] agreed with me that the bill could be so construed, and probably would be, and he cooperated with me to get a section placed in the bill that would allow peaceful strikes. That amendment was placed in the bill with the concurrence of the Senate, was retained by the House, and is in the law to-day.

The same question arose a year ago under the food-control bill. At that time I offered an amendment substantially like section 3 of the sabotage bill, and that amendment was adopted by the Senate. It went out in conference; but I was assured by the members of the conference committee that if they had understood the importance of it it would not have gone out. I was afterwards asked to introduce a bill proposing to amend the food-control law to accomplish the desired object; but I really felt then, as I feel now, that a majority of the Senate actually believe it is better to prohibit peaceful strikes by legislation. I think that is their attitude. I regret it exceedingly, but that is why I did not continue the fight yesterday. I think we got a fair expression of the views of the Senate on the subject of preventing peaceful strikes.

I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his very kind attitude toward me, and I shall be glad to answer in the same spirit any question that he cares to submit.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, there is no real difference between the views expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and my own in regard to the right of workmen to protect themselves by peaceful strikes. I had occasion 21 years ago, while I was still in private life practicing law, happening at that time to be the president of the Pennsylvania Bar Association, to express views upon that subject in an address, from which views I have not deviated. I have always been of the opinion that from the time when, owing to the necessities of modern complex civilization, the law permitted the aggregation of capital for the transaction of business and for the furtherance of the interests of capital, the combination of labor for its own protection became a logical necessity.

In the discussion the other day, in which I took no part except to ask a question, I was more interested in what I considered the absolute lack of necessity for the inclusion of section 3 in the bill. While I am perfectly certain that the Senator from New Hampshire is correct in his statement that there may be judges who entertain certain curious and peculiar notions about the relations of capital and labor to each other, and about the relations of capital and labor to society, who might put some forced or unnatural construction upon this or any other statute; yet for myself I feel that in legislating or in giving my vote to any proposed scheme of legislation I am to act upon my own judgment as to the natural and normal meaning of words; and for the life of me, Mr. President, I can not see how this statute as proposed without section 3 could be held to apply to a peaceful strike. I predicate that opinion upon language which is so explicit that it seems to me to be beyond the possibility of conjecture.

In order for one to be penalized—and remember that this statute is not a statute applicable to laboring men alone; it is applicable to all men; it is as applicable to the manufacturer who throws his material into the river to prevent it reaching the Government which needs it as it is to the laborer who might light a fuse to explode a bomb which would destroy a plant or in any other way interfere with the operations of a plant—this measure says:

> SEC. 2. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy or * * * interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation—
>
> Shall be subject to a certain penalty.

Mr. President, it seems to me that there are several things that have to be conjoined to make out an offense under this measure. The man charged with violating the provisions of the statute must have reason to believe, in the first place, that his act, whatever that act may be, whether it be the stoppage of work, the destruction of property, or the destruction of the means of carrying on enterprises which are essential to the United States, will interfere with the United States; and, further, he shall then after having had reason to believe the necessary consequence of his act to be interference with the United States with that belief in his mind, he shall willfully injure or destroy property, and that injury or destruction which must be willful upon his part, must be intended to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States in the prosecution of the war.

This matter has been discussed here for the last few days. Coming, as I do, from a State employing vast numbers of workmen; coming from a city where union labor is very general, and having an intimate and close personal knowledge of many of the leaders of union labor, I am glad to say that I have not received the slightest intimation from any constituent of mine that he wanted any provision written into that bill that would impliedly permit him to do any of these things. I know of no man engaged in any of the activities of life which are commonly denominated labor who claims the privilege, with knowledge that a specific act will interfere with the United States, willfully to proceed to interfere with the United States by the destruction of property with the intent of obstructing the prosecution of this war.

My position, Mr. President, is that there is no necessity for this section under a proper construction of the bill; but if I thought, as the Senator from New Hampshire evidently thinks, that this bill was intended to or could by any legitimate construction interfere with a proper effort upon the part of labor through peaceful strikes to redress grievances or to insure proper conditions of employment, I would be opposed to it as now proposed and in this form.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania permit a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Gompers is quoted as saying:

> There is now going on in the Halls of Congress a discussion of the proposal for legislation making participation in a strike an offense heavily punishable.

I should like to ask the Senator if the language used in this bill in defining and describing the offenses provided for thereunder does not negative the idea of participation in a peaceful strike being punishable?

Mr. KNOX. That question is necessarily answered by the interpretation that I have placed upon the statute, and, of course, its answer depends upon the interpretation that the individual making the answer places upon the statute.

Mr. CUMMINS obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment? I want to make a very brief reply to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CUMMINS. Would the Senator prefer to make it now?

Mr. HOLLIS. It will take but a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire if he thinks it better to make it now than a moment later.

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, did the Senator from Iowa wish to address himself to what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said?

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. HOLLIS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he wanted to speak on another subject.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will indulge me just a moment, for I have been very deeply interested in legislation of this character in times past, and I have consistently and earnestly opposed any enactment that would take away from the laboring men of the country the right to strike peacefully. I have understood the term "strike" to mean the cessation of employment or work in a body, or by concert. I am still as earnestly in favor of the right to strike peacefully in normal times as I ever was, because the strike is the only instrument which labor has in its struggle with capital or with employers. There is but one alternative if we deprive the laboring man of the right to strike. That alternative is the settlement, final and conclusive, by the Government of the dispute.

I have believed that in peaceful times it was far better to permit the strike than to assume this additional function upon the part of the Government. I believe, however, that in this time, when the energies of all the people of the United States are imperatively demanded in order to carry on successfully the war in which we are engaged, we must give up for the time being the right to strike; but I am not in favor of surrendering that right through legislation unless something else is substituted for it. If I had had the opportunity which I thought I would have yesterday morning to express my views upon the conference report, I would have stated that in my judgment it is the duty of the conference committee to take these amendments which were proposed to our bill in the House of Representatives and convert them into a statute which will provide a Government tribunal composed of impartial and high-minded men, who will take every dispute of this kind relating to wages and to conditions of labor and will determine the dispute, and that pending the war that determination shall be binding upon both employer and employee, and that so long as we are at war there shall be no concerted cessation of work.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will yield to the Senator from Idaho in just a moment. When peace comes again, and with it those principles of social and industrial life which I have always felt to be sound and which I have advocated, I want to resume again the full liberty on the part of labor to agree to quit work whenever labor sees fit to quit work, always assuming that there is no interference with the right of any other person to work and no violation of the peace laws of the country, whether of the State or of the Nation.

I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I infer from the Senator's argument that he is of the opinion that this measure without section 3 would prevent peaceful strikes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am constrained to differ from the Senator from Pennsylvania with regard to the matter. I think that under the decisions—of which there have been many—the latter part of section 3 can be construed, and will be construed, to make it unlawful for laboring men to agree with each other to quit work in concert.

Mr. KNOX. I beg the Senator's pardon; he said "the latter part of section 3."

Mr. CUMMINS. The latter part of section 2. I have not the bill before me, but it is the part which the Senator from Pennsylvania did not read. He read the first part, but he did not read the latter part.

Mr. KNOX. I shall be very glad if the Senator from Iowa will read anything that bears upon any matter to which I have referred.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will read the part which is in my mind. After the quotation made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, so far as I heard it, section 2 then proceeds:

> Or, whoever—

Now, this is a distinct offense—

> Or, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

It may be that the Senator from Pennsylvania read that paragraph, but if he did, I did not catch it. Now, it is my judgment, answering the Senator from Idaho, that if, as I said the other day, a number of men engaged in any factory turning out useful war materials should agree with each other that they would refuse to longer work in their accustomed way, for the purpose of coercing—and that is the purpose of a strike—their employer to pay them higher wages or give them better conditions under which to work, that would be a violation of that part of the section.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It is possible that that construction might be placed upon it, but I had not believed that the law without section 3 would prevent a peaceful strike. I would want to give some time to a measure before I should vote for a law which would prevent a peaceful strike, for two reasons: One as a matter of policy and the other on the question of our power to pass that kind of a law. It did not occur to me—although I was not here, and was not privileged to vote on it at all—that this law would have that effect, and I do not think it would. It seems to me that the law without section 3 would not prevent peaceful strikes.

Mr. CUMMINS. There may very well be differences of opinion about it. There have been differences of opinion among judges respecting language which is somewhat akin to this. But I do not find it difficult to reach the conclusion that judges may construe that language to prevent a peaceful strike, and I do not think a peaceful strike should be forbidden and made criminal unless the United States furnishes some other way in which to settle the dispute between the employer and the employee; and I suggested to the Senator in charge of the bill so far as the Senate is concerned that I hoped the conference committee would prepare and present, in lieu of these amendments, legislation of that character.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am exceedingly gratified that the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has made the statement that he has made this morning. It does him very much more credit, after his experience and his distinguished service to the country, to express those views than it possibly could do me. It does any man credit to express those views who is not likely to be called a socialist.

The Senator, if he were a court sitting upon the construction of section 2, would undoubtedly rule in accordance with the opinion he has expressed; but if I were the counsel prosecuting men out on strike, I could make a very strong argument in favor of conviction under the latter part of the section to which the Senator from Iowa has called attention, and which I supposed was under consideration day before yesterday. The latter part of the section does not require a willful intent to injure or destroy. It merely requires that the person out on strike shall, with intent—not willful intent, but with full knowledge of the facts—to interfere with the United States or an associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war or conspire—that is, agree with some one else—to prevent the erection or production of war premises, war material, or war utilities.

In my judgment there can be no doubt that any fair court would hold that if I, a workman in such a plant, should agree with my neighbor workman that we would withdraw our labor in the hope of getting higher wages, we would be liable, because there would be a conspiracy, there would be an agreement between two persons, to do what? To cease work. And why cease work? In order to put pressure on the managers of the factory to give us higher wages; and the only way you can put pressure on the managers of the factories to get higher wages is to prevent their producing their materials in the quantities desired.

If Senators voted yesterday morning against the conference report, believing that the only offense described in section 2 was the willful injury or destruction of factories or materials, then the Senate ought to recall that vote and vote again. I hope that the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate will bear in mind the discussion to-day, and give us another opportunity to vote on this very important matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. Had the Senator about concluded?

Mr. HOLLIS. I shall be through in a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me make this suggestion: We are waiting to pass legislation that will make it possible for 123,000 alien soldiers to be naturalized, so that they can be sent out of the country. The legislation has been already long delayed, and I hope no general debate on the labor question will be pursued so that we can not take up this legislation. The departments are urging it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I hope the Senator will indulge me for a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I did not mean to interfere with the Senator's observations.

Mr. HOLLIS. I agree pretty nearly with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I think that we might well do in this country, if it is necessary, what has been done in England, where the English Government has taken under its entire control munition factories and has prohibited strikes, and at the same time has limited profits. That is, it has fixed a profit of one and one-fifth times the standard profit. The standard profit was the profit existing in that industry during the two years prior to the breaking out of the war. The profits are limited, the men are prohibited from striking, and the employers are prohibited from discharging the men.

I had hoped that at some time we would have before the Senate a well-rounded, inclusive proposition which would handle the subject from the public standpoint in every relation. If that is done, we may get something; but I wish to say further, and then I am through, that that is not necessary, because under this distinguished commission, with Mr. Taft and other friends of the conservative view at its head, there now exists a voluntary agreement between labor and capital which is already in operation, and which will make legislation on the part of Congress unnecessary, I believe.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. There is one observation that the Senator from New Hampshire has just made which may be misconstrued—namely, that Great Britain has taken over the control of the munition plants. The Senator meant, of course—at least I think he meant—that Great Britain merely exercises supervisory care in their work; but it does not operate the plants——

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. KING. Or determine who shall work——

Mr. HOLLIS. No.

Mr. KING. Or fix wages, or anything of that kind.

Mr. HOLLIS. It does. It takes control of the plants, fixes the profits, fixes the conditions of labor, prohibits strikes, and prohibits the discharge of the men.

Mr. KING. But it does not take the plants out of the control of the individual owners of the plants.

Mr. HOLLIS. Not beyond the extent I have indicated.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator stated a while ago that he took the vote on the conference report yesterday to express a desire on the part of the Senate to prevent peaceful strikes. Now, I should just like to say to the Senator that that is not true as to my vote. I voted against the conference report simply because I was satisfied in my own mind that it did not prevent peaceful strikes. I would not vote for a proposition that would prevent peaceful strikes. At any rate, I would not vote for it until, as the Senator from Iowa suggested, full provision was made to cover a situation of that character. I think I am almost in perfect accord with the views of the Senator from New Hampshire. I will say that if there is a reasonable doubt about this provision permitting peaceful strikes, I would vote to reconsider, contrary to my vote yesterday.

Mr. HOLLIS. Let me ask the Senator, if there is any doubt, why not make it clear and make it unmistakable?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I say. If there should be any doubt about it in my mind, and if any doubt should be created by discussion, I would vote to make it clear.

Mr. HOLLIS. The House by a majority vote expressed a doubt when they adopted section 3, and what clearer proof could there be that there is a substantial doubt on this very question? I am glad to know the Senator's view.

Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. KIRBY, and others addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator from Illinois first addressed the Chair, and I yield to him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not intend to take the time of the Senate now in discussing this question. I will do that at the proper time; but I want to ask the Senator if the issue joined by the statement, assuming that the report is true made by Mr. Gompers, does not neutralize, or tend to neutralize, his former patriotic effort? Loyal is as loyal does. Whatever his view may be to subordinate the American Federation of Labor to any local union, it is, as I take it, a direct indication that in the event the bill should mature into a law without section 3, he expresses his opinion that in the case of two workingmen acting in combination, the law can not be enforced even if it is made.

Mr. HOLLIS. I understand it is not a threat but a prophecy, and in that prophecy I join with Mr. Gompers. I do not believe that a law to prohibit peaceful strikes in this country can be enforced, and when I say that I do not express any opinion as to whether I think it ought to be. I doubt the physical possibility of enforcing such a law, and I think that Mr. Gompers intended to express his opinion on that subject. He may be wrong, and I may be wrong, but I think we all agree that if there is any doubt about it it ought not to be tried out at this time except under the spur of the most dire necessity.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, in the utmost good faith, impressed with a deep sense of the issue we face, I can say that the waste in six months which I think was accurately shown in the report that was read can not be met by the American people in organized Government and compete with our enemies in the field of battle. Whatever Mr. Gompers may think, whether his prophecy is a threat or a prediction, I shall not stop to inquire at this time. I trust it is a mere prophecy. I wish to think that Mr. Gompers is sincerely loyal, and I do think so, together with Mr. Morrison and others of the American Federation of Labor. I have read their statements, I think, in the same spirit, and I am taking it for granted that they are as sincerely loyal as anybody in this country. It is with that in view that I read with a great sense of disappointment the statement of Mr. Gompers, which to me is not in keeping with his former declaration. I regret that such a statement is made, and I took early occasion, as I did in the Senate, to bring the attention of the public to the statement, in order that those who are charged in the conference committee with the settlement of this omission or inclusion of section 3, as the case may be, may have the benefit of whatever may be developed by a discussion of this kind.

I do not question Mr. Gompers's good faith. We have had our differences in the western country and have fought them out in various tribunals. I will not renew that at this time. I am ready to meet it at proper occasion; but I am taking Mr. Gompers's efforts as loyal as those of the Senator from New Hampshire or mine, and that he will in all proper ways help strengthen the Government in its effort to overcome the public enemy.

As to the losses, however, that are shown by this report, equal to a factory employing a thousand men for 21 years, 300 days in the year, not even the magnificent industrial resources of the American people can stand a loss of that kind any more than we can stand dumping steel billets or armor plate into the Atlantic Ocean and say we can keep up our resources indefinitely with a waste of that kind. Man power is just as important industrially as it is in a military sense. I trust that Mr. Gompers and his associates and and all who are to handle the question in detail of the 3,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor will take the view finally that the law of this Republic, whatever it may be, will be the law that will in good faith be essential to be obeyed, and that he will advise those under his jurisdiction to obey it to the end that such industrial waste may cease.

We should utilize our resources in a better way than we are utilizing them now, both in men and material. I have no reference now to the management by Government authorities; I am not to be understood at all as making any criticism; but if we do not avail ourselves of our resources in an organized way and in a more frugal method we can not be successful in this struggle. It is an economic war as well as a military one. The wasting of the economic resources, either in day's work or material or loss of opportunity to prepare war material, is just as vital to us as preparing men by drill in an encampment and sending them to the point of action. All the Military Committee and this Senate can do, all that Congress can do, will come to naught unless these same men when sent into the field of battle are backed by the resources up to as near 100 per cent as human government can produce. It is because of that that I have felt a deep sense of disappointment that Mr. Gompers saw fit to deliver himself of this utterance, and I make the criticism not in a hostile spirit but in a spirit in which I feel I would join cordially with Mr. Gompers to produce the result notwithstanding all the differences we may have had in past years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I bespeak the indulgence of the Senate for a very few minutes. When this matter was under discussion the other day, I called attention to the fact that as chairman of a special committee of the Senate I had made a report touching upon labor questions which existed 25 years ago. It was during the Homestead strike, a very troublesome question at that time, even involving the use of the Regular Army to some extent and of Pinkerton's detectives. That committee was composed of men of both political parties and they unanimously agreed upon a report, which is before me.

I simply want to detain the Senate long enough to ask the Secretary to read the first six findings of that committee and then to ask him to read the concluding paragraph of the report. I will say before the reading that the position I held 25 years ago on this question I have held consistently ever since and hold to-day, and while I have many times been misrepresented and made to appear as the enemy of the laboring men, and all that sort of thing, the record made in that investigation is my full justification for the views that I now hold, and which I have held during the quarter of a century that has elapsed since the report was made.

I ask that what I have indicated be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. Reading from Senate report, second session, Fifty-second Congress, Report No. 1280, page 14:

Your committee have reached these conclusions:

(1) Rights of employers and workmen are equal and persons and property should be jealously guarded and protected.

(2) Employers have an undoubted right, provided they fulfill their agreements, to employ and dismiss men at pleasure.

(3) Workmen can legally organize for mutual protection and improvement.

(4) When dissatisfied with the wages paid or the hours of labor they should attempt to arbitrate their differences with a view to an amicable adjustment.

(5) Failing in this, the workmen have a right to discontinue work either singly or in a body.

(6) Having discontinued work they have no right, legal or moral, to undertake by force or intimidation to keep others from taking their places or to attempt to occupy, injure, or destroy the property of their employers.

* * * * * * *

CONCLUSION.

Your committee recognizes the gravity of the existing conflict between employers and workmen in this country. In the final test of our institutions this may play an important part, and hence anything that tends to mitigate the evil should be welcomed by all. Our investigations have led us to conclude that the fault is not wholly on one side and that both employers and the employed should be willing and anxious to find a middle ground upon which they can meet and adjust their differences without strikes, riots, bloodshed, or suffering. That middle ground seems to be in the direction of arbitration. When that principle is recognized, the chasm which now exists between these two classes will be closed to a large extent, the necessity for the use of armed force, if it ever existed, will be done away with, and a new order of things—that of good will and kindly feeling—will take the place of the hates and the bitterness which now prevail in many of our industrial communities. To that end we bespeak the cooperation of all patriotic citizens, and your committee will welcome any legislation which will tend to secure the laboring man his every right without depriving the employer of his; for both are guaranteed by the Constitution and the laws of the land.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will simply add that having held to those views as long as 25 years ago and not having changed my views I still entertain them. I did not believe that the bill we were considering a few days ago denied the right of laboring men to organize, nor did I believe that it denied the right to engage in a peaceful strike. I think that when we are in war it is a very unfortunate time for laboring men to strike for any purpose that can possibly be avoided, but I take it for granted, and I conceded when I addressed myself to the Senate before, that if we had no law on the statute books denying the men that right I did not believe that the provision in the bill with the section that I objected to out of the bill did deny them that right. Hence I voted against agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, holding the views that I do concerning the matter under discussion I feel it incumbent upon me to express those views as briefly as possible, because I believe it would be an act of political cowardice not to do so, and I think political cowardice to-day is just as much to be criticized in Congress as physical cowardice in the trenches.

I voted against this conference report yesterday because I did not want to see embodied in the statute, nor do I want to see nor will it be by my vote, the right of employees engaged in the production of articles vitally necessary to be used in the United States in carrying on this war to carry on a strike which will prevent the production of such necessities in any way, no matter for what reason ostensibly the strike may be called.

I hope I make myself perfectly plain about the matter, because I do not want my position to be misunderstood. The law as it stands now would prevent such strikes. To adopt section 3 as it is contained in the conference report is affirmatively to permit such strikes. The law upon the statute books now prohibits this character of strikes. The law upon the statute books now provides a remedy in lieu of a strike.

The law upon the statute books now provides that the President of the United States can confiscate, commandeer, take over every factory or every enterprise of any kind or character whatsoever in the United States whenever he may deem it necessary. Much has been said about the conscription of labor. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] asked the question, "Why not conscript wealth and capital and factories, and so forth?" and indicated—or at least the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] did in a direct statement say that he would vote to conscript the wealth and then to conscript labor. We have provided how the factories can be conscripted. I do not at this time, certainly in a measure such as this, advocate the conscription of labor. As a general proposition, I have announced my position before, and I announce it again, that before we win this war, if that is the object for which we continue to strive, we will conscript every man and woman in the United States. I think we should now provide, not for the permission to the President to conscript but for the conscription of every man and woman in the United States for the service of the United States and provide that they shall be classified for labor for necessary service exactly as we provide that they shall be classified under the provisions of the draft act for military service. I believe that until we meet this proposition face to face and adopt measures of that character this democracy, which is proving every day its inefficiency, will go down before the most efficient power that this world has ever known.

Mr. President, on the statute to-day we have a provision authorizing the President of the United States, whenever he deems it necessary, to take over every factory, every enterprise of every kind or character in the United States. Conscription of wealth in this line, conscription of the instrument of production, is provided for.

I premise by saying that I would never vote for any provision allowing a strike in any necessary war industry to-day, although bona fide for the purpose of increasing wages. I will not so vote, because there is a provision now by which the laboring man in every such industry can obtain the wages which justly should be paid him. It is contained in exactly the same provision by which the President is authorized to commandeer or conscript wealthy manufacturers and all enterprise necessary to the conduct of the war. Let there be a dispute between the laboring man in any factory or in any enterprise engaged in production necessary for the conduct of the war, let there be a bona fide dispute in reference to wages, all that is necessary is for the wage earner, the employee in such factory or enterprise, to present the matter, not to a mediation board, but directly to the President of the United States, who then has it in the power given him by the Congress of the United States nearly a year ago to say to such employer, "You must arrange this matter so as to continue production; you must arrange with your employees; and if you do not so arrange, I shall continue the production, and under the provisions of the law I shall pay these employees out of such production; and if the products do not furnish me with the funds with which to pay such wages, through the taxing power vested in the Government I shall raise from the people of the United States by direct taxes a sufficient amount to enable me properly to compensate these wage earners, these employees, for their labor." The law is ample as it stands.

I heard the Senator from New Hampshire ask yesterday "Why conscript labor?" There is no proposition pending here to conscript labor. When the President takes over one of these enterprises there is no law by which he can force any man in the employ of that enterprise to work under any circumstances or for any salary. There should be, sir, a law allowing him to do so, and there will be such a law sooner or later, and, if not a law, then military necessity will dictate the action, and such action will be taken by the military power, or else you will go down to defeat, and your boasted liberty to your laboring man and the citizens of this country will amount to nothing. You will have lost it forever.

Mr. President, the provision in the draft act that the President of the United States might exempt certain classes of citizens was not intended to provide that a union-labor card should carry with it exemption from military service. The exemption was in the interest of the United States; it was not a favor granted by a congressional act to a laboring man, whether in the field or in the factory. That provision was placed there for the benefit of the United States, in order that the necessary labor might be continued in the necessary lines of production.

All this cry about the protection of the laboring man, such statements as came from Samuel Gompers yesterday, constitute a menace, in my mind, to the people of the United States. For myself I may be allowed possibly to say—at least I will say it—that I have worked harder with these hands than ever Samuel Gompers did, and I commenced at an earlier age than he. Mr. President, we have provided for conscripting wealth; we have provided for commandeering and for conscripting every interest in the United States which is owned by every man who has a dollar. Now, here you would hold out to the laboring man that, simply upon the question of a dollar, he shall have exemption from the operation of the law, although the employer or the capitalist who measures his dollar is by the voice of honorable Senators condemned to obloquy and shame and contempt; and yet you provide that upon a question of a dollar the laboring man who votes in your district shall have protection which you extend to no other class.

Senators, I said on the 22d day of February a year ago that the crisis confronting this country was not that which might be the result of any foreign negotiations or foreign complications, but was that being brought about by social evolutions and conditions in our own country; that it was then the question in my mind, as it is to-day, whether this country can perpetuate itself and whether this republican, democratic representative form of government, of which we have boasted for 150 years, shall continue on the earth. You are going to be compelled to meet these conditions. You, the Congress, have not been meeting them; you have been delegating the authority or the power and shirking the responsibility, casting it through the doors of the White House; you have not been, in my judgment, meeting the crisis of doing your duty as the different phases of the crisis have confronted you from time to time.

Ample law now is given for the protection of the laboring man, but there is no provision whatever for conscripting labor. No law whatsoever rests upon the statute books to-day which will prevent the President of the United States from taking over every industry in the United States and conducting it as he sees fit under the provisions of the act which you have passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to ask the Senator this question: Taking the case of a factory where there is difficulty between the employer and the employees, the Senator says that the President can say, "You must adjust this difference or I will take over your factory." Does the Senator mean to say that in an instance of that kind, if the workers decide not to proceed to work in a bone fide effort to secure better conditions or better pay or better hours, they would be violating any law which we now have?

Mr. FALL. I think so, clearly.

Mr. FLETCHER. To what statute does the Senator from New Mexico refer?

Mr. FALL. Under section 9 of the food-control act. I will call the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should just like to see what that provision is.

Mr. FALL. Very well, sir.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand it goes to that extent.

Mr. FALL. Of course there may be a difference of construction.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would agree with the Senator that in such a case the President would have the power to take over the factory, but that would not be the same thing as saying that the workers who refuse to continue work would be violating the law.

Mr. FALL. I shall undertake to show the Senator that, in my judgment, they would be violating the law when they conspire together to strike even for higher wages. I think that it was that provision of the law which the Senator from New Hampshire, when the bill was under consideration here, attempted to amend. I think it was to that his amendment was directed.

Understand me, that while the President can undoubtedly take over the packing plants, there is no provision that he can conscript into the service of the packing plants those now engaged in that industry or those whom he may seek to engage, but, in my judgment, there is a distinct provision to the effect that those conspiring now in the packing-plant industry, if there were any such, can be punished, and be punished very severely. I will read to the Senator the provision of the law. It is—

That any person——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I think there is a difference between a conspiracy and an ordinary coming together of workers.

Mr. FALL. The Senator, then, thinks that "combination" is a better expression. Very well. I will read and show the Senator that the law includes combinations.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FALL. I should like first to answer the Senator from Florida, and then I will yield with pleasure to the Senator from Kansas.

Section 9 of House bill 4961, known generally as the food-control act, provides:

That any person who conspires, combines, agrees, or arranges with any other person (a) to limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing, or dealing in any necessaries—

That is the first combination or conspiracy or act that is prohibited—

(b) to restrict the supply of any necessaries; (c) to restrict the distribution of any necessaries; (d) to prevent, limit, or lessen the manufacture or production of any necessaries in order to enhance the price thereof—

That is the only provision, namely, subsection (d), under which there is any statement whatsoever as to what the intent of the act should be; in other words, under subsection (d) the act there prohibited must be for the purpose of enhancing prices.

Now, section 12, to which I have referred as giving the power to the President to commandeer not only the packing plants but any plant of any kind or character whatsoever, includes:

Any factory, packing house, oil-pipe line, mine, or other plant, or any part thereof.

After taking them over the same section of the same law, generally known as the food-control act, provides:

The President is authorized to prescribe such regulations as he may deem essential for carrying out the purposes of this section, including the operation of any such factory, mine, or plant, or part thereof, the purchase, sale, or other disposition of articles used, manufactured, produced, prepared, or mined therein, and the employment, control, and compensation of employees.

Now, Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. THOMPSON. I merely desire to ask the Senator a question. The Senator made the statement that he thought the President had the power now to take over the packing houses. The Senator from New Mexico is an able lawyer, whose opinions are respected by this body, and I simply wish to ask whether he thinks under existing law that the President has that legal authority without the passage of some bill or resolution by Congress?

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly. The President not only has the power to take them over, to take them out of the hands of the owners, but he has the power to operate them, to control the labor, and to pay the labor whatever price he may fix.

The President of the United States, I think, is generally recognized—and I believe rightly so—as the friend of the laboring man. The President of the United States, it seems to me, can be trusted to do justice to the laboring man. As a matter of fact, I should like to see, as the Senator from New Hampshire says he would like to see, upon the statute books something broader than the power of the President of the United States simply to fix wages; but under this power the President has as much authority to-day as is given to any commission under the English law.

Under the English law they fix the basic wage, which the President can fix under the act to which I have referred. Under the English law they provide that every three months the scale of living should be reported upon; and they provide with reference to private industries which are under the control of the Government that, allowing a certain percentage for profits, paying the basic wage scales, if the profits or the earnings of such a corporation do not justify them in increasing by bonus every three months the wages of the employees to enable them to meet the increased living charges, then the taxpayers shall pay such bonus out of the general treasury. The President of the United States has the absolute authority, in my judgment, to do exactly the same thing. So, holding this power, simply by the statement to any employer, to any factory, or to any industry or those in charge of it, "I will use the power given me by Congress," such employer or the owner of such industry, no matter what he may think or what he may desire, will realize that he will be compelled to accede to the demand of his employees as indorsed by the President of the United States, for he will know that his entire plant, his entire industry, will be taken from him and operated by the United States under the provisions of this act, and for the compensation provided and no more.

Mr. President, this is the condition to-day. I say again, sir, that in my judgment political cowardice is as much to be reprehended and criticized as personal cowardice in the trenches. I say to-day that labor should be conscripted; that wealth should be conscripted; that neither should be conscripted except where it is absolutely necessary; but I again say that you will, in my judgment, find it necessary to go to the extreme limit or you will find this country in exactly the same condition in which poor Russia, dismembered and in anarchy, finds herself to-day.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. HARDWICK. From the Committee on Immigration I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 3132) which I send to the desk, and I submit a report (No. 388) thereon. I wish to make a brief statement to the Senate about the bill after the Secretary reads the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). The Senator from Georgia submits a report, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. Mr. HARDWICK, from the Committee on Immigration, reports favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to naturalization.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not object now, but I should like to hear the Senator make his statement before the question is put.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I was about to explain why it is necessary, in my judgment, that the Senate should proceed immediately to consider and pass this proposed legislation. We have in the first draft army of the United States 123,277 alien soldiers, some of whom undoubtedly might have claimed exemption, but did not. Of these soldiers, 46,732 hold their first naturalization papers and 76,545 have no naturalization papers whatever.

It is impossible, or at least it is unfair, to send these soldiers to the battle line in Europe until they have been naturalized and made citizens of this country, so that they will not be subjected to charges of treason against the governments and princes of whom they were formerly subjects. The War Department is not willing to subject these men to that sort of danger. It is not fair to them and it is not just to the country. They are scattered practically through every command in the Army, or in the new draft army, and it can not be moved as it ought to be moved until these soldiers can be put in a position where this difficulty will be eliminated.

Now, it seems to me that more important than any debate on any domestic question, more important than any dispute about labor, or more important than any bill about presidential powers over executive departments is a proposition to get the Army of the United States so that it can move to the battle line. This is the paramount reason why I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill as amended by the Senate committee. It is to give the authorities of this country, the War Department and the Navy Department, full power——

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. THOMPSON. Are these the men who are already drafted into the service?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; they are soldiers wearing the uniform already.

Mr. THOMPSON. And already trained?

Mr. HARDWICK. There are 123,000 of them already trained, under the flag, and wearing the uniform, who can not justly be sent over to Europe until this legislation is passed.

Mr. THOMPSON. There ought not to be any debate on that question.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; there will not be. Now, in order to be fair, let me state that there is more than that involved in this legislation. When the United States declared war, on April 6, 1917, of course aliens who came from Germany—and subsequently, when we declared war against Austria-Hungary, the same thing was true with reference to that country—could no longer become naturalized in this country. They became alien enemies, so that petitions that had already been filed under the naturalization laws and were already pending in court could not be prosecuted to a successful conclusion in court. The House of Representatives, realizing the injustice of this, passed some days ago a bill which provided that where naturalization petitions were pending and the first papers had been taken out prior to the declaration of the war with these countries the court could allow these people to become naturalized upon proper showing of loyalty and good citizenship.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had several communications on this subject, and on yesterday I referred a letter with relation to it to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who, I think, had introduced a bill on the subject. It seemed to me that something ought to be done. I simply rose to ask the Senator, because I have not had time to read the bill, precisely what the modus is that is prescribed in the bill. Does it, for instance, provide that this legislation is due to the fact that we are in war—that the emergency is because of that fact?

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, if the Senator pleases, this is war legislation; but by its terms and necessarily it can apply only to war conditions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is what I wanted to know.

Mr. HARDWICK. There would be no change in what would happen ordinarily in peace times; but this is an adjustment of our naturalization laws to the war conditions that now confront us.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is precisely what I wanted explained.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is also an effort to put the soldiers in a position where they can go abroad to fight under fair conditions. I do not think there ought to be any objection to its consideration; and if that question is disposed of I will undertake a brief explanation to the Senate of what the measure is.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what bill is this?

Mr. HARDWICK. This is the bill to amend the naturalization laws.

Mr. LODGE. Is it Order of Business 127?

Mr. HARDWICK. No, sir; it has just been reported, and is not on the calendar. The reason I am asking for its present consideration—the Senator from Massachusetts has just come in—is because I am advised by the military authorities of our Government, by both the War and the Navy Departments, that they have over 123,000 alien soldiers who ought to be started abroad at once, and who ought first to be naturalized.

Mr. LODGE. I wanted to know the nature of the bill, because Order of Business 127, Senate bill 2854, a bill to amend the naturalization laws, is a bill to which I have some very serious objections.

Mr. HARDWICK. The substance of this amendment which was worked out by the Committee on Immigration is a bill proposed just a few days ago by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], which is really, I think I can say with the consent of the Senator, and without any reflection on him, the department's proposition to readjust or modify the naturalization laws to meet war conditions. The paramount necessity, the immediate and urgent and pressing necessity for immediate consideration is that no matter what else we do or what else we strike out from the bill we must provide for the naturalization of these alien soldiers, who are wearing the uniform and who ought to be sent abroad.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to put any undue obstacle in the way of the bill, but this is a pretty long and elaborate bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It changes our naturalization laws. It is here in proof sheets. It has never been before us.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator that we are going to consider it very carefully. It will be printed by morning. I doubt if we can pass it during the day, but we ought to go on with its consideration. The report is a unanimous one, Senators on both sides of the Chamber agreeing to it. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to rush anything or to push anything on the Senate, except that we do believe—and then, when we state that to the Senate, our duty is discharged—that it is of the utmost importance that at least the feature of it to which I have referred should be acted on at once by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to delay the bill at all. The Senator knows that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know that.

Mr. LODGE. But I do want an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator will have that opportunity.

Mr. LODGE. I have not had such an opportunity so far. I have partially examined the bill now on the calendar.

Mr. HARDWICK. This bill is not on the calendar, except as it was reported this morning.

Mr. LODGE. The very first section of that bill is a very bad feature.

Mr. HARDWICK. What bill does the Senator refer to?

Mr. LODGE. Order of Business 127, Senate bill 2854, a bill to amend the naturalization laws.

Mr. HARDWICK. By whom was it introduced?

Mr. LODGE It was introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and reported by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who was then chairman of the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say to the Senator that that particular bill is not reported. It has been very much changed; and the bill that is the basis of this committee amendment was introduced only a very few days ago, according to my recollection.

Mr. LODGE. That bill has one provision in it, on the first page, which would thwart the very purpose of the treaties that we are now trying to establish. I want an opportunity to examine this bill. It is a subject in which I have taken a great deal of interest.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want the Senator to have it, and he knows that there will be no effort made to keep him from having it; but still I think the Senate ought to consider this question at once on account of one of the considerations I mentioned.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know, of course, how long the consideration of the bill will last; but I can not undertake to examine this bill, which is a very long and elaborate one, in five minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I understand; and I do not expect the Senate to pass the bill in five minutes. I expect it to be thoroughly explained and thoroughly understood by the Senate. I would not ask the Senate to pass a bill in any other way.

Mr. LODGE. I have not seen this one at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think that is true.

Mr. LODGE. But it seems to me that this bill ought to go on the calendar and be printed, so that we may have an opportunity to consider it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I hope the Senator will not object to its consideration to-day. There will be no disposition to press anything on the Senator from Massachusetts or any other Senator without consideration; but I will say to the Senator that the time has come when we ought to consider this bill. For weeks I have been trying to get this bill reported. In my judgment, it is sound legislation.

Mr. LODGE. I have no question that it ought to be considered.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not intend to try to take any snapshot judgment on the Senator or anybody else who differs with the committee about anything in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. But I wish the Senator would allow it to go over for a day and be printed, so that we can at least have an opportunity to look the bill over. I say, I should like to have it go over for a day and be printed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the Senator can have that done.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, it can not be taken up under the rules now.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; it can be.

Mr. LODGE. It has not yet been reported from the committee and gone to the calendar. One day has to elapse under the rules.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia has asked unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if unanimous consent was granted while I was out of the Chamber, I have nothing to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not been granted.

Mr. HARDWICK. As I have said, the Senator can object; but I hope he will not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia ought to be willing to let it go over for a day.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will have to if the Senator insists on it.

Mr. LODGE. This is a very elaborate bill. I do not want to object or delay its consideration for a moment, but I do want to have time to read the bill. It has not been printed or laid before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will suggest, the Senator having made the report, that he ask that it lie on the table, and to-morrow in the morning hour he can call it up. There probably will be no objection. I do not object to it now.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to object to it at all. I only want reasonable time to examine it. Here is a bill of many pages.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It is a bill altering a most important law, and no Senator has had any opportunity to read it except the members of the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is true. If the Senator takes that view, I will not insist, Mr. President, although I hate to do it.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will let it go over.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have at least discharged the responsibility on me in submitting the request.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to take advantage of the right to object, but I should like an opportunity to look at it; that is all.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask, then, Mr. President, in deference to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the report be printed——

Mr. LODGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his kindness. May I ask the Senator, before he takes his seat, whether this is a bill now on the calendar or a new bill?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; this is a Senate amendment to a House bill—H. R. 3132.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. This bill contains many of the provisions of the bill now on the calendar, but it has been almost entirely rewritten and many of the provisions in the other bill have been eliminated.

Mr. HARDWICK. We shall be very glad to have the benefit of the Senator's explanation of it.

Mr. LODGE. My attention was called only a day or two ago to the bill now on the calendar. It contains in the very first section a provision which, I say, would largely thwart the purpose of the treaties we are now making with Great Britain and Canada.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, if the Senator from Massachusetts can point out anything of that kind——

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether this bill contains it or not.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator can point out anything of that kind in the bill which the committee has reported, we shall be very happy to correct it, because we have no pride of opinion about it and no pride of authorship concerning it, and we only want to get the right kind of legislation passed.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know whether this bill contains it or not.

Mr. HARDWICK. In view of the Senator's position I will not insist to the point of forcing him to make an objection, although I do not want the responsibility to rest on me for delaying this legislation one day, the way I feel about it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I am not trying to put it on the Senator. I understand how he feels about it; but I do think it is of the utmost importance that this bill should be passed at the earliest possible moment, and I am willing to stay here all day and all night, as many days and as many nights as are necessary, until we get it through. I do not want to rush it on anybody. I am willing to consider it, and I wish the Senator could let us go on with it.

Mr. LODGE. The committee has had it under consideration since February 5?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is very much to ask that the Members of the Senate who are not fortunate enough to be on that committee should have one day.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia does not, either; and since that request is made, he asks that the bill and report be printed and lie on the table and gives notice that to-morrow morning he will call it up and insist on the Senate acting on the request for unanimous consent.

WAR MATERIAL AND WAR TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if it is in order now, in view of the discussion we have had to-day, and in view of the importance of the matter involved, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report on the bill that was considered yesterday was rejected, and, in accordance with the rules, to move that the House be requested to return the papers to the Senate.

Mr. HOLLIS. I will say that the bill to which the Senator refers is Senate bill 383.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not through with the regular order.

Mr. HOLLIS. The motion to reconsider is a privileged motion, and can be made at any time, as I understand. The motion is simply made—to lie on the table until it is called up.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The rule requires that the motion to request the House to return the papers shall be put at once, without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the motion of the Senator from Washington. Those in favor of the motion will say "Aye." [A pause.] Those opposed——

Mr. LODGE. What is the motion?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the question be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the substance of the motion.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] moves to reconsider the vote on the conference report on Senate bill 383, the so-called sabotage bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And he accompanies that with a motion to request the House to return the papers, which motion should be put first.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum is made. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	James	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Sutherland
Culberson	Kellogg	Phelan	Swanson
Cummins	Kendrick	Pittman	Thomas
Dillingham	King	Poindexter	Thompson
Fernald	Knox	Pomerene	Tillman
Fletcher	Lewis	Ransdell	Townsend
France	Lodge	Reed	Underwood
Gallinger	McCumber	Robinson	Wadsworth
Gore	McKellar	Saulsbury	Walsh
Hale	McNary	Shafroth	Warren
Harding	Martin	Sheppard	Weeks
Hitchcock	Nelson	Sherman	Wolcott
Hollis	New	Simmons

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained on official business.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] are detained on official business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. The junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber on public business.

Mr. REED. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day, and perhaps it may as well stand for several days, so that it will be understood, without a repetition of the statement, that he is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LODGE. Let the Chair state the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves to reconsider the vote on the conference report upon Senate bill 383, and that the Secretary request the House of Representatives to return the bill to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, while a quorum was being called I learned from the chairman of the committee that the House has accepted the request of the Senate for a conference. The bill is therefore in conference and can not be recalled by the action of one House. I make the point of order that the motion is out of order because the bill is already in conference.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to say on the point of order there is nothing to prevent the Senate from requesting that the papers be returned. If the conferees on the part of the House are willing to return the papers to the Senate, they have a perfect right to do so. We can not order it. The motion now is whether the Senate shall request the House to return the papers.

Mr. LODGE. The motion is to reconsider and ask the House to return the papers. The papers are not in the possession of the House; they are in the possession of the conferees.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the Senate been notified to that effect?

Mr. LODGE. I asked the chairman of the committee and was informed not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senate has no notice. Under the rules of the Senate a motion to reconsider can be made.

Mr. LODGE. On an ordinary bill there is no doubt about it, but the chairman told me the House had agreed to the conference. Therefore the bill is in the possession of the conferees.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not make any point one way or the other, but I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what is the parliamentary situation? I understand the Senator from Washington has made motion to reconsider. We have no notice here, but it is true that the House has granted the request of the Senate and appointed conferees. A conference is to be held in the morning. There is a motion here to reconsider. What are the conferees going to do in the morning?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. HOLLIS. The motion of the Senator from Washington is a privileged motion which can be entertained at any time. His motion to reconsider is not the question at this time, but it is accompanied by a motion that the House be requested to return the papers. The rule on that is that the "last motion shall be acted upon immediately and without debate, and if determined in the negative shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider." I ask that the vote be taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The unfinished business is before the Senate. A motion to reconsider is not privileged.

Mr. HOLLIS. The unfinished business must give way to a privileged motion.

Mr. LODGE. Under what rule is it privileged?

Mr. HOLLIS. Under Rule XIII, and the ruling——

Mr. CUMMINS. While the Senator is looking for the reference I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It is this: Has the Senator from North Carolina asked to lay aside the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the unfinished business was laid before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. On objection I could not lay it aside. I do not like to lay the unfinished business aside, but I should like to have the Senate determine the question whether the conferees are to meet in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will not ask if there is objection to laying it aside, because the Chair knows there is going to be objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that whatever may be the merits of the point of order it can not be decided, nor can the motion to reconsider be decided, so long as the unfinished business is before the Senate. Inasmuch as I intend to address the Senate upon that subject, I want to know whether the Senator from North Carolina asks to have it temporarily laid aside.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I say I can not do so if there is going to be objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Chair that a motion to reconsider, accompanied by a motion to request the House to return papers, was made before the hour of 2 o'clock arrived. Under the rule a motion to ask the House to return papers must be submitted immediately and without debate, and it should have been submitted. I take it that it has a privileged place, even ahead of the unfinished business.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Massachusetts made a point of order after 2 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The motion was made before 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. I made the point of order before 2.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not simply a motion to return the papers, but to reconsider the vote, and it is palpable that that is not a privileged motion. It never has been so treated in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not suggest that the motion to reconsider was a privileged motion, but there are two motions; one is a motion to reconsider, which will not be acted upon until the papers are here, and the other a motion to ask the House to return the papers, and under the rule that motion must be voted on immediately and without debate. It should have been immediately put.

Mr. HOLLIS. I read from Gilfry's Precedents, page 505, a ruling in the Thirty-fifth Congress, second session:

> A motion to reconsider may be entered as a privileged motion, but its consideration must be determined by a vote of the Senate.

It being a privileged motion, it may be entered at any time. That does not give the motion to reconsider a right to be considered or voted on at once, but a motion to reconsider in a case where the papers have gone out of the possession of the Senate must be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the papers, and there is a rule which makes it obligatory upon such a motion being made to have it acted upon immediately and without debate, and if determined in the negative to be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider.

The Chair had put that motion. The vote was taken viva voce, but the Chair did not declare the result. Now, we are entitled to have a vote and a decision on the motion to have the papers returned. Otherwise this rule would be boy's play and futile. The Senate has a right to decide whether it wants to have the papers returned.

Mr. LODGE. The Chair did not put the motion because I made the point of no quorum, and a quorum being developed I made the point of order that the papers could not be recalled because the House had agreed to the conference, and one House can not control a conference. When the papers are in conference it requires the action of both Houses.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the record will show that the Chair did put the motion and called for a vote on the motion. The Chair expressly put the question for the affirmative and the ayes responded, and the Chair put the question for the negative vote and the noes responded, and at that time the Senator from Massachusetts rose and desired to know what motion was being put, and thereupon suggested the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate, of course, has a right to decide upon any ruling of the Chair. The Chair will rule that the motion to request the return of the papers is in order and should be acted upon by the Senate without debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have to appeal from that decision as the papers are in the hands of the conference committee and can not be returned by a vote of one body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senate has no official notification of that state of fact, but an appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will state it.

Mr. REED. It has been repeatedly said that we had no official notice of the fact that the House appointed conferees. In such a case I understand it is not the custom of one House to notify the other when a conference has been asked and they have actually appointed conferees. They notify when they have agreed to or rejected the conference report. The action of the House speaks for itself. If the House has acted, then the fact has been fixed. It does not require notice here to fix the fact. The question is, Is it a fact? That is not to be determined by our notice, but by what the House has done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. While on my feet I meant to make the very suggestion the Senator from Missouri has made, that we are not notified officially that the House agrees to appoint conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state one point which is troublesome here. If the statement be true that the Senate can not request the return of papers after they have gone into conference, then it would not be possible at any time to reconsider the action of the Senate after a measure had gone to conference.

Mr. LODGE. It is not.

Mr. GALLINGER. The very point I would make is that the papers are in the hands of the conference, and they can make any report they please. They can open this entire subject by making a report. That is the only method by which it can be done under our rules.

Mr. LODGE. The message was received yesterday by the House, and the chairman says the conferees have been appointed. I never understood that in such a case papers could be recalled by one House from the other, because there can then be no joint action. I merely want to make that point against the ruling. There must be a cessation of discussion somewhere, and there is until it has been acted on by the other House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate may decide that question. Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained? [Putting the question.]

Mr. RANSDELL and Mr. PITTMAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JAMES (when Mr. BECKHAM's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained on official business, and that he would vote "yea" if here.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. In this instance I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague [Mr. STONE] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). Having a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], I withhold my vote

The roll call having been concluded,

Mr. HOLLIS. I was requested to state that the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] is temporarily absent on official business.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I note that he has not voted; but in view of the fact that he made a speech against this measure in the Senate the other day, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. CALDER. Is the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is not.

Mr. CALDER. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. KNOX. I have a pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. HARDWICK (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and let my vote stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are necessarily detained on official business.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is detained on official business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Culberson	Kendrick	Pittman	Simmons
Fletcher	Lewis	Pomerene	Smith, Md.
Henderson	McKellar	Ransdell	Swanson
Hollis	McNary	Robinson	Thompson
James	Martin	Saulsbury	Tillman
Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Shafroth
Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Sheppard
Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Shields

NAYS—35.

Bankhead	Harding	Nelson	Sterling
Cummins	Hardwick	New	Thomas
Dillingham	Hitchcock	Norris	Townsend
Fall	Kellogg	Page	Underwood
Fernald	King	Penrose	Vardaman
France	Kirby	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Knox	Reed	Warren
Gore	Lodge	Sherman	Weeks
Hale	McCumber	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—31.

Ashurst	Brandegee	Colt	Goff
Baird	Broussard	Curtis	Gronna
Beckham	Calder	Frelinghuysen	Johnson, S. Dak.
Borah	Chamberlain	Gerry	Kenyon

La Follette	Smith, Ariz.	Stone	Watson
McLean	Smith, Mich.	Sutherland	Williams
Myers	Smith, S. C.	Trammell	Wolcott
Owen	Smoot	Walsh

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the decision of the Chair is not sustained, and the unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is rather a parliamentary mix-up now. I am chairman of the committee of conference, and have called the conferees to meet in the morning.

Mr. LODGE. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand; but it does not reach the motion to reconsider.

Mr. LODGE. It throws out the motion. I made the point of order against the motion. The motion has been sustained by a vote of the Senate. The point of order went to the whole motion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not understand whether it went to the whole motion or not. I just want to know where I am; that is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from North Carolina will remember, of course, that a motion to reconsider can not be made until the papers are brought back. The Senate has decided that the papers can not be brought back under the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Allow me to make a suggestion. The only question decided was that the motion which the Chair was beginning to put is not now in order. There has been no adverse decision as to the motion itself or on the merits of the motion. The motion can be put at any time the Senator from Washington desires to offer it.

Mr. LODGE. The motion was made. A point of order was made against the entire motion, and of course when the point of order was sustained the motion falls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that, inasmuch as the Senate refused to recall the papers, the motion to reconsider is not in order; and, in view of the action of the Senate, it sustains the point of order against the entire motion.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Chair that the question was not whether the papers should be recalled. The only question was whether the motion should be put or not, and on that question——

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Chair was overruled. The question was not before the Senate, whether the papers should be recalled or not. The Chair was proceeding to put the motion, and a point of order was made that the motion could not be put because the unfinished business was before the Senate. The Chair held otherwise. On an appeal from the decision of the Chair the Chair was reversed, so that it stands now precisely as it stood before, with the motion made by the Senator from Washington pending; but on account of the unfinished business intervening that motion is in abeyance.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. My point of order is that the Chair has made a decision, and, no appeal being made, the decision of the Chair must stand—that the motion to recall the papers with a view to reconsidering the vote was adversely acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the Senator from New Hampshire is right, but is glad to hear the opinion of the Senator from Florida. The unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3771, is before the Senate.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to draw the attention of the Senate to a brief discussion of the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, which is now the unfinished business of the Senate. I listened with the deepest interest to the able, good-tempered, interesting observations of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. It is needless to say that I acquit him of any purpose to challenge the loyalty or the good faith of any of his colleagues.

I listened to the illogical, though fascinating, eloquence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. I freely acquit him of any intent to challenge the good citizenship of any Member of the Senate. I must say, in passing, however, that, as it seemed to me, more strikingly inconsistent observations never fell upon the ears of Senators of the United States than we heard in the charming periods of that great orator. I listened to the historical and critical review of the subject presented by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and we all know that he could not under any circumstances impugn the loyalty and good intent of his associates in the Senate. Notwithstanding these suggestions, however, with regard to the purpose in the minds of these distinguished Senators who have attempted to support the bill under consideration, I must, in order to be frank and candid, say that through all of them there runs a thought which, with its reiteration from time to time, is increasingly irritating and indefensible.

Whatever the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] intended to do or intended to say, what they did do and what they did say was calculated to produce just one effect. They would have the Senate and the country understand, and no other conclusion can be drawn from their utterances, as well as the utterances of other eminent statesmen to whom I will call attention in a moment, than this: That any man in the Senate or out of it, in the House of Representatives or out of it, who does not accord to the President whatever he demands, who is not willing to give him all the power which he asks, is not loyal to his country and does not desire to win in the mighty conflict now engaging all the energies and all the thought of the American people. No matter in what language it may be expressed, no matter how beautiful the imagery may be, no matter how striking the illustrations may be, the argument is: The President has asked for the measure, he has asked for power, and he who denies the request of the President is an enemy of his country, is disloyal to the Government, and does not desire America to win in the war in which the whole world is now involved. I resent the argument, while at once vindicating the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Illinois of any purpose to impugn either my loyalty or my fidelity to American institutions and American principles and American honor.

The argument is not confined to this Chamber. It is prevalent elsewhere. It is exactly the same argument which the President of the United States made in his letter to the Democratic candidate for Senator in Wisconsin, in which he suggested, in terms that could not be misunderstood, that anyone who failed in answering his demands or his wishes since the great war began in Europe concerning the attitude of the United States is an unfit man to represent the American people in Congress, and if in Congress is incapable of expressing American ideals, American ambition, and American hopes.

The time has come, at least so far as I am concerned, when I feel it necessary to deal with that thought. The time has come for us to understand whether we must accord the President infallibility; whether we must agree with everything that he may suggest in order that we may stand foursquare with the loyal, upright sentiment of the people of this country. I do not intend in anything that I shall say to disparage the President. I shall presently mention the length to which I have gone and intend hereafter to go in his support; but I do intend to dissipate, if I can, the atmosphere which has gathered around this Chamber, which is created throughout the country, and which obscures the duty of Members of Congress and may mislead and deceive the people of the Republic.

These observations and this thought in my mind will make it necessary for me to speak a word, first, with regard to my attitude toward the war; second, my attitude toward the President; and, third, my conception of the part which the Constitution of the United States plays in the legislation which we are asked to enact.

Mr. President, so long as the United States was a neutral Nation, under the inaction of Congress and under the leadership of the President I attempted in good faith to be a neutral. There was some difference of opinion from time to time with regard to the things which constitute neutrality, but I tried in each instance by my voice and by my vote to exemplify before the world the neutrality of this Nation. When Congress on the 6th of April, 1917, abandoned its neutral position and declared war or the existence of a state of war between the United States and the Imperial Government of Germany, I became a belligerent, and I have been belligerent every moment since that day.

Mr. President, I voted for the declaration of war. I was one of the men who believed that Congress should have considered the subject before the 6th day of April, 1917, although at the same time I was unwilling to give the President the power to declare war or to make war; and because I thought that Congress then ought to have exercised its constitutional function and to have decided what should be the relation between the United States and Germany, and that we ought not to confer upon the President the right either to declare war or to make war, I was denounced throughout the land as a traitor—not alone a traitor to the President, but a traitor to the Republic as well. I have not changed my mind a whit with regard to that vital controversy. I think that whenever Congress abandons its constitutional privilege of declaring war or maintaining peace, whenever Congress assumes to confer upon the President, no matter who he may be, the right either to make war or to declare war, the end of free institutions approaches.

But when Congress did declare war and did exercise its constitutional power in that respect, from that moment until this no man has been permitted to outrun or to excel me in the efforts I have made to bring strength to this country in the conflict upon which it has entered; and I venture to say that there will be a great many voluble patriots who will fall by the wayside before I am willing to give up the struggle.

I have not been in favor of talking about peace since the 6th day of April, 1917. There has never been a time since that moment when the people of the United States ought to have occupied themselves in discussing terms of peace. There was but one thing for us to do when we entered into war with Germany, and that was to equip our armies and our navies as rapidly and as efficiently as we could, in order that we might overcome the enemy. So far as I am concerned, it matters not what may be the outcome in France; it may be that our fond hope with regard to the struggle upon the bloody and historic soil of that Republic will be shattered—I pray God that it may not be so; but it may be so—but even if the arms of the German Empire are successful in Europe, I shall not be found ready or willing to make peace with the brutal monster who is now devastating the whole civilized world.

I am enlisted in this war for the war; and the war will not entirely end, so far as I am concerned, until the German Government, representing the military strength and power of that great country, is broken and crushed and destroyed forevermore. I do not know where the scene of the battle will be; I do not know whether it will be on the ocean, or whether it will be in some of our possessions beyond continental United States; it may be upon the soil of the Republic itself; but, wherever it is, the United States must go forward earnestly, passionately, remorselessly until we have conquered the enemy whose power and whose depredations led us into the carnage. Otherwise, every boy who goes to his death in France will have died in vain; otherwise all the treasure which we pour out to maintain this conflict will have been expended in vain; otherwise the great burden under which we must stagger for years and years to come will be borne in vain. There is but one end to the war; it must end in victory. If we are defeated our institutions go down; if Germany is not defeated, her crown is triumphant; and in so far as I can influence the course of events, this battle for civilization, for the right to live, the right of our community, at least, to select its own institutions for its own government, will not end until our cause is absolutely vindicated and established.

This, Senators, is my attitude toward the war, and I hope that the eloquent Senators from North Carolina and Illinois, not intending to impugn my fighting loyalty because I am opposed to certain parts of this bill, will in the future so phrase their observations before this body as to omit that exceedingly disagreeable, grievously unjust suggestion and inference which I find in every word that has been uttered in defense of the bill so far.

If the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Illinois would come before the Senate saying, "Here is certain power which ought to be given to the President, which, in our opinion, will help in the prosecution of the war, power that he can exercise better and more efficiently than anyone else," that might create simply a difference of judgment; but there could be nothing objectionable whatsoever in an argument of that character. Thought there might arise conflict of judgment in regard to it, some of us might think that any given power which it was suggested ought to be conveyed or transferred to the President could be better exercised by some one else, the debate would proceed upon proper lines; but when those who advocate this bill and other bills like it come before the Senate declaring simply that the President wants this power, that because he wants it he ought to have it, and that every man who questions the propriety or wisdom of granting the power is not a loyal citizen and is not in favor of winning the war, then we have a situation and a position which all good people must deplore, for in the end that attitude—and I commend this suggestion not only to the Senators who have spoken, but to those who are yet to speak and those who are yet to vote—in the end that attitude will destroy the strength of the American people; in the end it will so alienate the affections of the people from the administration as to rob the President of the authority which he ought to have, and which every intelligent, loyal man is more than willing to give him.

This warning is not uttered in any offensive sense. I do not feel that way. My only hope is that we can make this country strong and united, and that we ought not to perpetuate the habit and practice of denouncing every man as an unfit citizen and as a disloyal public servant who differs from the President or from his spokesmen in the Senate upon any given question.

That reminds me of the manner in which we are advised that the President wants this power. The President has delivered no message to Congress upon the subject; he has not indicated to the Senate in any public way his views upon this legislation. It was disclosed in the committee, and inasmuch as the proceedings before the committee have been commented upon, I presume I may, without violating any confidence, mention what we understood there with regard to the wishes of the President and how they were communicated. I understand that the President asked the eminent Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]—than whom a better man never lived, and I say of him, as the Senator from Georgia did, I am bound to him by ties of affection that seem to me more lasting and stronger than connects me with any other man in the Senate Chamber, and nothing that I say must be understood as reflecting upon him in any way whatsoever—but the President summoned the Senator from North Carolina, desiring to talk with him upon this subject. He did talk with him. This bill is the result of that conference between the Senator from North Carolina and the President. There was no reason why the Senator from North Carolina should not confer with the President upon the matter, but there was great reason and is great reason and always will be great reason against a Chief Executive communicating with Congress in that way. The bill was introduced. Some of the members of the committee asked the Senator from North Carolina what powers the President wanted that he did not already have. The Senator from North Carolina, I think, instanced two things that ought to be done. The Senator from Georgia has referred to them. Upon inquiry it was found that the President had full and complete power with regard to these things, and there was not instanced before the committee at any time or suggested at any time a single specific power which the President thought was wise to confer upon him which he did not already fully possess under the legislation of Congress and the Constitution of the United States.

I do not believe that is the way in which the President should recommend legislation for the welfare of the Union; it is not the way pointed out in the Constitution. It may be the way in which some Chief Executives have sought legislation in times past, but no matter whether that plan has been pursued by a Republican or a Democrat it is equally objectionable.

This leads me to say that for the war there is not a drop of partisan blood in my veins. It is a matter of entire indifference to me whether the Chief Executive is of one party or another or whether Senators are of one party or another. I am not a partisan in casting votes or in expressing opinions upon legislation, whether in peace or in war. I have never voted for any measure, I have never spoken for any measure, I have never voted against nor spoken against any measure because my party associates were either for or against it. I had differences of opinion with the distinguished predecessor of the present Chief Executive quite as radical and quite as numerous as any differences which have ever arisen between the existing administration and myself. I voted against him when I believed I ought to do so just as freely as I vote against the present administration. There is no use raising the banner of nonpartisanship in this Chamber. So far as the war is concerned, there is no partisan flag. Every Senator, whether on the other side of the Chamber or on this side of the Chamber, is infinitely more interested in the preservation of the Republic and in the honor of the Union than he can possibly be in any political party or in the representatives of any political party.

I am just as indifferent to the authorship or source of any suggestion touching the war as a man can possibly be; and I intend in the future, as in the past, to follow the President of the United States whenever I believe he is right, and I intend to resist him whenever I believe he is wrong. But notwithstanding the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois as to the clouds that may arise in the sky of those Senators who do not vote for this bill, I am willing to go to the country upon that platform. I am willing to have my support of or opposition to the President weighed and tested by the standard which all good men must acknowledge and must accept in determining their public duty.

Mr. President, a word with regard to my attitude toward the Constitution; and that is suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Illinois, who seemed to believe that there were Senators—there were people—who, rather than preserve the Union, the integrity of our institutions, the honor and the glory of the American name, would cling to the technical shred of a Constitution adopted in peaceful times and for purposes other than war. If there is such a Senator, I do not know him. I immediately challenge the thought that I have often heard expressed here, sometimes from my side of the Chamber as well as upon the other, that democracy is weak in war, using the word "democracy" as the synonym of the republican institutions established by the Constitution of the United States. I challenge the view.

The Republic of the United States is not weak in war. So far from being weak in war, a country like our own is infinitely stronger in war under the Constitution and pursuing the Constitution than any monarchy ever established among men. It does infinite harm to free institutions to have it constantly said that they are good enough in times of peace, but that they must be abandoned in times of war. It is a heresy, it is a misrepresentation of the power and might of free men, and ought not to be ever again uttered under American skies.

The only condition which makes a democracy or a republic weak in war is disaffection among the people of the country. Strength in a republic presupposes that a great majority of the people favor the undertaking in progress, no matter what it may be. If the people of this country are really in earnest in prosecuting this war, as I think they are and as I know I am, the United States can be more powerful under our Constitution than the Imperial Government of Germany can be under her system of laws.

We entered the war unprepared. I am not going to enter upon an inquiry with respect to whose fault it is that we were unprepared. I do not care at this time, nor is it material at this time; but we were unprepared, and unpreparedness is an obstacle which can not be overcome in a brief space of time. I am not going either to criticize any subordinate officer of this Government in regard to our preparation. While many things probably have been done that should not have been done, and many things have been left undone that should have been done, most of the mistakes, if not all of them, are incidental to the magnitude of the task in which we have been engaged. The real difficulties, the underlying difficulties, have not been with subordinates. They grew out of the want of a harmonious and intelligent policy in preparation for war.

But I must not digress. I must not allow myself to wander into those paths, because I am attempting to indicate my conception of the Constitution as it relates to the war.

I believe the Constitution of the United States is just as dominant in war as it is in peace. I believe that it is just as potent, as powerful in the government of the people and in the government of those whom the people have elected to conduct our affairs, in war as it is in peace. Furthermore, I believe it is as great a moral crime to violate the Constitution, ignore it, or condemn it in time of war as it is to do a like act in time of peace. I assert, and I challenge successful contradiction—indeed, I doubt whether there can be or will be any contradiction, successful or unsuccessful—that under the Constitution of the United States the Republic can do everything which any nation can do, I care not what its form of government, in defending itself against an enemy or in prosecuting its cause in war. It is utterly impossible for any Senator here to name anything that can be done in one country, however autocratic its form of government may be, that can not be done under our Constitution.

I am not saying now, mark you, that the thing must or may be done in the same way. There are certain paths pointed out in our Constitution that we must pursue; but there is no limitation of power, and either the President, as the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States, or the Congress of the United States, as the legislative arm of the Government, can do everything that it is necessary for any country to do in order to exert, to summon, to marshal, to use its full, complete strength in war.

This is my view of the Constitution. The difficulty of the question we have before us is that there are some people who harbor the delusion that in time of war all the power of the Government which it may properly exercise in defense or in aggression must be exercised by the President. That is the point of divergence. The President has vast war powers under the Constitution. In the very nature of things his authority as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy is immensely widened in the event of war. But, after all, the war powers which can be justly exercised by the President under the Constitution are but a tithe of the powers which we must employ in order to carry on the war successfully; and those further powers are to be employed by Congress and not by the President.

It is one of the purposes of the observations I am now making to recall people to a reflective attitude, to ask them to review our Government and our Constitution, in order to properly assign the powers of war and to give to Congress those which belong to Congress and give to the President those which belong to him. When this realignment is clearly and intelligently made, then if there comes a time when we think that the cause of the American people will be served by taking a part of the legislative power and investing it, in one form or another, in the Executive, we will patriotically do it. We have done it in a score of instances—yes, in two score instances—since the war began; and I am pleading only for a continuation of that policy throughout the legislation which will be proposed during the period of the war.

I believe this bill is unconstitutional. The Senator from North Carolina asked me, in the very beginning of his observations, whether I would give up the Constitution in order to save the country. It is pretty hard to tell just what one means by that question; but, understanding him as I am sure he intended to be understood, I answered in the affirmative. If I believed that the safety of our civilization depended upon it, the triumph of our view of humanity and social justice, as compared with the recrudescence of medieval barbarity which seems to be the guiding star of Germany, I answer at once in the affirmative. One must answer in the affirmative. But that does not indicate that I believe that, in this instance, we ought to violate the Constitution in order to prosecute the war, because, in my opinion, we will more successfully prosecute the war, and we will do more toward driving Germany into the defeat and obscurity into which she must be driven, if we exercise our power in a constitutional way.

The bill is unconstitutional because it attempts to delegate legislative power to the President. I intend, after a while, to analyze the bill, and to point out just what it does. I hope I may be permitted, however, to make that a second chapter in my address. It is sufficient to say now that it attempts to confer upon the President the authority to abolish any given agency of the Government, I care not whether it is qualified by the terms "executive" or "administrative" or not. Assuming that it is qualified in that way, to give a concrete example, it attempts to give the President the authority to abolish or suspend for the time being—that is, during the war and for one year after the declaration of peace—the Department of Justice, so that that department will have no functions whatsoever, no power whatsoever, and to transfer all the power and all the functions which have been granted to the Department of Justice by the statutes of the United States to any other department, to any other tribunal or commission, or to any other office or officer of the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I do not acquiesce in that statement. The bill only gives him authority to transfer functions. Suppose he were to transfer the powers of the Attorney General's office to some other department, would not those be the functions that Congress has already created?

Mr. CUMMINS. Surely; but if the Senator will patiently hear me, I will point out wherein I think the legislative authority is delegated.

The bill says—and I am going to comment upon this at much greater length at another time, or later on—the bill says, and this is perhaps the broadest authority granted:

To transfer—

Now, we have been speaking of executive departments, administrative commissions, and boards and officers, and so on—

To transfer any duties or powers from one existing department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer to another.

It is not possible to question my conclusion that under it, if the law be valid, the President is given the authority to say that from this time on all the powers and duties of the Department of Justice as now organized shall be suspended or abolished, and that all its powers and duties shall be transferred, we will say just for illustration, to the postmaster of Washington.

Mr. GORE. Or to Mr. Creel.

Mr. CUMMINS. Therefore, after an order of that kind is issued, the Department of Justice would have neither power nor duty nor function nor activity, and the postmaster of Washington would be clothed with all the power and would be burdened with all the duties and must perform all the functions which the Department of Justice has hitherto carried, performed, and exercised. I am only mentioning that for purposes of illustration, because I do not want the Senator from North Carolina to think that I believe the President of the United States would do that; but I am testing this proposed statute by the Constitution.

When the President executes this authority, when he enters his Executive order transferring the Department of Justice and all its powers and duties to the postmaster at Washington he is exercising legislative power. There can be no escape from that conclusion. The Congress of the United States could transfer the powers of the Department of Justice to the postmaster at Washington. No one will doubt that. We can take the power that we have given to any of these departments and vest it in whomsoever we please; but, when we do it, it is a legislative act; and we can not transfer or delegate that authority to any executive officer, I care not how exalted his station may be.

I am not unfamiliar with or unmindful of the judicial declarations and opinions upon this subject. The Supreme Court of the United States has gone a great way in sustaining laws which may have appeared to delegate legislative authority. I do not intend to take the time to review them; there are very many of them; but the attitude of the Supreme Court in the matter is all summed up in its opinion in the case of Field against Clark, in One hundred and forty-third United States; and the entire legislative history of the Nation up to that time, and all the authorities that were known at that time, are recited in that opinion. The effect of the decision of the Supreme Court is to say that the legislature can perform a legislative act, such as passing a law, and it can make its operation depend upon a state of facts or events which facts and events may be found and promulgated by the President of the United States. That is as far as the Supreme Court has ever gone or any other court has ever gone in sustaining the exercise, or near exercise, of legislative power by an Executive.

To apply that doctrine to the present instance, I have no doubt that we could describe in this statute a certain fact and say that whenever the President found that fact to exist, or whenever the event named in the statute occurred, and the President should certify to it, thereupon the powers and functions of the Department of Justice should be transferred to and vested in the postmaster of Washington. I think that would be a valid statute; but we have done nothing of that kind in this bill. We have not provided that the President shall ascertain any fact. We do not provide that he shall determine any event, upon the occurrence of which the powers of one of these departments shall pass over to another department or to another officer. We have simply said that the President, whenever he likes, without any administrative ascertainment of conditions or facts, can transfer the duties of the Department of Justice to the postmaster at Washington or to any other officer of the Government. I venture to say that a suggestion of that kind has never before been made in the Congress of the United States. I venture to say that even the most ardent supporter of this bill will find it very hard to defend the constitutionality of the bill in that respect. We not only embrace in the bill the transfer of one department to another, but we embrace in the bill the entire civil establishment which we have in 125 years created for the government of the people of this country. If we should say that the President is hereby authorized, upon finding that the public welfare requires it, to transfer the Department of Justice to the postmaster at Washington there could be found a little glimmer of support for an act of that kind in the opinions of the Supreme Court, although that is not persuasive, because overborne by other arguments that are presented by that court. But we do not even do that in this bill. We attempt to say to the President, "You can take the entire Government, every agency of the Government which we have created and which we have believed to be necessary for the protection of the people. You can take them all; you can take every function of the Government under the Constitution except Congress and the courts, and you can transfer them as you please. You can consolidate all of them in any one man whom you may select and upon the happening of what event? None. The only limitation found in the bill is that the President must find inferentially that his act has some relation to the prosecution of the war.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is a good lawyer. He is one of our leaders in the Judiciary Committee, and I think I can say without invidious comparison that he is the most active member of that committee. If the Senator from North Carolina will assume the bench, as he once graced it in times that are gone, and hear an argument as a judge upon the constitutionality of this measure, I would wager my life that his conclusion would be that Congress has no constitutional power to confer upon the President of the United States, or to attempt to confer upon him, the legislative authority to transfer functions that have been vested by statute in one department or one officer of the Government to another department or another officer.

If it were necessary to wreck the Constitution in order to defeat Germany, I would be the first man to wreck it; but can the Senator from North Carolina say that it is necessary to overturn the Constitution in order that these powers may be efficiently, energetically, and properly exercised? Congress is in session; Congress can be required to remain here, and it is not only prepared but it is in the full disposition to exercise every power that it has for the prosecution of the war. If the President wants us to transfer the Department of Justice to the postmaster at Washington, or the powers and functions of that department to some other officer of the Government, and if he can point out that the transfer will more efficiently organize the people of this country for the war there will not be a dissenting vote in Congress upon the proposal. But the necessity should be shown, and that necessity is the essence of legislative power. What do we conclude when we pass a law vesting power in a particular office or officer of the Government? We say to the world that we believe that the wise and just government of the people of this country requires that that office or that officer shall administer the law which we pass. When it is suggested that we ought to take that power from that officer and give it to some other, what kind of power is it that is exercised in reaching a conclusion of that kind? It is legislative power, it is legislative discretion, and the very limit to which Congress can go is to prescribe in a given case that the law shall take effect whenever certain conditions arise, and give the President the authority to ascertain the existence of those conditions and promulgate them, whereupon the law which we pass becomes effective.

Suppose that the law which was construed in the case of Field against Clark, which was the tariff law of 1890, as every lawyer knows, had said that whenever the President found that certain South American countries were not treating the United States fairly and reciprocally then he should have authority to prescribe the duties which should be attached to the importations of commodities from those countries. Does the Senator from North Carolina think that we could or should have done that? No; there is not a lawyer in America who thinks that we either could or ought to have done it. All that we could do, and we went to the limit of legislative authority in that matter, was to say that when the President found that these unequal and unreciprocal conditions had been brought about by certain discriminatory acts on the part of certain foreign countries, then the law which we enacted should be inoperative, and when the conditions were restored then the law which we had passed and the duties which we had prescribed should again govern and control the country.

The senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] is listening to me. He has composed more than one tariff bill, and I have come to value his opinion as highly as that of any Senator in the Chamber. I should like before this debate is over to hear whether he believes that we could grant to the President of the United States the power to change duties which we had prescribed by statute by saying that upon the happening of an event which the President had promulgated he could impose whatever duties he might think would meet the situation. Of course, there is but one answer to that, and that answer condemns this measure as unconstitutional.

I am with you in riding over the Constitution, wrecking and destroying it, blotting it out of the memory of man if it is necessary to do it in order to win the war, but there has not been a single suggestion from anyone who has spoken for this measure that it is necessary to obliterate the Constitution in order that this power shall be efficiently exercised—this power which belongs to Congress and to no other body in the Government.

I need not say more with regard to the relation of this bill to the Constitution. I do not want it to be retorted upon me at a later time that I offered an amendment in the committee limiting the field in which the Executive authority should act and following that with the inquiry whether that amendment contains the unconstitutionality which I have pointed out in the bill. The amendment which I proposed is just as much subject to the constitutional objection which I have made as the bill itself. My only purpose in offering it was to limit the operation of the bill within fair bounds so that if we must violate the mandates of the Constitution we shall violate the organic in as few respects as possible. I would not have offered any such amendment if I had not known that the majority of the committee were in favor of the bill.

As an original proposition I favor the view so well and so ably expressed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. It is the only true, safe path for us to pursue, namely, that when the President desires a legislative power or desires the legislature to exercise the power which it alone has he shall come to it and point out the public necessity, so far as our civil establishment is concerned, and ask Congress to exercise that authority for the public good; and that Congress will do it the history of this body and the House of Representatives abundantly and conclusively demonstrates.

Mr. President, a word with regard to my attitude toward the President. I have already mentioned some phases of that subject, but I recur to it, because I do not want to be misunderstood. In the literature of the war I concede, and gladly concede, to the President a commanding place. I think that he has with unusual and extraordinary ability sensed the meaning of the war and the relation of the nations to each other, and he has expressed that relation not always consistently but always impressively.

I do not want to be the last man in any procession formed for the purpose of carrying a wreath of recognition in that respect to his shrine. I concede that he has infinite, consummate ability in commanding, coordinating, consolidating Congress and conventions, and I only wish I could say as much in praise of his ability in coordinating the industries, resources, and strength of the people of this country for war. I know that he wants to do all that a man can do. I know that he has no other thought, or at least that it is his supreme thought, to successfully conduct the United States through the perils which now confront it and surround it. But it is no disparagement of the President, it is no lack of loyalty to the President, to say that there are very, very few men in any generation who can command a country like ours in all its resources and all its strength so as to carry it forward to the highest point of success.

I do not intend to utter my opinions in detail, but you can gather, I hope, that while his subordinates have performed miracles in their separate and segregated way in the preparation for this war, it has seemed to me that the one coordinating office has not been occupied with all the vigor and the effectiveness that it should have been.

I agree with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] in his suggestion made a few days ago. I agree at the same time, strange as it may appear, with the view of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] with regard to the same subject. I agree with the Senator from Illinois in this, although I could not find any harmony between it and his general statement, viz, that the Commander in Chief could do anything he pleases with any body he pleases during the progress of the war. But he said——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator, in using the word "body," does not mean "person" there? The Senator does not mean to imply by the word "body" that I referred to any person? The Senator meant any body or corporation?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. I did not wish to have it understood that the President could do anything with anybody, meaning "any person."

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe a President can override a law of Congress and transfer from one bureau to another, or from one department to another, duties which have been reposed in the particular bureau or particular department. In that I agree with the Senator from Illinois; but, practically speaking, it is in the power of the President to coordinate all the energies of the departments presided over by men whom we ordinarily know as Cabinet ministers. It is practically true that there could have been complete harmony between the Navy Department and the War Department in all their purchases, in all their construction, in everything which they have done in order to prepare for the war, if there had been a guiding hand to bring the heads of the departments and bureaus together and to insure that the final determination of one was the consensus of opinion in all. That is practicable; it could have been done; but it has not been done, and I leave the fault to be placed where it belongs. Every Senator can impute it to whatever officer of the Government he thinks ought to bear it.

That, however, does not mean to me that we should not give the President power to consolidate the bureaus of purchases and of construction in the War and Navy Departments. I am perfectly willing to do it. It would delight me beyond measure to do it. Nothing could be more helpful to this country now than to give the President power to erect either in the Department of War or the Navy, or both, a body of men, just as was suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], whose word would be final, whose action would be harmonious, and which would completely consolidate all the energy that we are making toward the preparation of our Army and our Navy for the danger and the peril which they must meet.

So, in holding as I do somebody, some person responsible for the discord and disunion and want of coordination which has existed, I am perfectly willing and anxious to go forward and create by law a body under the direction of the President that will do precisely what the Senator from North Carolina thinks ought to be done in that respect.

Moreover, I intend to support the President of the United States as Commander in Chief in the exercise of his vast power and the bearing of his infinite responsibilities as Commander in Chief in every way. There is no power he needs as Commander in Chief from Congress. Congress can not give him power as Commander in Chief. The Constitution gives him the authority which he exercises as Commander in Chief, and we can neither dwarf it nor can we withdraw it from him. It is given to him, and I want to make him just as strong as it is possible for man to be in the exercise of his powers and duties as Commander in Chief, and there is no resource of the United States in men or money which I am not willing to exhaust in order that he may mobilize both for the successful, energetic prosecution of the war.

No word of disparagement shall ever fall from my lips so far as his duties as Commander in Chief are concerned. I would no more think of criticizing him as Commander in Chief than a soldier would think of denouncing his general in the face of the enemy. When, however, he asks for legislative power in civil establishments, when he asks for powers which do not concern him, which can not concern him as Commander in Chief, when he asks Congress to do something in the exercise of its war powers, then he must grant to me what I so willingly grant to him, the privilege of freedom and the liberty of employing my judgment according to my own conscience.

Mr. President, it is just as disloyal for the President of the United States or anyone else to denounce Members of Congress for the manner in which they discharge their duties as it is for the Members of Congress to denounce the President. We are all a part of the Government. We must not fall under any mistake with regard to this.

There is no one man the Government of the United States, and if it is disloyal to cripple, to hamper, to disparage, to denounce the Government, then those who impugn the good faith of Members of Congress, those who assail the Representatives of the people in the discharge of their sworn duties, are just as culpable, just as censurable as those who would denounce the President of the United States in the discharge of the duties of his high office.

Let us have a fair, reasonable understanding about the Government, so that we can all go forward with one mind, with one purpose, and accomplish the only great thing which the American people have at this time in mind. It ought to occupy, it must occupy, the public attention to the exclusion of every other concern of the citizen, and we will not do it, that unity will not prevail, if we are to hear from day to day these condemnations of those who have public duties to perform, because they will not perform them as commanded by some other officer or function of the Government.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENDRICK in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator from Iowa a short time ago, during his present argument, made reference, as I understood him, to the enlarged war powers of the President during war. The same thought was suggested yesterday, that the President during war had great and enlarged and ample and almost autocratic powers, which he did not possess in time of peace. My own conception of the Constitution has always been that the President has no "war powers" either in time of war or in time of peace; that the war powers conferred by the Constitution are all conferred upon Congress. It is true that the Constitution makes the President the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but that does not confer war powers on him. He has got just as much power as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy during the time of peace as he has during the time of war; his powers are not expanded as Commander in Chief during war, but the subject upon which the power operates is expanded and is so multiplied that, of course, his activities as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy loom largely in the public eye. However, I should like, having stated my own understanding upon that subject, if the Senator from Iowa is willing, to have his opinion as to whether that is a correct exposition of the Constitution.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. Before the Senator from Iowa proceeds, I was going merely to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, if he will permit me, if he did not understand the contention he has just expressed was the one that I have been, since the passage of the food-control bill as well as yesterday, insisting upon—that the enlargement under the Constitution in time of war is of the exercise of powers which is not encouraged to the same extent or permitted in time of peace?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], I submit that it all depends upon the sense in which is used the term "war powers." Technically the Senator from Pennsylvania is undoubtedly correct. I did not use the term in that sense. I used it in the sense of powers that were to be exercised in the progress of the war. They are war powers, as I view the term, only because they are employed during war and when necessary to be employed during war. I quite agree with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] with regard to that.

The Constitution fixes the war powers of the President, and they are simply powers which inhere in the office—if it may be called an office—of Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. Those powers, critically expressed, are the same in war as in peace; but the war powers themselves in time of war are infinitely broader than in times of peace. I use the term in that sense.

Mr. LEWIS. If I may be pardoned—I do not want to proceed if I interrupt the Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. Not at all.

Mr. LEWIS. But the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] nodded his head in this direction meaning to say what for a moment I omitted. He said that yesterday certain contentions were made—and, of course he referred to the argument that I made—and he was quite accurate in his statement, only I want it clearly understood that I have constantly been presenting this distinction, which I might not have made clear, and which I insist on to-day, that in war time in the exercise of powers the exercise of them is limited only in the discretion of the Commander in Chief, while in times of peace they are limited by regulations prescribed by Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, with the latter view, which is just now expressed by the Senator from Illinois, I can not fully concur; however, I regard the subject as somewhat irrelevant to the discussion I am pursuing.

I have endeavored, in the time I have occupied the attention of the Senate, to set forth as clearly as I could my appeal for a better understanding of ourselves; my appeal for a more temperate and considerate expression concerning ourselves and our associates. I content myself with that discussion of the measure before us for the present time. I intend a little later to take up the bill itself and analyze it as I view it. The extreme authority in the bill is to take every function of the Government, save the legislative branch and the judicial branch, and to consolidate all power, all duties, all responsibilities in one man, unknown, unnamed, without the consent of the Senate. I suggest this simply that I may leave at this moment the extremes of the bill in the memory of Senators. Just now, however, I think the questions I have been discussing are of infinitely more importance than the details of any legislation.

I can not conceal from myself the conviction that the war in which we are engaged will be of long duration. I can not conceal from myself the apprehension that soon the United States may be alone in the tremendous struggle with the powers of the central governments; but whether that unhappy day shall dawn or not, we are in a conflict that not only demands all the energies and all the resources of the people, all the material things which the people can give, but it demands a unity of spirit, a oneness of determination and purpose never before required by any crisis or any peril confronting the Republic. There is but one way in which that unity of spirit and purpose can be maintained. It is by a toleration which will grant to every man freedom to express his opinion regarding the conduct of the Government, and to every legislator the liberty to use his conscience as the occasion requires. The attitude toward the people of this country can not be that those who were in favor of neutrality until the 6th of April, 1917, are now to be denounced, or at least to be suspected of traitorous sentiments.

There is just one way to save this country, and that is to stretch out our hands in sincere recognition and in sincere association and companionship to every citizen, man or woman, who wants America to win and who is determined that Germany shall lose; and it is to lift up, if I can, a little higher the banner of that spirit that I have spoken up to this time upon the measure now before us. Somewhat later, if I am permitted to do so, I shall attempt an inquiry into the details of the bill itself.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, nothing but good can come from such an inspiring and whole-souled address as that which has just been made to the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I am glad to pay my tribute to his sincerity, his intelligence, and his loyalty. The Senator from Iowa is himself a man who fully measures up to presidential stature. His party has several times done worse than it would have done had it nominated him for President. I have myself voted with the Senator from Iowa time and again when a majority of my associates have voted against him. In certain matters I think he is without a peer in the United States. I think his intelligence, his breadth of view, his judgment on railroad matters and on all matters that involve transportation are unequaled in this country.

The Senator from Iowa is consistently and earnestly opposed to what he considers presidential encroachment upon the prerogatives of Congress; but I can not help feeling that if he were President to-day, he would himself be asking for the very powers which are proposed to be given in this bill. I hope that, if that were the case, I should be able to rise above partisan feeling and, as a Democrat, vote to give him those powers. I should not fear to give to him every bit of authority that there is in this bill. I should not fear to give to him as President of the United States, conducting this war as Commander in Chief, every bit of authority that he might ask. I should vote to do it, because in war times we must trust men in high authority, and we must trust without measure and without stint the man who is in the highest authority of all.

The Senator from Iowa is jealous of the privileges and powers of the Senate, and it is proper that he should present his objections; nothing but good will come from his doing so. The bill may be improved by discussion on the floor of the Senate. That is what the Senate is for, to discuss great public questions; and it is useful to have a diversity of views expressed on the floor of the Senate.

I have been very much pleased as this discussion has gone along to see how little of partisanship has crept into it. Since the war began I have not made a partisan remark on the floor of the Senate. I find my partisanship slipping from me; I hope that it will continue so to do; and I wish to join the Senator in his whole-hearted invitation that we all get together in a spirit of patriotism and fight this war through to a successful conclusion.

I have heard no suggestion impugning the patriotism or loyalty of those who oppose this bill, particularly the Senator from Iowa. Such a suggestion from any source would be greeted with derision, as it should be.

We differ widely as to the power of the President in time of war. The Senator from Iowa says that if we pass this bill we are conferring upon the President of the United States the right to legislate. He says that to give to the President the right to transfer certain powers from one department of the Government to another department is giving the President the right to legislate. If that be true, and if such transference of the power to legislate were prohibited in peace times if conferred upon the President, I feel quite sure that conferring such power upon the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy solely as that transfer relates to the conduct of the war is not conferring legislative authority, but is increasing the power and discretion and executive capacity of the Commander in Chief.

This bill has a very plain purpose. The purpose of the bill is to help win the war, and we are all for that; every Member of the Senate is for winning the war. This bill undertakes to help win the war by making the administration more efficient, by creating a more centralized authority, by creating authority that is more elastic and therefore more efficient. I believe we are all for that, but some of us are not for it if we believe that that increased power carries danger to the people of the United States I do not think anyone here has such a love and veneration for the Constitution of the United States that he would shrink from giving the power even if he thought the Constitution might in some way be endangered during the conduct of the war. The test comes on the question whether it is wise to grant that great power to the President, for fear that he may misuse it.

The real reason for having this bill before the Senate is the investigation by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. The movement began because of certain remarks which were made by the distinguished Senator who is the chairman of that committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], and much good has come from the discussion which was started at that time. I do not myself agree altogether with the chairman of the committee in his conclusions and his statements, or with the other members of the committee who have honestly and intelligently discussed the conduct of the war; but I am free to say that much good has come from the discussion. The members of the committee did not content themselves with idle criticism. They said, "These are the facts, and here is the remedy"; and two bills were prepared, one creating a minister of munitions and the other creating what might be called a war cabinet.

It was stated, and I believe on the floor, that it was the purpose of those who prepared those bills to give to the President further authority for coordinating the war powers, in order that the war might be successfully prosecuted. I think the form of the suggestion came from the experience of England. England appeals to us, particularly at this time, and these suggestions are somewhat following the English plan. I shall have something to say about that a little later. But for some reason, which I need not discuss here, the bill creating a war cabinet and the one creating a ministry of munitions have not been pressed for action, and I think they are likely not to be. I think this bill is considered in most quarters as a substitute for those bills.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think there was a disposition upon the part of any member of that committee to undertake to place an implement or weapon in the hands of the President that he was unwilling to receive; in other words, we want the President, who is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, to have something that he will at least be satisfied with, and we have not pressed the other measures while this bill has remained undisposed of.

Mr. HOLLIS. I thank the Senator for that statement. I did not feel that I had the authority to make it, but I am glad to know that that is the attitude of the members of the committee, and I fully believe it.

Those of us who were against this concentration of power, or perhaps not concentration of power but the transfer of power to a war cabinet and a ministry of munitions, are for some action to make the conduct of the war more efficient. Those who were for those bills may not be for this bill, but our toast now, Senators, should be, "Our President. More power to him." Why can we not all be for that? What is it that makes us so white? Some of the attacks that have been made on this bill remind me of the opening stanzas of Kipling's poem, "Danny Deever":

"What are the bugles blowin' for?" said Files on Parade.
"To turn you out, to turn you out," the Color Sergeant said.
"What makes you look so white, so white?" said Files on Parade.
"I'm dreadin' what I've got to watch," the Color Sergeant said.

Now, let us look at this bill and see what it does. It has not been analyzed to any great extent, although we have had a great deal of general talk about it. I desire to call attention to what I think it does. Section 1 merely allows the President to redistribute the functions of executive agencies, of which he is the head; that is, he can now tell John to do anything in James's department; he can tell James to do anything in John's department. Under section 1 that is all the authority that is given. I think it is the duty of every lawyer, constitutional or otherwise, to tell what he thinks the President can do without the law. I believe the President, as Commander in Chief, can do or perform all these executive functions without authority from Congress. I think he has been doing so right along. He has had very little criticism for it; Congress has not objected. It is the second section that arouses the opposition of Senators.

The second section makes the same provision in somewhat different words, but extends the authority to administrative as well as to executive agencies. To most of us "administrative" means about the same as "executive." "Administrative" may be much more inclusive; it undoubtedly is in this connection or it would not have been used; it includes not only the various executive functions of this Government but it includes other semijudicial functions, such as are in the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Service Commission, and the Federal Reserve Board.

I do not believe in anyone turning white over this proposal. It must be that some one is afraid that the President is going to use these powers, and to go on and ask for others. None of us refuses to vote for a law establishing a criminal court that may impose the death penalty for fear some judge and jury is going to impose the death penalty on an innocent man. We are not obliged to look as far ahead as that. All we are to do is to see the situation that may arise needs a certain remedy in order that it may have a fortunate result, a just result; and we give to courts and we give to juries as much power as we think is necessary to carry out the ends of justice. Now and then some jury will make a mistake, some judge will be unnecessarily severe, but those of us who pass the law and put it in their power to be unjust are not responsible when they misuse it.

I notice that this bill has been greatly changed in the committee, because the committee has seen fit to limit the right to order John to do James's job to matters relating to the war. If it is not a matter relating to the war, then the President can not deal with it as Commander in Chief, and he is left to act as President precisely as he was before this bill was passed. I submit that section 1 contains absolutely no dynamite, no poison, no bear trap; no new power is conferred; no new commission is created; the President must use the same officers and the same routes. He can simply send an old officer over a different route.

To be specific, the real objection is that the President may interfere with the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Reserve Board, or the Civil Service Commission. No one has yet raised his voice for the Civil Service Commission, but before we get through some one probably will.

Now, why should we waste our time over this? I think the bill gives the authority to interfere very seriously with the functions of these three administrative commissions. That must be conceded, and the only reason anyone can object to it is that he fears that the President may abuse this power. I believe the President could do these things without the authority under the bill, as I have stated; others do not believe it, and they have just as much right to their opinion as I have to mine.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think that under the statute creating a Director of Railroads and giving the President the right to handle the railroads the President could transfer from the Interstate Commerce Commission the power which they now possess to hear appeals?

Mr. HOLLIS. To what power does the Senator refer?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Interstate Commerce Commission is given authority, on a contest by any party in interest, to hear questions as to increase of rates and to hear questions as to discriminatory rates, and are required to pass upon them, and the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission is made final, even though it sets aside the original rate fixed by the director. The law goes further and provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall set aside a rate if it is discriminatory, or if, in their judgment, it is unreasonable. There is a certain change in the old law requiring the Interstate Commerce Commission to consider certain conditions incident to the fixing of rates, but if they find that a rate is discriminatory and unreasonable, they may set it aside, refuse the increase, refuse the change, and the judgement is made final.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator states a fair question. Under this bill the only instance in which the President could set aside the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission or remove their authority from that particular field would be so far as it affected the war. He would not undertake to do it unless he believed their present action was affecting adversely the conduct of the war. I assume that he would not do that under his oath and under this bill unless that were so. Now, I believe that if anything the Interstate Commerce Commission was doing was affecting the war disastrously or adversely, the President, without this bill, would have a right to suspend their functions or turn them over to some one else or exercise them himself. That is my opinion; the Senator from Georgia, however, does not believe that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator has frankly answered me. Of course, I utterly disagree with him. I think if the President undertook to transfer the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Director of Railroads, in view of the statute, it would be an impeachable offense and he ought to be impeached, war or peace.

Mr. HOLLIS. I have not the slightest idea that he intends to do it. I have no doubt in my own mind that he would not do it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I mean is this: He has no right to set up his opinion on that subject against the action of Congress, establishing by law the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is exactly where the distinguished Senator and I do not agree. It is the first duty of the Government to preserve the country and the Government. It is the first duty of the Commander in Chief to do everything that he himself thinks is necessary to win the war and to save the Government. The President of the United States would not think of doing it unless it were an extreme case. He would not think of doing it unless public opinion were back of him. But if he believed public opinion was back of him, and if he did it, and if he was right in thinking that public opinion was back of him, you would never hear of impeachment proceedings.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator understand the Constitution even to go so far as to place upon Congress the duty to provide rules for the regulation and government of the Army? And when Congress does this as a constitutional authority and duty under the Constitution, is not the President obliged to obey those rules and regulations as Commander in Chief of the Army, and not as Commander in Chief of the country?

Mr. HOLLIS. The President is given express authority as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He is given that authority for some purpose. It is because it is understood that in times of emergency he must act quickly and effectively. In my judgment, it was intended to convey to the President under that authority the right, if necessary to preserve the country, to disregard the rules and regulations of Congress in that regard. I believe that firmly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator indicate anything in the Constitution that suspends the power of Congress to prescribe rules for the regulation and government of both the Army and the Navy, or that indicates that the President, by simply being named Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, has any authority to set aside those rules and regulations?

Mr. HOLLIS. The greatest powers under the Constitution, the ones that have been most exercised for the benefit of the country, have been implied powers. I take it that the express authority to the President to act as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy carries with it implied power to any extent necessary to defend the country in time of war, because it is expressly stated that the Constitution is promulgated to secure not only the general welfare but the defense of the country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I should like to read at this point the exact provisions of the Constitution on this subject:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

These provisions put the entire authority in Congress to make rules for the regulation and government of the Army and Navy. The President is simply Commander in Chief under the rules and regulations prescribed by Congress. If we give him broad authority without limitation through rules and regulations, that is for Congress to determine. As I have stated, I favor giving him the broadest authority; but it should not be left out of sight that the real power, the real constitutional authority, to prescribe how the war shall be conducted through rules and regulations controlling the Army and Navy, is with the legislative branch of the Government and not with the Executive.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I invite the attention of the Senator from Georgia, in aid of the position that the Senator from New Hampshire has taken—in which I wholly concur, and which is stated with more clearness than that which I stated yesterday with rather a burden—to the observation of Von Holst touching the construction of the Constitution as to the matter of war with a foreign enemy? I took the liberty to say yesterday that in wars between ourselves there was one doctrine which was generally concurred in, but in war with a foreign enemy there was a form of distinction. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if this does not justify his view? I read from section 48, on page 164:

> The right "to declare war" belongs to Congress alone. Of course, the United States may get into a war without Congress having declared war. War is, in the first place, a state of fact, the appearance of which can not be made wholly dependent, by any constitutional provisions whatever, upon the pleasure of one of the nations concerned. As far as that is possible, however, Congress has the exclusive right of the initiative. If a foreign power begins war against the United States, then it is not only the right but the duty of the President to oppose the enemy with all the means placed at his disposal by the Constitution and the laws.

I thank the Senator for allowing the interruption.

Mr. HOLLIS. I thank the Senator. I do not expect that a majority of the Senate agrees with my view of the matter. It is my own and, so far as I entertain it, I am responsible for it. But knowing that there are others who entertain a different view of the President, knowing that there are others who think that he has already exceeded the powers that the Congress has seen fit to vouchsafe to him, I think this law should be passed so that there may be no doubt about his power.

Suppose the law is passed. Then, under section 2, the President will have the command and control of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board that I think he has anyway. Now, what is it that anyone really fears that he will do? Assume that in taking over the ships the President wanted a fair valuation put upon them. What possible harm is there in his putting to that task the board of physical valuation in the Interstate Commerce Commission? Our friends say he could not do it now without this authority; but why should he not do it if he wants to?

If the President should find that the Interstate Commerce Commission is disloyal and not acting as it should, why might he not take from the Interstate Commerce Commission certain functions that it has now and put them in some court or some other tribunal? Why should he do it if the Interstate Commerce Commission is doing its work properly? If I believed, however, that he would take any of these powers away from the Interstate Commerce Commission and transfer them to other bodies, except under the most urgent necessity, I would not believe in giving him the authority.

In my judgment, the one section of the bill that is vital and necessary is section 3. This section permits the President to use money appropriated for one department through another department for the purpose specified in the appropriation act.

For illustration, take the purchase of steel. Steel is needed in the War Department, in the Navy Department, in the Shipping Board, in the Aviation Board, in the Lighthouse Service, and in many other departments. Why can we not and why should we not, for the purposes of efficiency in the war and to establish priorities, apply all the money to be spent for steel through the War Industries Board, for example? There is grave doubt whether this can be done without further legislation. Congress certainly has to raise the money to conduct the war. Congress has to make the appropriations to conduct the war; and I believe that without doing tremendous violence to the ideas and the habits and the precedents of the United States Government, the President has no right to take money appropriated for the use of one department and order that money to be spent through another department, even for the very purpose for which it was appropriated.

What is the objection? Why not permit him? I do not know of anyone who does seriously object. I have not heard anyone state an objection to having that done. If anyone does object to it, he is beyond argument, and we must expect to get along without his vote.

I stated this morning that I had been more interested in labor problems than anything else since I have been in public life, and I wish to illustrate the difficulties of prosecuting the present labor program that the President has decided upon in order to get rid of our labor difficulties.

Every department has its labor problems. Every department has to employ labor. They are met with scarcity of labor; they have the problem of educating or training labor in some departments; they must adjust grievances and strikes; they must attend to housing in some departments; they must look after sanitation and safety; and each department up to now has been bidding against every other department for labor. The complaint is made that one department is hiring labor away from another by giving increased wages.

About the 1st of January, after six months' discussion, the President decided to put the labor problems for all departments under the Secretary of Labor; that is, he created a labor-service program, to be administered by the Secretary of Labor. Most of us agree that this was wise and that the President had executive authority to do it. To clear away any doubts, this bill should be passed, and the reason why I mentioned the labor part of it is not because that is the only part this bill will help, but because it is the one part with which I happen to be familiar.

Assume that the President had decided on the 1st of January that he had no right to place the entire labor service under the Department of Labor, and he had to come to Congress for a special act to authorize it. Can anyone guess who would have held it up and questioned its expediency? Can anyone guess how long action would have been delayed before the bill could have been passed? Can anyone estimate what limitations would have been placed on the discretion of the Secretary of Labor? Can anyone suggest who would have offered amendments to limit his power?

On the 11th of April, yesterday, the Senate, as I think, deliberately voted to make peaceful strikes in war time a criminal offense, punishable by 30 years' imprisonment, thereby seriously endangering, in my opinion, the labor program that has been built up with such care under the advice of ex-President Taft and conservative business men. The men who voted for this dangerous piece of legislation yesterday, and who to-day voted in effect not to reconsider that action, embraced practically all the men who oppose this Overman bill. There are some others, but they certainly embraced all those who oppose the Overman bill.

The Secretary of Labor appointed an advisory council to outline a comprehensive plan for labor service. They outlined the plan very promptly.

First. They provided that the securing of labor should be put under a Director of Employment Service. This director is now establishing employment agencies and securing laboring men all over the country.

Second. The matter of education and training is put under an Inquiry Division.

Third. There is a Director of Conciliation and Mediation, who handles grievances and strikes.

Fourth. There is a Housing Director, to build houses for the Shipping Board, the Army and Navy, the Aircraft Board, and the District of Columbia.

Fifth. There is a Sanitation Division.

Sixth. There is a Safety Division.

All of these activities require money for salaries, supplies, expenses, and materials. The housing proposition requires millions. Estimates were duly submitted to Congress for appropriations for the various divisions. Two months have elapsed and no appropriations have been made. Some of the divisions have not even started, for lack of funds. The Shipping Board has an appropriation of $50,000,000 available for housing, but that money can not be spent by the Secretary of Labor until we pass this bill. That is one illustration which shows why the passage of this bill is necessary. That is, here is money that has been appropriated for building houses for labor in connection with the Shipping Board; the President has seen fit to put all the housing program under the direction of one bureau in order to have consistency and regularity and economy; but because the appropriation to be spent in the Department of Labor has not come through that program is held up. It would not be surprising if some of those who are opposing this bill on the ground that it is not necessary were somewhat responsible for the failure to pass the appropriations that are necessary to make this program effective.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator tell us where that appropriation bill now is?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not know where it now is.

Mr. REED. It has not reached the Senate, has it?

Mr. HOLLIS. I think not.

Mr. REED. Then how could anybody here be responsible for its delay?

Mr. HOLLIS. I did not say anybody here was responsible for it.

The votes of these men may well wreck the comprehensive war labor program of the administration. If we should pass this bill, the Secretary of Labor could at once begin to house the workmen in all the different departments.

It is my deliberate judgment that section 3 is the only section of the bill that the President really needs. The only new authorization in the bill is to spend money appropriated for one department through another department, but even this is hedged about. The money must be spent for the sole purpose for which it was originally appropriated. All the rest of the bill is full of limitations and restrictions, full of distrust and lack of confidence in the President. He can not abolish any bureau. I understood the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to say that he might abolish a bureau; but under the bill as amended he can not abolish any bureau without coming to Congress for express authority to do so. He must put his order in writing and make it a public record.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator give us his impression of the powers to be conferred upon the President by this bill with respect to the Government Printing Office? Let me remind him that, according to my understanding, a joint committee of the Congress in effect governs the major operations of the Government Printing Office, lets contracts for the purchase of paper, and provides for its general management. Would the President, under this bill, be authorized to take away the management of the Government Printing Office from the present set of officials and put it elsewhere, and thereby deprive the Congress of jurisdiction?

Mr. HOLLIS. If anything being done by the Government Printing Office were being done in such a way as to affect the war adversely, then I believe under this bill the President could take it away from the control of the joint committee of Congress. He would not do it unless there was something very bad; and if there was anything very bad the Senator would want him to do it, as I should want him to do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York simply desired to understand the idea of the Senator from New Hampshire as to the scope of the bill.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think so. I think this bill gives him complete control of a matter of that kind so far as it relates to the war; but if it does not relate to the war—and I admit that the President is to be the judge of whether it does or not; I think he is—if it does not relate to the war, then he could not act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think there can be very much room for difference of opinion between the Senator from New Hampshire and myself about what can be done under the bill. Possibly we do not use the terms with exactly the same meaning. I ask him, for instance, suppose the President should issue an order after the passage of this bill saying simply, "I hereby transfer the powers and duties of the Bureau of Pensions to the Commissioner of the General Land Office." What would become of the Bureau of Pensions?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do not see how he could do that, because that could not possibly relate to the conduct of the war. The Senator might state something else.

Mr. CUMMINS. I had not that thought in my mind.

Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator is referring to the question of abolishing bureaus?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. HOLLIS. I think under the bill that would be considered abolishing, and I suppose that is what the committee had in mind when they inserted an amendment to the effect that bureaus could not be abolished without getting express authority from the Congress.

As I started to say, under this bill, which gives such tremendous power, the President must put his order in writing and make it a public record. He can exercise his authority only in matters touching the war. He can not create any new offices. He must work with the tools already created.

I wish before closing to refer somewhat to the conduct of the war by England. I think I may fairly say, what I said a few moments ago, that the idea of a minister of munitions and a war cabinet came from the English experience.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Not only from the English experience, but also from the French experience.

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the Canadian experience.

Mr. HOLLIS. At the time the Senator from Oregon made his speech which opened up the question of this additional authority I wondered if we were doing things so much worse than they did them in England and in France. I began to look over English periodicals and magazines, and I was not much surprised to find savage criticisms by Englishmen of all English activities in connection with the war—not criticisms years ago or months ago, but current criticisms this past winter. Nothing was right in England. The Navy was inefficient and badly officered; the Army was badly handled; the financial policy was all wrong; the revenue acts were unjust and unscientific; the shipping production was in a bad way; the aircraft program was a failure.

I had to look twice at the magazines I held in my hand to make sure that I was not reading magazines printed in this country. Every criticism that has been made of our conduct of the war by Americans has been made in England by Englishmen concerning their conduct of the war. But there was the highest admiration in all these English periodicals for the way the Americans were doing their part; and the American efficiency was credited to the superior form of the American Government, the concentration of power in one man instead of dividing it among several, as in the English system.

I take the liberty of reading some extracts from the Fortnightly Review of December, 1917, which was the latest magazine available at the time this discussion arose in January. I read from page 845:

> The cabinets of all the European democracies have been fashioned upon the model of the United Kingdom. The British Cabinet resolves and acts collectively. It acts nominally by unanimous decision, but in reality by majority vote. The prime minister can not command, as does the German Emperor, but can merely suggest, propose, entreat, urge. He is merely primus inter pares within the cabinet. The whole cabinet acts with solidarity. A determined opponent within the cabinet can delay or prevent necessary action by his opposition. The cabinet can at any moment be dismissed by an adverse vote of the legislature. The tenure of office of the cabinet minister is precarious. His power may at any moment be taken away by a sudden mood of t legislature or of the people. A democracy constituted on the English model is ruled not by the intelligence of one man or of the few but by the incalculable changes of that vague power called public opinion. Cabinet ministers in England and in the democracies based on the English model are amateurs, not experienced administrators, and as their position is exceedingly precarious, because a single unfavorable vote may be fatal to them the great characteristics of such democracies are two—amateurishness and timorousness. Such governments can rarely act with foresight and rapidity. They habitually act with exasperating slowness and clumsiness, because their very constitution is unfavorable to efficiency and dispatch.

In the extracts from Mr. Lloyd-George's speech given in the foregoing we read:

"We have all talked about it. We have passed endless resolutions resolving it. But it has never yet been achieved. In this important matter we have never passed from rhetoric into reality, from speech into strategy."

To whom does Mr. Lloyd-George refer by saying "We have done so-and-so"? He speaks, evidently, not of the generals commanding the allied armies, but of the various governing boards of amateur politicians, of the various cabinets who could never arrive at perfect unity and cooperation in military action. A number of principals of important businesses can fairly easily agree on joint action. However, the cabinet ministers of various nations are not principals, but are merely agents who are responsible to the legislature in the first place and to the people in the second, who can be dismissed by their principals without notice, and who, worst of all, are ignorant of war. Perfect military cooperation can obviously be obtained only either if the direction of military affairs is left completely in the hands of military experts, who will probably fairly easily agree on a joint plan of campaign, or, if the executive power of the fighting democracies is put in the hands of a single eminent man, who not necessarily need be a soldier but who should be guided by the opinions of the best military experts around him. The attempt to obtain perfect military cooperation by the joint discussions of a number of boards composed of politicians who are amateurs in everything except in the facile art of making speeches is bound to fail and to lead to misunderstandings, confusion, endless discussion, belated half measures, and disaster.

The present war has often been described as a war between absolutism and democracy. It would be more correct to call it a war between tyranny and liberty. Democracy is a form of self-government, under which England has evolved the jointly responsible cabinet composed of amateur politicians. But since change is the essence of progress, it should not be thought that cabinet government is the highest perfection of popular government, that democratic government is impossible without a jointly responsible cabinet.

The essence of democratic government as evolved in England and in those European States which have followed England's example is, as has previously been shown, amateurishness and timorousness. The amateurishness and timorousness of the European democracies have been exhibited, not only in warfare where the experts have often been overruled by the governing political boards, but in internal politics as well. As in democracies the people rule through their representatives, as public opinion is all-powerful, it has become a guiding principle of democracy that the expression of opinions is free and is sacrosanct. That principle may do little harm in time of peace, but in time of war it may destroy a nation. Treason has been preached with impunity in England, France, Italy, and democratic Russia, and Germany has naturally taken advantage of this folly and has systematically endeavored to poison the mainsprings of public opinion in the fighting democracies to the confusion of her enemies. In France, England, Italy, and democratic Russia treason has been preached on Germany's account, and it has been tolerated because of the sanctity of free speech. Seditious writings and speeches have not led to prosecution and punishment, except when it was discovered that the preachers of sedition were in Germany's pay. Now, the Bolos and the Almereydas of France, England, Russia, and Italy are as harmful if they act bona fide as if they are bought with German gold. In the European democracies treason seems to be punishable only if it goes hand in hand with corruption. The Germans have destroyed the Russian armies, not in fair fight but by the poison of corruption and subsidized treason, and they have applied the same means apparently to Italy.

The timorousness of the governing boards of politicians who direct the European democracies is apparent not only in the toleration of treason in England, France, Italy, and Russia, and in the direction of military affairs, but it is apparent in every department of governmental action. For years the problem of retaliation, the question of the blockade, the increase of agricultural production, economic policy against Germany, the settlement of Ireland, the treatment of neutrals, the handling of the conscientious objectors, and many other questions which call for immediate and energetic action have been discussed, and the vacillating, timorous, and inexpert governing boards have talked and adopted half measures, obviously because a directing board of politicians have many minds but not a single mind, many wills but not a single will.

It would be wrong to believe that inefficiency, amateurishness, timorousness, and delay are inseparable from the democratic form of government. To believe this would be to despair of popular rule. In the United States the executive power rests, not in the hands of a cabinet of jointly responsible politicians who can be dismissed at will by the legislature, who are constantly watching every breath of public opinion, but it is placed in the hands of a single man, the President, who is elected for a term of four years and who is advised by what is called the Cabinet, a number of men whom he selects, who not necessarily need be politicians, who are not responsible to the legislature, and who are not the President's equals but are his subordinates. The fathers of the great American Republic discussed exhaustively the question whether the executive power should be placed in the hands of one man or of a number, and they came to the conclusion that the safety of the State demanded that the executive [power] should be in the hands of a single man, particularly in case of war. We read in the Federalist, in which the opinions of Alexander Hamilton and the other great founders of the American Commonwealth were laid down—

Quoting from the Federalist, and I invite the attention of the admirers of Alexander Hamilton:

Energy in the executive is a leading character in the definition of good government. It is essential to the protection of the community against foreign attacks; it is not less essential to the steady administration of the laws; to the protection of property against those irregular and high-handed combinations which sometimes interrupt the ordinary course of justice; to the security of liberty against the enterprises and assaults of ambition, of faction, and of anarchy. Every man the least conversant in Roman history knows how often that Republic was obliged to take refuge in the absolute power of a single man under the formidable title of dictator.

There can be no need, however, to multiply arguments or examples on this head. A feeble executive implies a feeble execution of the government. A feeble execution is but another phrase for a bad execution; and a government ill executed, whatever it may be in theory, must be in practice a bad government.

The ingredients which constitute energy in the executive are, first, unity; secondly, duration; thirdly, an adequate provision for its support; fourthly, competent powers.

Those politicians and statesmen who have been the most celebrated for the soundness of their principles and for the justice of their views have declared in favor of a single executive and a numerous legislature. They have, with great propriety, considered energy as the most necessary qualification of the former, and have regarded this as most applicable to power in a single hand, while they have, with equal propriety, considered the latter as best adapted to deliberation and wisdom and best calculated to conciliate the confidence of the people and to secure their privileges and interests.

That unity is conducive to energy will not be disputed. Decision, activity, secrecy, and dispatch will generally characterize the proceedings of one man in a much more eminent degree than the proceedings of any great number; and in proportion as the number is increased these qualities will be diminished.

But no favorable circumstances palliate or atone for the disadvantages of dissension in the executive department. Here they are pure and unmixed. There is no point at which they cease to operate. They serve to embarrass and weaken the execution of the plan or measure to which they relate from the first step to the final conclusion of it. They constantly counteract those qualities in the Executive which are the most necessary ingredients in its composition—vigor and expedition—and this without any counterbalancing good. In the conduct of war, in which the energy of the Executive is the bulwark of the national security, everything would be apprehended from its plurality.

Of all the cares or concerns of government, the direction of war most peculiarly demands those qualities which distinguish the exercise of power by a single hand. The direction of war implies the direction of the common strength and the power of directing and employing the common strength forms a usual and essential part in the definition of the Executive authority.

Many of the most eminent American statesmen have considered a one-man executive essential, especially in time of war. That great and wise man, President Lincoln, wrote in his message to Congress on December 3, 1861:

"It has been said that one bad general is better than two good ones, and the saying is true if taken to mean no more than that an army is better directed by a single mind, though inferior, than by two superior ones at variance and cross purposes with each other.

"And the same is true in all joint operations wherein those engaged can have none but a common end in view and can differ only as to the choice of means. In a storm at sea no one on board can wish the ship to sink, and yet not infrequently all go down together, because too many will direct and no single mind can be allowed to control."

War is a highly technical matter which requires expert direction and a perfect national organization, the more so as the present struggle is not merely one between armies but one between nations. It is bad enough if in the present fight amateurs in government and strategy are pitted against the best professionals. But it is still worse if the direction amateurs have to rely on a clumsy and unworkable organization. Many businesses possess amateur boards of directors, comparable with cabinets, but the real managements of affairs is, of course, left in the hands of a managing director, who is an eminent practical expert. No business could be run on the principle on which Great Britain and the other European democracies are governed. An organization which is totally impracticable in the case of business, where merely some money is at stake, an organization which would ruin the most flourishing business in a short time, is surely dangerous and inadvisable in the case of a nation at war.

I now conclude and I am reading from the work of an Englishman in an English magazine about the English Government, comparing the English Government with the American. He says:

The world has been amazed at the energy and ability with which President Wilson is organizing the United States for war. He is able to act thoroughly and quickly because he controls the American executive. If America was cursed with a many-headed executive, we should see the same feebleness, hesitation, timorousness, and interminable delays, and the same toleration of treason, which have done such infinite harm to the European democracies organized upon the British model.

The present war has disclosed the fact that a democracy is not successful in war; that a board of amateur politicians acting collectively is bound to be inefficient, improvident, and slow in action, and that the cooperation of the various political boards representing the allied States is almost impossible. The present system should be changed before it is too late. The politicians must surely recognize their personal incompetence and the unwieldiness of the organization of the national executive. They should therefore entrust the conduct of the war to a single man and confine their activities to creating the necessary discipline and obedience, to keeping the nation together. They should subordinate themselves to the directing head. There should be a single director of national affairs for the duration of the war. The question is whether national direction had better be intrusted to an eminent politician-statesman, or to an eminent organizer and man of affairs, or to a general or admiral of paramount ability and energy. It is to be hoped that the necessary innovation will first be made in England; that England will show once more the way to the other European democracies. The simplest way of achieving unity and rapidity in the executive would be to make the Prime Minister solely responsible for the conduct of the war and the national administration, making the other ministers his subordinates. The position of the Prime Minister would then approximate to that of the President of the United States. The tenets of democracy would surely not be violated by adapting the organization of the United States to European needs. With a simple and common-sense organization international cooperation against Germany would be easier than it has been hitherto.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator tell us from what he has been reading?

Mr. HOLLIS. From the December, 1917, Fortnightly Review.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was before the achievement of our Aircraft Board was made public?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not hear the date. Will the Senator give it?

Mr. HOLLIS. December, 1917; last December. It was the latest available one in January, when the storm burst over the investigation of the Senate Military Committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then the observations of the Senator do not relate to our progress in the war.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; it shows that he was talking about what he knew at home, just as we are talking about what we know at home. It may be that his opinion of the value of American institutions is no more valuable than our opinion of English institutions. I merely cite it as showing that the same criticism comes up in every country in every war.

Mr. GORE. I ask the Senator if the English statute still permits the use of scurrilous and abusive language in speaking of their form of government?

Mr. HOLLIS. I am not able to state.

At about the time the investigations of the Senate Military Affairs Committee were first made public I attended a dinner in Washington and heard a speech delivered by Col. Josiah Wedgewood, a colonel in the British Army, who had been wounded in the war and who was in this country. Col. Wedgewood made this statement: He said the only thing which keeps the British labor loyal to this war is its faith in President Wilson; that the greatest asset England has in the United States—greater than money, supplies, or troops—is President Wilson. It is too much to ask of the Members of the United States Senate the same faith in Woodrow Wilson that Col. Wedgewood and the English workingmen feel, but if we can not all trust in him implicitly let us at least grant him such powers as are obviously necessary to help him win the war, and let us do it in a spirit that will not impair, at least, the confidence placed in him by our brothers in arms across the seas.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from New Hampshire does not understand that from anything I said I dispute the statement he last made?

Mr. HOLLIS. Oh, I do not; and at the beginning of my remarks——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am in entire accord with any praise of the President on account of his attitude in that respect.

Mr. HOLLIS. I thought I fully acquitted the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. But what the Senator from New Hampshire read from the Fortnightly Review was, of course, printed and disseminated about the power which the President has by virtue of his office, and I am not only willing that he shall exercise all that, but I am willing to give him a great deal more. I only want to know what I am giving him when I am giving it.

Mr. REED. I send to the desk five amendments to the pending bill, and ask that they may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. KIRBY obtained the floor.

Mr. GORE. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if he will allow me to submit the report of the committee of conference on the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I should like to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Senator realizes that there is some need for haste.

Mr. KIRBY. I do not want to delay that measure, but I do not think the bill under discussion ought to be sidetracked for anything. However, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Arkansas.

I send to the desk the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I will state that if it requires any protracted debate or leads to it I will not insist on proceeding with it.

Mr. KIRBY. I will ask the Senator if it is likely to lead to protracted discussion?

Mr. GORE. I do not think it will. I think a brief statement will obviate any discussion. I have spoken to the Senator in charge of the unfinished business in respect to the matter.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well.

Mr. GORE. The Senator realizes that it is a matter of great haste and urgency that is be passed.

Mr. KIRBY. I yield the floor.

Mr. GORE. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GORE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 23, 24, 25, 33, 34, 37, 39, 40, and 41.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 27, 28, 29, 30, 35, 36, 42, and 43, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert the following: "$500,000: Provided, however, That in carrying out the purpose of this appropriation, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it shall be necessary to destroy tuberculous animals and to compensate owners for loss thereof, he may, in his discretion, expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere out of the moneys of this appropriation, such sums as he shall determine to be necessary for the reimbursement of owners of animals so destroyed, in cooperation with such States, counties, or municipalities, as shall by law or by suitable action in keeping with its authority in the matter, and by rules and regulations adopted and enforced in pursuance thereof, provide inspection of tuberculous animals and for compensation to owners of animals so destroyed, but no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used in compensating owners of such animals except in cooperation with and supplementary to payments to be made by State, county, or municipality where destruction of such animals shall take place; nor shall any payment be made hereunder as compensation for or on account of any such animal destroyed if at the time of inspection or test of such animal or at the time of destruction thereof, it shall belong to or be upon the premises of any person, firm, or corporation, to which it has been sold, shipped, or delivered for the purpose of being slaughtered: Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated, no payment as compensation for any tuberculous animal destroyed shall exceed one-third of the difference between the appraised value of such animal and the value of the salvage thereof; that no payment hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, county, or municipality, where the animal shall be destroyed; and that in no case shall any payment hereunder be more than $25 for any grade animal or more than $50 for any pure-bred animal, and no payment shall be made unless the owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations: And provided further, That the act approved May 29, 1884 (23 Stats. L., p. 31), be, and the same is hereby, amended to permit cattle which have reacted to the tuberculin test to be shipped, transported, or moved from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, for immediate slaughter, in accordance with such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe permit cattle which have been shipped for breeding or feeding purposes from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and which have reacted to the tuberculin test subsequent to such shipment, to be reshipped in interstate commerce to the original owner"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert: "Provided also, That $150,000 shall be set aside for the destruction of vegetation from which such rust spores originate"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows: In line 8 omit the words "in the Forest Service"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as limiting the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture over and respecting the supervision of the operation of the said Georgia Experiment Station as set forth in said acts of Congress"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 7 of said amendment after the word "reasonable" insert: "and as nearly as may be to cover the cost"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "$25,892,653" insert "$25,856,753"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "hereafter" in said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert the following: "To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with individuals, firms, or corporations, owning or operating plants for drying or dehydration of vegetables, fruits, and other perishable edible products, to determine the best means and processes of dehydration and to disseminate information as to the value and suitability of such products for human food, $250,000, which sum shall be immediately available: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, if the President shall determine it to be necessary, to use all or any part of this appropriation for the establishment and operation of a plant or plants for the dehydration of vegetables, fruits, and other perishable edible products in any place or places in the United States for the purpose of supplying food for the Army and Navy, and the money received from the operation of any such plant or plants shall constitute a revolving fund until June 30, 1919"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the Senate amendment insert "$27,875,353"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 44.

T. P. GORE,
E. D. SMITH,
HOKE SMITH,
G. W. NORRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. F. LEVER,
GORDON LEE,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate adopt the report so far as the conferees have reached an agreement and insist upon amendment numbered 44, which is the wheat amendment.

Mr. NELSON. That is the wheat amendment?

Mr. GORE. Yes; it is the wheat proposition. We did not reach an agreement on that amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Did the conferees agree on the potato-grading amendment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. The Senate conferees receded on that amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question? I did not understand what was done with what is commonly known as the Gore amendment fixing the price of wheat at $2.50.

Mr. GORE. The conferees of the two Houses were not able to agree on that amendment. I have embodied in my motion a proposition that the Senate continue to insist upon that amendment. Everything else has been adjusted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to inquire about the provision agreed to in the Senate which provided in substance that there should be no regulation or governmental inspection of potatoes.

Mr. GORE. The Senate conferees receded on that.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator whether I am correct in my recollection that there was no law providing for inspection?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. REED. And somebody undertook to set up an inspection. The Senate undertook to stop the use of that arbitrary and useless power, and you have receded from that action of the Senate?

Mr. GORE. The Senate conferees did recede from the amendment referred to.

Mr. REED. What reason is there to recede from an assertion or a protest, for it may be so regarded, by a legislative provision against unauthorized action?

Mr. GORE. I may say that it is the ancient reason which characterizes every conference between two Houses. The House conferees would not accept that amendment. I may say, in addition to that, however, that telegrams came to the conferees from various parts of the country urging that the Senate should recede from this amendment.

Mr. REED. From whom did they come?

Mr. GORE. I think, as a rule, from dealers in potatoes. I may say, however, in addition to that, the growers were here from the State of Michigan; that this amendment was offered by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]; and that the conferees were practically assured that an arrangement had been reached which would give satisfaction alike to the growers and to those who insisted upon the right.

Mr. REED. By whom was the arrangement made?

Mr. GORE. The House conferee, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan, had the matter up with those in charge of the grading activities of the department. I do not know whether it was the Department of Agriculture or the Food Administration. Mr. MCLAUGHLIN was very insistent that the Senate amendment should be retained, but his conferees would not agree with him. They would not accept the amendment, but we were given assurances that an adjustment was in prospect which would be satisfactory.

Mr. REED. An adjustment between whom?

Mr. GORE. That those who have in charge the grading and superintend the grading had virtually consented to modify the rules and regulations so as to meet the complaints of the potato growers in Michigan. I think the complaint came from that quarter. I may say this was the point of difference. The rules and regulations which had been adopted classified as No. 1 all potatoes in excess of 1¾ inches in diameter. The growers insisted that that should be reduced by an eighth of an inch so that potatoes in excess of 1⅝ inches in diameter, round potatoes, should be classified as No. 1. We were given assurance that that had practically been effected.

Mr. REED. But what I am trying to get at is this: Who set up these regulations in the first place?

Mr. GORE. I understand that it was done by the Department of Agriculture in conjunction with the Food Administration. I think the matter has been under consideration for some time.

Mr. REED. But by what authority?

Mr. GORE. I do not believe there is any authority.

Mr. REED. Now, let us start with the assumption that there is no authority. There being no authority, the gentleman who undertook to usurp the authority proceeds to make an agreement with some potato grower or growers, and having reached an agreement with that individual that fact is brought to the Congress of the United States and the conferees thereupon recede from a provision put in the bill by the Senate which prohibits the expenditure of any money for the doing of any illegal act. So by implication, as it is now left, the money we are about to appropriate may be used by the gentlemen who are seeking to usurp authority for an illegal purpose, because an agreement was reached between the usurper and some individual.

Mr. President, I protest against that sort of thing. The day has pretty nearly come when the Government of the United States ought to insist that no man shall spend any of the money of the people in doing an unauthorized act.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I may say that a hearing was had in behalf of the department and in behalf of the growers before the House conferees. The Senate conferees declined to attend the hearing because the matter was in conference and we felt committed by the Senate action. But, of course, the Senate conferees were not sovereign in the premises. The House conferees manifested every indisposition to recede. Of course, we had no infallible way of telling whether they would ultimately recede or not, but judging by all the signs and facts and circumstances we had available the Senate conferees were forced to the conclusion that the House conferees would not recede from their objection to the amendment. Of course, the Senator realizes that there was another amendment respecting which time was of the highest importance. Whether that had too much influence with the Senate conferees of course I am not able to say; but we were anxious to bring in a report and speed the consideration of the measure.

Mr. REED. But you have not brought in a report of an agreement. The matter that is pending and is of the highest importance is still in abeyance.

Mr. GORE. We were not able to agree on that amendment. I do not know how far I can go within parliamentary limits in describing what happened; but the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, I may say, was also chairman of the House conferees, and he had given assurance to the other body that he would bring that amendment back for a separate vote, so that it really was never in conference, as a matter of fact. As the House had asked for the conference and the Senate had granted the conference, of course the papers were in the hands of the Senate conferees and we had to pursue this course in order to return the papers to the House that they may have a vote upon the wheat amendment.

Mr. REED. But we do not have to agree to this report as far as it is presented here in order that the House may take the action referred to. If we refuse to agree to this conference report as far as it makes an agreement, is there any doubt in the world that the House can then proceed to take a separate vote?

Mr. GORE. I assume this could be done, that the report be adopted as to the potato amendment.

Mr. SWANSON. The report must be adopted or rejected as a whole.

Mr. GORE. I believe that is the rule of the Senate. Then under the rule of the Senate we shall have to act on the conference report as a whole.

Mr. REED. The report does not come in here as a whole. It is a partial report.

Mr. GORE. That is the only way it could be done. The chairman of the House conferees gave the House assurance that he would bring the wheat amendment back for a vote. I suppose for a hundred years he would not agree; I think he would have been content to have had the bill remain in conference until the dog days come. But the Senate conferees were not willing to do that. We had an apprehension, I should say, rather than a suspicion, that some people were perfectly willing to mark time, and under the circumstances we did not feel justified in doing that.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, if this report is adopted it goes to the House, and if the House recedes from its disagreement to the Senate amendment which is still in conference, that will pass the bill and the matter ends. If this report is rejected the bill goes back to conference for an entire agreement on all matters.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say a few words in connection with this potato-grading matter. I presume Virginia grows as many potatoes as does almost any other State in the Union. The grading has been carried on largely at the request of the growers. Their desire to have their potatoes officially graded grew out of the circumstances that in many instances when they have shipped their potatoes to the commission merchants in the cities they had no proof as to whether their potatoes were really graded in the first grade, the second grade, or the third grade, and many of them were swindled. If an official grading is provided the growers would have assurance as to whether the potatoes which they send to market are correctly graded.

I have received numerous telegrams from Virginia potato growers who are anxious that the grading of potatoes shall not be entirely eliminated, because in that event they would be remitted to the condition in which they have been heretofore and would be completely at the mercy of the commission merchants, who sometimes notify the growers who ship them potatoes that their potatoes were of the third grade or the fourth grade, and make their returns accordingly, when, as a matter of fact, the farmers should have received returns on a higher grading. When the potatoes are graded properly, of course, much better results are obtained, and there is greater satisfaction. Under a proper system of grading the growers can be paid for the potatoes according to their real grade. The same thing is true of cotton and of other commodities produced on the farm. The grading has largely been done at the request and for the benefit of the growers. Of course, very frequently the grading is unjustly done unless it is properly supervised; and the results are severe on the growers.

As I have stated, I have received a number of telegrams from Virginia, and I think my colleague, the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], has likewise received similar telegrams protesting against the elimination of grading.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. Does the Senator understand that there is any demand from the great potato-growing sections of the Northeast, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont, that there should be any such classification as has been established?

Mr. SWANSON. I have not heard from any section except Virginia. In that State there are two counties, Accomac and Northampton, which are the largest growers of potatoes in the country; and I understand that they are opposed to the entire elimination of grading.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I have received a telegram, and laid it before the conference committee; and I think the action taken by the conferees will meet with the approval of the potato growers of Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I also presented a telegram to the conferees. The trouble in this matter is that farmers send their potatoes to the market when they are graded, but they have been swindled by the returns being made on the basis that their potatoes were third grade when they were really of the second or first grade. Consequently they are desirous of having some means of ascertaining when they ship their potatoes to market that they are to be paid according to the proper grades.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I ask the chairman of the committee, is this demand purely local? Does it come from Virginia, and Virginia only?

Mr. GORE. I think that the telegrams came in from other States. I have several on the subject, quite a number of them.

Mr. PAGE. I have had no communication from New England on the subject, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. SWANSON. The potato growers of Virginia have not asked for a change of the law, as I understand it; all they ask is that the law remain as it is.

Mr. REED. Is there any law?

Mr. SWANSON. Whether there is a law or not I can not say, but there must be some authority for the grading which has been carried on. If there is no authority for it, why should we prohibit the farmers protecting themselves from having their potatoes, which they have raised and which really are first-grade potatoes, being graded improperly? The man who raises third-grade potatoes would like to sell them as first-grade potatoes, of course, but the man who raises first-grade potatoes does not want returns to be made to him under the basis of third-grade potatoes.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, with the permission of the Senator in charge of this matter, the Senator from Virginia is discussing one question when the question before us is quite a different one.

There is no one who will object to the farmers making arrangements for the grading of their potatoes; they can make that arrangement in any way they see fit, but that is not the question here. The question here is, whether certain men, being officials, or claiming to be officials, of the United States Government, can themselves set up the right to grade potatoes and then can prohibit the farmers from selling their potatoes unless the potatoes are sold in conformity with the rules and regulations set up by these unauthorized men, and whether the Senate will appropriate the money of the people of the United States to pay for those unauthorized and illegal acts?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just one moment and I will be through. If it is desired to have a Federal grading of potatoes, then let the law be brought in here, and let us discuss it, as we did the proposition to grade wheat. A very bad bill was brought in here of that kind, but it was defeated; and finally a law was worked out that is reasonably satisfactory. So, in this instance, there ought to be a bill brought in.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has moved to adopt part of the conference report and send part of it back, which can not be done.

Mr. GORE. That is not quite correct.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has to be accepted or rejected as a whole.

Mr. GORE. Is the Senator making the suggestion to me or to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. OVERMAN. To the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Oh, no; I have moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Except as to one item.

Mr. GORE. We did not agree on that; that was left open.

Mr. MARTIN. That was not reported.

Mr. GORE. That is still open, and we simply insist upon that amendment, so that if we agree to the points respecting which the conferees reached an agreement, then amendment No. 44 will go back to the House.

Further, in connection with what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has said, I would remind him that the food-control act was "fearfully and wonderfully made," and if the Food Administration should find power in some obscure clause to grade potatoes it would not be at all astounding to me. There is a section in that bill which gives the Food Controller or the President the power to buy wheat, flour, meal, beans, and potatoes. How extensive or plenary this power may be, I am unable to say; but that is probably the source of this power, if it has any foundation in legislation whatever.

I hope the Senate will not send this conference report back to conference, because I think it a matter of the highest and most urgent importance that the wheat amendment be facilitated to a vote in the other House. The farmers of the country have a right to know what the fate of that amendment is to be. Perhaps the seeding of millions of acres of spring wheat may depend upon the passage of that measure; its rejection may have a contrary effect; but, at any rate, certainty and a final decision are due to the farmers of the country, and I hope that delay will not be insisted upon.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not think it is of much consequence to discuss the potato provision of the bill now, inasmuch as the conferees have agreed to eliminate it from the bill, and I would not have mentioned it had it not been brought up by other Senators. I desire to say now, however, that the farmers of Michigan, so far as they have spoken, either individually or as organizations, have protested very strongly against the scheme of potato grading which has been put in force by the Food Administration.

I do not think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] states the case quite correctly when he says that the purpose is to protect the farmers against the necessity of selling in the market a first-grade article as third grade. The rule practically provided for two grades, although there is a third grade, which includes potatoes which pass through a screen an inch and a half, I believe, in diameter; but the provision that has been put in force does not guarantee quality in any respect. A large-sized potato may be the most inedible potato on the market, whereas the average-sized potato, the small potato, in many instances is the most edible. Everybody knows that; there is not a housewife in the land who does not know it. Large potatoes are frequently hollow and not fit to eat at all.

The farmers of Michigan may be mistaken, but they—and I think their potato industry is quite as great as that of Virginia—are opposed to it. Mr. Miller, of the Food Administration, tells me that they do not know what they are talking about. He has been in to see me two or three times. He has also been up to Michigan where he had a talk with the farmers, and had considerable trouble, I am informed, at a public meeting held at Lansing on this very subject. When I asked Mr. Miller why he put this rule in force now he said because there was an opportunity to do so. I asked him if he thought it was going to increase the food production or improve its edible quality, and he said no; that was not the object, but it was to put in force a rule that would be controlling in the market in the future and would in the end be beneficial to all parties concerned. I tried to impress upon him that it was unwise at this time, in a period of war, to impose a rule or a provision that was not going to increase the amount of food or its quality but which aroused opposition in the farmer.

This amendment was put in the bill on the floor by my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan], who is absent. I felt that as a war measure it was very well, indeed, to eliminate this potato-grading provision, and I still think so. I think it would have been better for the production of food in the United States if the department could have left this out, inasmuch as no one will contend that it is an encouragement to the production of potatoes in any part of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment No. 44, still in disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 13, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 12, 1918.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Asst. Surg. Charles V. Aikin to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 4, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Frank M. Faget to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 6, 1918.

Asst. Surg. John H. Linson to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 5, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Knox E. Miller to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 3, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Alvin R. Sweeney to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 7, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Clifford E. Waller to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 4, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Newton E. Wayson to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 6, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Joseph G. Wilson to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from March 3, 1918.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

First Lieut. Frederick Pelham Sutherland, Medical Reserve Corps, to be first lieutenant in the Medical Corps with rank from April 4, 1918.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

CHAPLAIN.

Chaplain Joseph L. Hunter, Coast Artillery Corps, to be chaplain with the rank of major from April 5, 1918.

TEMPORARY PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

To be lieutenant colonels with rank from March 7, 1918.

Maj. Theodore H. Koch, Coast Artillery Corps (Ammunition Train).

Maj. James L. Long, Coast Artillery Corps.

To be lieutenant colonel with rank from March 10, 1918.

Maj. Frederick L. Dengler, Coast Artillery Corps.

To be lieutenant colonel with rank from March 18, 1918.

Maj. Richard H. Williams, Coast Artillery Corps.

To be first lieutenant with rank from December 22, 1917.

Second Lieut. William W. Dinsmore, Coast Artillery Corps.

To be first lieutenant with rank from December 23, 1917.

Second Lieut. Arthur Duffy, Coast Artillery Corps.

To be first lieutenant with rank from December 24, 1917.

Second Lieut. Ellsworth Young, Coast Artillery Corps.

To be first lieutenant with rank from December 25, 1917.

Second Lieut. John W. Fuchs, Coast Artillery Corps.

To be first lieutenants with rank from December 26, 1917.

Second Lieut. Thomas R. Bartlett, Coast Artillery Corps.

Second Lieut. Dudley F. Taylor, Coast Artillery Corps.

INFANTRY.

To be major with rank from August 5, 1917.

Capt. Charles W. Harris, additional officer.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENT, BY PROMOTION, IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY.

To be first lieutenant with rank from September 24, 1917.

Second Lieut. Tully C. Garner.

PORTO RICO REGIMENT OF INFANTRY.

Second Lieut. Ernesto F. Colon to be first lieutenant with rank from February 21, 1918.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS AS SECOND LIEUTENANTS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

Second Lieut. Edward Italy Watson, jr., Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. William Ewart Gladstone Graham, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Gerage D. Curtis, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Jesse Ralston Lippincott, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Gaylord Benton Angus, Officers' Reserve Corps.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Second Lieut. William Herman Goodrich, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. William Harry Bauman, Officers' Reserve Corps.

First Lieut. Henry Myron Smith, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Edwin Joseph Dowd, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Harry Morris Krohn, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Clem Oliver Gunn, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Ralph Moore Wyatt, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Louis Albert Williford, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Percy Stuart Lowe, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Maury Leo Webster, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Claud Thomas Gunn, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Wayne Allen Harrod, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Lewis Franklin Moore, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. George Washington Phillips, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Leon Aurile White, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Edward Dreiss, jr., Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Winslow Burhans Van Devanter, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Harold Young Keeler, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Foster Chichester Harlow, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Edward Nolan Delahunt, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. George Minot Cavis, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Phillips Wainwright Loomis, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Ephraim Preston Jolls, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. John William Callahan, Officers' Reserve Corps.

Second Lieut. Willis Doyle Kimmel, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Blackstone Drummond Ayres, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Augustus Chambers, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Alan Fuller Cameron, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Howard Milton Cool, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Charles Harold Cuppett, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Walter Lee McCormick, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Norton Swasey Crocker, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Robert Martin Chase, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Lyman Clement Rafferty, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Arnold Dante Amoroso, Officers' Reserve Corps.
Second Lieut. Harold Francis O'Donnell, Officers' Reserve Corps.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 12, 1918.

GOVERNOR OF ALASKA.

Thomas Riggs, jr., of Alaska, to be governor of Alaska, vice John F. A. Strong, term expired and resigned.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

John Clark Knox to be United States district judge, southern district of New York.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

Joseph Winczewski to be register of the land office at Duluth, Minn.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 12, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, in whom we put our trust, in obedience to a natural impulse, a strong and fervent desire, and in imitation of the world's great Exemplar, who never entered upon a duty, great or small, without seeking Thee, we come praying for the outpouring of Thy spirit, that we may resist evil and be strong to pursue the right as it is given us to see the right. Hear us when we pray out of the fervency of the soul, for our soldiers and their associates, the allied forces, who are engaged in the world's greatest conflict, that they may stand firm and beat back the forces who are intent in their object to destroy all the civilization of the past. Especially do we pray for the wounded, that they may be cared for in the awful suffering through which they are passing, by warm and sympathetic hearts, deft fingers to bind up the wounds, and all the skill that has been revealed through the ages. Comfort, we beseech Thee, the sorrowing whose loved ones are suffering the fortunes of war, and we will praise Thee, through Him who taught us the glory of self-sacrifice. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, under the rules this is pension day. The chairman of the committee, Gen. SHERWOOD, does not want to interfere with the pending bill. Therefore, at his suggestion, I ask unanimous consent that the pension bill—there is only one—in order on the calendar to-day be taken up at 5.30 o'clock this evening, unless the pending bill is completed before that time, in which case that it be taken up on completion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the pension bill be in order when the pending bill is finished, provided the pending bill is finished by 5.30 o'clock p. m., and if it is not finished by that time that it be taken up in any event.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that request should be granted in that form.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thought the House would want to adjourn at 5.30 o'clock anyway, and in that way it would not interfere with anything else. If the gentleman in charge of the bill prefers it, I shall ask to change the request to have the pension bill taken up at the completion of this bill, whenever that may happen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request to have the pension bill considered whenever this pending bill is completed. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that the request applies to to-day only?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; it applies to any time.

Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to say that he hoped that the river and harbor appropriation bill might be finished to-morrow. I do not want to object to the pension bill being taken up, but it can be taken up at the end of the day and concluded in less than 20 minutes' time. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask that it be taken up to-day after this bill is finished.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if we agree to take up this bill it might just as well be taken up now as at the end of the day.

Mr. GARNER. Let us proceed with the pending bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. There is only one pension bill on the calendar.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think we ought to agree to take it up at the end of the day.

Mr. RUSSELL. We are willing to take it up whenever this bill is completed, but some seem to object to that.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me that is a most reasonable request. Why not agree that it shall be taken up after this bill is finished?

Mr. GARNER. Immediately after this bill is finished.

Mr. GILLETT. Whenever the bill is finished, it shall be in order, not taken up. Then it may be taken up to-morrow. What is the objection to its being taken up to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest to the gentleman that as soon as we get through with the pending bill we can finish the pension bill in 20 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, would it not be better to defer the request until we know more about how much time it will take to finish this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws the request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts for one week, on account of illness.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. VOLSTEAD, on account of serious illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. VOLSTEAD, on account of illness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9901. An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad; and

H. R. 9504. An act to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3980. An act to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein an address delivered by the Hawaiian Delegate [Mr. KALANIANAOLE] on war-time prohibition in the Hawaiian Islands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on a matter connected with the third liberty loan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, we are now about to enter upon the further discussion of one of the most important bills in connection with the present emergency. It seems to me there should be a larger attendance here to hear the argument, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD 19 references of Dr. Dublin, the famous lecturer, on the alarming decline of the birth rate. It is only about a fourth of a column of the RECORD, and I would like to get it in.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing certain data about the decline of the birth rate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the point I made on the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

LIABILITY TO MILITARY SERVICE OF CERTAIN REGISTERED PERSONS (S. J. RES. 123).

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. NICHOLLS].

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is needless for me to say since I have taken the positions which I have taken on the floor of the House, that I am first, last, and all the time behind this administration for the successful prosecution of this war. It hurts me when bills come before the Military Affairs Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, which I must conscientiously oppose. When I say oppose, I do not mean to disagree with them in toto. That is not the question, but I do believe that men who are serving here have but one end in view, and that is the welfare of the country which we all love so well, and when I say that I mean the men on both sides of this House, because I want to say the Republicans have been as loyal to this administration in this war as the Democrats have been. [Applause.] We are all here seeking to win this war, and to win it as quickly as possible, but I want to recall briefly a little of the history of the events which have been enacted since you and I have been in Congress. The War Department is not infallible. Even our great President is not infallible; the Committee on Military Affairs of this House is not infallible; nor is the House infallible, but when the mistakes are being made it is the duty of every man representing the people of this country to try to remedy those mistakes. When the Hay bill came up in 1916 some of us were criticized for insisting upon the National Guard being considered as the nucleus of the new Army. The War College, the General Staff, the men that the President depends upon to give him information, because he has not the time to give his own personal attention to every matter that comes up, opposed the Committee on Military Affairs on that proposition, and when war was declared where would our country have been had there been no National Guard to form a nucleus of the Army? They were wrong. They now admit they were wrong. When the draft bill came before the House members of my committee, including myself, thought that the proper way to raise this Army was by the volunteer system. We fought it out on the floor of the House, and after losing the volunteer proposition we voted for the draft method, because it was the only way left to raise the Army, which was absolutely needed. At that time a majority of the committee opposed the draft bill; the War College and the General Staff said the bill was absolutely correct, and the papers said that some of the men who opposed it were guilty of treason to their country.

Now, what is the situation to-day? They have introduced this bill in which they virtually say: "We admit you were right and we were wrong. The former bill is absolutely incorrect, and we propose to introduce a bill now which virtually nullifies everything in the first bill, which we then said was right." Now, my friends, that is the situation. I merely cite these instances to show you they were wrong then, and if wrong then they are liable to be wrong now; and I rise to give you our reasons for signing the minority report and supporting the amendment which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] will introduce.

Now, what is the difference in the two bills? Let me say there is one county in my district, Union County, which did not have to furnish a single man under the first draft, because they had more men who volunteered to fight for it than the draft called for. At that time they said to Union County, "We will give you credit for the men you furnished." Now, the Federal Government goes back to Union County, S. C., and says, "We did not promise you that."

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman say that Union County is the only county in the United States furnishing a full quota of volunteers?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. In the first draft.

Mr. KEARNS. The only one in the United States?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. That is my information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have one in my district.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The same thing is true of Oregon.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I congratulate you gentlemen, but that is not my information.

Mr. RUSSELL. And Howard County, Mo.

Mr. MADDEN. And the whole State of Illinois besides.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I wish I could believe all of your statements, but that is not what the record shows.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman require proof because his information was correct?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. No; I do not need any proof. I get mine from the Judge Advocate General's office.

Mr. STAFFORD. Wisconsin has been many times maligned, and it has five counties——

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I can not oppose Wisconsin, because I married there.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. To go on: There is no doubt whatever of there having been made an agreement between the people of the United States and their legislative bodies that the patriotic volunteers should be treated at least as well as the draft men. But we will not keep that promise. The patriotic counties reasonably thought that there would be a premium on patriotism. This bill does not give them even the advantages which those communities have whose men had to be forced into the service of their country. There is no doubt that there was an implied, if not an expressed, agreement that the patriotic communities would be given at least as much credit for the volunteers as for the men taken under the draft act. Are you going to violate that agreement? I do not believe you will. Let me give you another proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I have but 12 minutes. I would like to, but I want to get through with my speech.

Now, gentlemen, here is what this bill proposes to do: Under the old law each State was required to furnish its quota according to population. I am frank to tell you that I do not think in the States where they have a large alien population they should be required to furnish in proportion to the population. So far as that is concerned, I agree with this bill, because a man who is not entitled to fight, who does not want to fight, a man who can not be made to fight, should not be counted as material from which to make up the Army.

I do say this to you, however, that if the bill carried out that proposition, and that alone, I would not be opposing it. But here is what this present bill does: It says to the War Department, to the General Staff, not to the President, "You can go to Iowa, the State of my friend HULL over there, and you can draw 5,000 men from Iowa, and you can go to Connecticut," without meaning any reflection on her loyalty, "and not take a single man."

Now, the proposition I stand for is this: If it is an honor to fight for this country—and it is—then that honor should be equally distributed among the States of this Union. If it is a duty to fight for this country, that duty should be equally distributed among the States of this Union. If it is a burden to fight for this country, that burden should be equally distributed among the States of this Union. I ask no favors. You can look up the record of my State and you will find that it is furnishing every man called for without question. I am perfectly willing for them to have the honor of fighting for this country, but I am perfectly willing also for the other States to share in that honor.

That is the position of the minority of this committee. It is not our desire to do anything to retard the prosecution of this war; on the contrary, it is our desire to do everything to back up this administration and to win this war. But when we take from those States who did not furnish their quota the honor of doing their share to win the war we are doing them a great injustice. As I stated before, those are the points that caused me to sign this minority report. I do not believe—and this is only my private opinion—that the President of the United States has time personally to prepare or to digest the details of every bill that is presented by the War Department, but that some of them are prepared by the War College and the General Staff. These officers may know more of the conditions of our country than the Members of this Congress, but the Constitution and the laws do not so regard it. Gentlemen, this Congress is a coordinate branch of the Government and it has its constitutional duties to perform. It is the duty of the General Staff to organize and perfect the Army provided for it by Congress and to control its operation. It is the duty of Congress—your duty and mine—to provide the men who are to be welded into this Army and the means to equip and support it. We have our clear duties to the country to perform. It is for us to provide the men and the means to win this war in the best way that we can do so. We should get from the War College and the General Staff all the information which we need and they possess for the working out of the best plans for raising the men and the money to win the war. This is your duty and mine and we can not delegate it to the War College or to the War Department. To do so might relieve us from some labor and some responsibility, but it would be a clear neglect of our duties as legislators for our country imposed upon us by the Constitution and our oaths of office. We might escape some labors and some responsibility, but in doing so we ourselves would be slackers.

I do not propose, however, to give a few officers in Washington the right to take charge of all the civic population of the United States and decide whom they will call into action regardless of their rights or of the justice to the several localities which are to furnish the men to do the fighting.

I will not vote for a bill giving to them that power. I am not affected by what anybody else thinks. I am giving you my own views. I will tell you what they want to do. In this bill they fix it so that every man who is drawn into the service of his country—with a sister bill that will be introduced with it—shall be placed in class 1. What will be the result of that? You and I refuse to vote to make the 19-year-old boys of this country who could not vote do our fighting. There are still some people in the War Department who continue to want the kids to do the fighting for the men. They hope then, and they hope now, to fill these classes with the 21-year-old boys and let you and me and other men who are talking war, preaching war, declaring war, get out and sit back and say let the boys do the fighting. These boys can not vote, because you are taking them over there; but they must fight, because their fathers and their brothers and their uncles said to them, "You boys do the fighting and we will do the talking." That is the situation in a nutshell.

Gentlemen, I have talked to you longer than I intended to; but, as I stated at first, I do not like to take a position which is seemingly against the views of the War Department without giving my clear reasons for my position

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask a few minutes more.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one more minute to the gentleman.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. I hate to take a position seemingly against the administration; but we are as much a part of this administration as the War College or the President. We have our duties to perform as they have theirs. We are as loyal to the Government and to the welfare of the country as they are, and I concede it to be the duty of every Member of this House to weigh these questions fearlessly, clearly, and conscientiously, and to advocate what he believes to be for the welfare of the country we love so well. Then, when we have gotten together on the best plans for making safe American freedom, American democracy, and the democracy of the world, let us push those plans to perfection with all the vigor and energy we possess.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. How much time have I left, and how much time has the gentleman from Kentucky?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska has 28 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] 31 minutes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky to use some time now.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that we shall have only one more speech.

The SPEAKER. If nobody wants to make a speech, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to change the method of apportioning the draft quotas. Before it is passed we have a right to inquire as to how the present law was administered. The selective-draft act provides that the draft quotas shall be apportioned according to "the population." Congress undoubtedly intended that the population as determined by the census of 1910 should be the basis. But the law did not clearly state the intent of Congress, and that vagueness enabled the Provost Marshal General to interpret the act to mean that estimates of population could be used instead of the actual enumeration made in 1910. It is these estimates of population that have been the cause of all the complaint which we have heard the country over. In view of what happened in that case we can not now afford to assume the risk involved in the adoption of legislation, at the request of that bureau chief, affecting the same important subject.

I propose to demonstrate to the House that in the apportionment among the several States of the quotas for the first draft the Provost Marshal General took advantage of the lack of direct instructions from Congress, and by construing and interpreting the law in a manner that was never intended, did such a grave injustice to many States and communities that, on his own confession, he is now compelled to ask for remedial legislation.

The facts are that the Provost Marshal General, without authority of law, arbitrarily apportioned the State quotas for the first draft of 687,000 men by a method that was most unfair to the people of my own and a number of other States. I promptly protested against this illegal apportionment, but without avail. I pointed out that section 2 of the draft act of May 18, 1917, provides that "the population" shall be the basis for determining the State quotas, and submitted an argument which, to my mind, was conclusive that the population could be determined in no other way than by actually enumerating the whole number of persons in each State.

The only method provided for ascertaining the total number of inhabitants is by taking a census, and I therefore insisted that the census figures for 1910 must be used to fix the draft quotas.

Instead of abiding by the last census, the Provost Marshal General directed the Bureau of the Census to prepare an estimate of the population. The Census Office did this by first estimating that the total population of the United States had increased in the same ratio from 1910 to 1917 as had actually occurred from 1900 to 1910. The adoption of this hypothesis enabled the estimators to guess that the total population of the continental United States was 103,635,300. It was known that 9,659,382 men between the ages of 21 and 31 had registered. The proportion which the registrants represented to the estimated population was 9.32 per cent. The number of registrants in each State was then divided by 9.32 and multiplied by 100, which gave the estimated population of the State.

I need not stop to argue that the assumption as to the total population was a mere approximation, which no one can say is anywhere near right, and which is certainly in error when this estimate is divided among the States. To multiply this error by assuming that each registered man represented about 10 other inhabitants in the State where he happened to be but made the injustice more acute. Yet the Provost Marshal General insisted that this obviously unfair scheme be followed. Instead of gaining anything by wandering off after these false estimates he has led himself into such a morass of difficulty that he now appeals to Congress for a new law that will bring him back to solid ground.

The Provost Marshal General now denies all responsibility for the use of these estimates of population. He would have the country believe that the Census Bureau is entirely to blame, but I have conclusive proof that such is not the fact. I hold in my hand a copy of a memorandum that I obtained from the Census Office last August. The original of this memorandum was forwarded to the Provost Marshal General in May, 1917, shortly after the passage of the selective-draft act. In it he is warned that the law required him to apportion the draft quotas according to the census of 1910, and the evil effects of attempting to use estimates of population are clearly forecasted. Let me read from this document, which was prepared, after careful consideration, by the officials of the Census Bureau for the information and guidance of the Provost Marshal General:

Memorandum re basis to be employed in apportioning State quotas of draft.

Section 2 of the act of May 18, 1917, provides that—

"Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof, and credit shall be given to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, for the number of men who were in the military service of the United States as members of the National Guard on April 1, 1917, or who have since said date entered the military service of the United States from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision either as members of the Regular Army or the National Guard."

As this provision is interpreted by the Census Bureau, it requires that the quotas shall be based on the population as ascertained at the last Federal census, namely, that taken in 1910. If it had been the intention to have the apportionment based on estimates of the present population, it is reasonable to presume that the act would have so stated. This view is strengthened by the following citation from the second paragraph of section 4:

"The President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to create and establish throughout the several States and subdivisions thereof and in the Territories and the District of Columbia local boards, and where, in his discretion, practicable and desirable, there shall be created and established one such local board in each county or similar subdivision in each State, and one for approximately each 30,000 of population in each city of 30,000 population or over, according to the last census taken or estimates furnished by the Bureau of Census of the Department of Commerce."

Since in this instance estimates were specifically mentioned by the act, it is logical to assume that they would have been specifically mentioned in the provision for the apportionment of the draft if Congress had intended that the State quotas should be based on estimates of population

Furthermore, the Bureau of Census is opposed to the use of estimates of population as a basis for the apportionment of the draft, for the reason that, as only 10 States have taken censuses of their population since 1910, estimates for the greater part of the country would necessarily be based either (a) on the census of 1910 and the growth during the period between 1900 and 1910, or (b) on the registration. Either basis is far from satisfactory. It is a well-known fact, substantiated by the registration returns themselves, that the increase in population of certain States since 1910 has not been nearly so rapid as the increase between 1900 and 1910. In fact, for certain States the returns indicate a decided decrease since 1910, although the decrease in total population probably has not been relatively so great as the decrease in the number of males 21 to 30 years of age, inclusive.

(Estimates based on the registration returns would also be far from accurate, for the reason that, because of the abnormal shiftings of population which have taken place among certain parts of the country during recent years, and particularly since the outbreak of the war, gave so great an impetus to the manufacture of munitions and other commodities needed by the belligerents, the proportions which the males 21 to 30 years of age, inclusive, represent of the total populations of the various States are far from being the same as in 1910.) Some idea of the margin of error may be gained from the facts that the proportion of males 21 to 30 years of age, inclusive, in the total population of cities having 30,000 inhabitants or more in 1910 varied from 7.1 per cent in Newton, Mass., to 18.4 per cent in Flint, Mich.; and that for those portions of the several States which lay outside such cities the corresponding proportions varied from 7.8 per cent in Tennessee and Virginia to 19.2 per cent in Wyoming. If the proportion for each State, county, and city were assumed to be the same as in 1910, estimates of total population, based on the registration, would therefore be wide of the mark in many cases.

It is obvious, therefore, that an apportionment of the draft made directly from the registration itself would be much more equitable than one made from estimates of total population based either on the registration or on the census of 1910 and the growth between 1900 and 1910.

To recapitulate: The Census Bureau maintains that, under the law, the apportionment of the draft must be made on the basis of the total population as ascertained at the Federal census of 1910. It holds, however, that if the necessary change in the law could be secured it would be far more equitable to apportion the draft on the basis of the registration itself.

The last suggestion made by the Census Bureau to the effect that if the law could be changed it would be best to base the apportionment of the draft on the registration itself embodies the substance of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

When the officials of the Census Bureau presented this memorandum, what did the Provost Marshal General do? One would have expected him to follow the advice of the highest authority in the Government on such a vital matter, but he did nothing of the kind. In response to the positive stand taken by the Census Office, Gen. Crowder, in effect, replied that he would interpret the law as he saw fit. He boldly assumed all responsibility for the method of determining the draft quotas upon estimates of population. The officials of the Census Bureau, actuated by the most patriotic motives, yielded their better judgment and obeyed his orders. From that time on they merely acted in a ministerial capacity and supplied his office with estimates and data for the purpose of apportioning the draft.

During the conferences between the Provost Marshal General and the officials of the Census Bureau a table was prepared at his request which showed the gross quota for each State based, first, upon the decennial census of 1910; second, upon official estimates of population of July 1, 1917; and third, estimates of population based upon the draft registration. The Census Bureau submitted three methods of apportioning the quotas, stating that, in its opinion, the first, based upon an actual enumeration, was in accordance with the selective-draft act and was the only one that could be lawfully used. It is beyond dispute that Gen. Crowder ordered the apportionment of the draft to be upon the third method and that he alone is responsible for its use. For the information of the House I shall print a copy of this table as a part of my remarks:

Statement showing the population of the United States by States, including Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, and the proportion that each State and Territory is of the total population, together with the gross quota each State and Territory would furnish on a draft of 1,152,985 men, in pursuance of the selective-draft act, according to (a) decennial census of 1910, (b) official estimates of population July 1, 1917, and (c) estimates of population July 1, 1917, based on registration.

Area.	Decennial census, 1910.			Official estimates of population July 1, 1917.			Estimates of population July 1, 1917, based on registration.
	Population.	Proportion.	Gross quota.	Population.	Proportion.	Gross quota.	Population.	Proportion.	Gross quota.
United States	93,346,543	1.000000	1,152,985	105,151,678	1.000000	1,152,985	105,365,053	1.000000	1,152,985
Alabama	2,138,093	.022905	26,409	2,363,930	.022481	25,920	1,945,533	.018474	21,309
Arizona	204,354	.002189	2,521	263,783	.002509	2,893	403,203	.003828	4,473
Arkansas	1,574,449	.016867	19,447	1,763,343	.016773	19,333	1,591,835	.015113	17,452
California	2,377,549	.025470	29,367	3,023,032	.028836	33,213	3,189,938	.030275	34,907
Colorado	799,024	.008560	9,870	983,320	.009350	10,837	895,331	.008497	9,797
Connecticut	1,114,756	.011942	13,769	1,265,373	.012034	13,875	1,719,623	.016320	18,817
Delaware	202,322	.002167	2,498	215,160	.002046	2,359	234,710	.002228	2,569
District of Columbia	331,069	.003547	4,090	369,282	.003512	4,049	345,855	.003282	3,783
Florida	752,619	.008033	9,295	916,185	.008713	10,046	925,641	.008785	10,129
Georgia	2,609,121	.027951	32,227	2,895,841	.027540	31,753	2,483,544	.023569	27,209
Idaho	325,594	.003488	4,022	445,176	.004234	4,882	411,681	.004192	4,833
Illinois	5,638,591	.060405	69,645	6,234,995	.059295	68,365	7,227,952	.068590	79,091
Indiana	2,700,876	.028934	33,361	2,935,492	.027918	32,191	2,738,933	.025994	29,971
Iowa	2,224,771	.023833	27,479	2,219,604	.021109	24,338	2,327,079	.022085	25,455
Kansas	1,690,949	.018115	20,883	1,851,870	.017611	20,305	1,623,223	.015404	17,795
Kentucky	2,289,905	.024531	28,284	2,394,093	.022768	26,251	2,024,353	.019213	22,152
Louisiana	1,656,388	.017744	20,459	1,853,954	.017630	20,332	1,683,852	.015980	18,481
Maine	742,371	.007953	9,170	777,340	.007393	8,524	643,588	.006137	7,075
Maryland	1,295,346	.013877	16,000	1,373,673	.013064	15,063	1,292,031	.012263	14,139
Massachusetts	3,366,416	.036064	41,581	3,775,973	.035910	41,404	3,933,561	.037329	43,049
Michigan	2,810,173	.030105	34,711	3,034,253	.028857	33,273	4,015,053	.038103	43,935
Minnesota	2,075,708	.022237	25,639	2,312,445	.021991	25,355	2,377,933	.022568	23,021
Mississippi	1,797,114	.019252	22,197	1,975,570	.018797	21,673	1,531,345	.014249	16,429
Missouri	3,293,335	.035281	40,673	3,427,595	.032316	37,603	3,243,679	.030753	35,451
Montana	376,053	.004028	4,644	472,935	.004498	5,183	952,478	.009040	10,423
Nebraska	1,192,214	.012772	14,726	1,284,125	.012212	14,080	1,270,301	.012056	13,900
Nevada	81,875	.000877	1,011	110,738	.001053	1,214	131,232	.001245	1,435
New Hampshire	430,572	.004613	5,319	441,429	.004197	4,840	403,881	.003833	4,419
New Jersey	2,537,167	.027180	31,333	3,014,194	.028665	33,053	3,255,407	.030903	35,623
New Mexico	327,301	.003506	4,042	423,649	.004029	4,645	352,392	.003344	3,855
New York	9,113,614	.097632	112,563	10,480,182	.099677	114,933	11,187,793	.106183	122,421
North Carolina	2,206,287	.023635	27,251	2,431,381	.023151	26,693	2,143,263	.020347	23,483
North Dakota	577,053	.006182	7,128	765,319	.007278	8,391	703,992	.006681	7,737
Ohio	4,767,121	.051063	58,882	5,212,085	.049557	57,150	6,071,771	.057631	66,474
Oklahoma	1,657,155	.017753	20,463	2,289,855	.021777	25,110	1,822,470	.017297	19,941
Oregon	672,765	.007207	8,310	881,992	.008389	9,672	675,092	.006407	7,387
Pennsylvania	7,665,111	.082114	94,673	8,630,042	.082058	94,608	8,981,082	.085237	98,277
Rhode Island	542,610	.005813	6,702	625,865	.005952	6,863	573,583	.005444	6,277
South Carolina	1,515,400	.016234	18,718	1,613,205	.015342	17,688	1,384,203	.013137	15,147
South Dakota	583,888	.006255	7,212	715,972	.006808	7,851	623,359	.005915	6,821
Tennessee	2,184,789	.023405	26,983	2,304,629	.021917	25,270	2,021,893	.019218	22,158
Texas	3,893,512	.041743	48,129	4,515,423	.042942	49,511	4,337,037	.041732	48,113
Utah	373,351	.004000	4,612	443,883	.004221	4,867	451,932	.004289	4,945
Vermont	355,953	.003813	4,395	384,948	.003471	4,002	293,423	.002813	3,243
Virginia	2,061,612	.022085	25,465	2,213,025	.021043	24,255	1,951,521	.018521	21,354
Washington	1,141,990	.012234	14,103	1,597,400	.015191	17,515	1,163,855	.011074	12,765
West Virginia	1,221,119	.013081	15,082	1,412,602	.013434	15,489	1,355,907	.012878	14,848
Wisconsin	2,333,860	.025002	28,827	2,527,187	.024033	27,710	2,575,931	.024457	28,199
Wyoming	145,965	.001534	1,803	184,970	.001759	2,028	245,223	.002327	2,683
Alaska	64,356	.000689	794	64,912	.000617	711	64,912	.000615	710
Hawaii	191,909	.002055	2,371	219,580	.002088	2,407	219,583	.002084	2,403
Porto Rico	1,118,012	.011977	13,809	1,231,880	.011715	13,507	1,231,880	.011691	13,480

The estimates of population issued by the Bureau of the Census as of July 1, 1917, contains a preface which clearly shows that the mathematical calculations made at the request of the Provost Marshal General were not deemed to be of any value except as a basis for apportioning the draft quotas, and that these figures were not represented to be an accurate enumeration of the population. The preface says:

These estimates have been made by the Bureau of the Census, at the request of the Provost Marshal General of the War Department, solely for use as a basis for the apportionment of the forthcoming draft. The method employed may be described briefly as follows:

The total registration as shown by the preliminary telegraphic returns, 9,659,382, was divided by the total population of continental United States exclusive of Alaska, as heretofore estimated by the Census Bureau, 103,635,300, in order to obtain the proportion which the registrants represented of the total population. The resulting figure, 9.32 per cent, was assumed to represent the proportion which the registrants in each geographical unit represented of the total population thereof. Since the State totals as shown by the corrected returns received by mail, varied more or less from those given in the preliminary telegraphic returns, both the total registration for the United States and the total population estimated herein differ slightly from the figures above given.

The assumption that the proportion which the registrants in any county or city represent of its total population is the same throughout the United States may not be true, but the only way to ascertain the true proportion for each geographical unit would be to make an actual enumeration of its population. The proportion in 1910 varied considerably in different parts of the country, being greater, as a rule, in the newer than in the older sections, and greater in cities than in rural localities. Because of the abnormal shiftings of population which have taken place among certain parts of the country in recent years, and particularly since the outbreak of the war gave so great an impetus to the manufacture of munitions and other commodities needed by the belligerents, the proportions which men 21 to 30 years of age, inclusive, represent of the total population of many localities have changed greatly since 1910. For this reason the assumption that the proportions existing in 1910 still prevail would result in very inaccurate estimates for some localities.

Since therefore, it was impossible in any event to estimate precisely the population of cities counties, and States on the basis of the registration, the simplest and speediest method—that based on the assumption that the proportion which the registrants represent of the total population is the same throughout the country—was adopted. One reason for the employment of this method was that the Census Bureau had only a very short time in which to prepare the estimates; but another and still more cogent, reason was that in this manner there was obtained the fairest possible basis for the apportionment of the draft, since the localities whose population estimates may be exaggerated are those in which there is an excess of men 21 to 30 years of age, inclusive, while the ones whose population is understated are those in which the proportion of men of these ages is smaller than the average. * * *

The estimates for Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, in which the registration has not yet taken place, were made in the same manner in which the official estimates of population have been made by the Census Bureau heretofore, namely, on the assumption that the annual numerical increase in each geographical unit since 1910 has been the same as the average numerical increase between 1900 and 1910.

When the draft quotas based upon these estimates were announced a storm of protest immediately arose in a number of the States. The Provost Marshal General himself describes what happened in these words:

Now, this disproportionate taking of citizens engaged our attention during the first draft, and of Members of Congress who represented districts that had in them congested centers of foreign population. They saw how unequally the rule was operating in respect to their localities.

Later in the hearings he said:

Do not get the idea that this matter was not often talked about, because there were protests against the estimates from more than a dozen States, and the matter was the subject of a great deal of correspondence and some editorial comment.

With the advent of this criticism did this valiant lawyer warrior, who was so prompt to assume all responsibility, bravely meet the issue and defend what he had done? Sad to relate, the record shows that, like a true bureaucrat, he immediately "passed the buck." The first evidence of evasion that I have in writing is contained in a letter addressed to me on September 5, 1917, from the War Department, in which this language occurs. This letter was prepared in the Judge Advocate General's office, with Gen. Crowder's approval, and is in reply to a letter of mine protesting against the use of estimates in apportioning the draft quotas. This letter states:

The estimates of population are the estimates of the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce, with which the War Department has nothing whatever to do.

That statement is not true. I have shown you that the Census Bureau submitted a memorandum to the Provost Marshal General advising against the use of these very estimates, and yet this letter sets forth that the War Department had nothing whatever to do with their adoption.

In the hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs this question was asked by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] at my request. I read from page 28 of the hearings of February 4, 1918:

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have been asked this question. I am told that certain States, particularly Arizona, claim that your allotment against those States is much in excess of what it should be. * * * The census figures have enormously increased the population of the State; that certain Western States have large populations of single men; that you have estimated the population too large, and therefore you have asked for an unfair number of men from those States. * * *

Gen. CROWDER. Your statement is correct, except that I do not think I am responsible.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I mean the Census Bureau.

Gen. CROWDER. The census people did project over the 1910 census to 1917, under rules of their own formulation, and they did produce the result that you speak of, and as a necessary consequence the quotas of certain centers have been too large. That has been the result very largely of an effort upon the part of the Census Bureau to establish a percentage relation between total population and total registration.

Thus, early in the hearings, the Provost Marshal General deliberately sought to shield himself from criticism by laying the blame upon somebody else. A little later the gentleman from Nebraska asked him these very interesting questions:

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This is a question which has puzzled a great many men. Why was it you did not base your draft upon the rule of citizenship instead of upon the rule of population? Was it not practicable to do it?

Gen. CROWDER. Because the law commanded me to distribute it according to total population.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The War Department drafted the law. Why did it ask us to pass a law that placed the liability not upon the citizens but upon the total population?

Gen. CROWDER. I do not know that I can explain that omission. The department followed the statute of 1862, which was based upon total population.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But these inequalities did not exist then.

Gen. CROWDER. It did not occur to us that there was a more convenient rule.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman knows that the Census Bureau stated that they considered the proposition that I am now making was the fairest one and put it up to the Provost Marshal himself.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; the Census Bureau told him last May that under the law the census of 1910 should be used, but they then suggested the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska, which is that the law be changed to apportion the draft according to the registration itself.

Fr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. FIELDS. It is not contended that the gentleman from Nebraska's proposition would not be fair, but the original proposition was the total population, and the committee did not think that his proposition was better than any other proposition.

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not agree with the gentleman from Kentucky at all.

Beginning on page 68 of the hearings, I find that the gentleman from Ohio examined the Provost Marshal General at some length but with very doubtful results:

Mr. GORDON. General, you have testified that the apportionment of the first draft was based on figures furnished by the Census Bureau. However, they did not purport to be the figures showing the actual population of the different localities determined by the Census Bureau?

Gen. CROWDER. They purported to be a projection over of the actual population in 1910 of these localities, under rules which would approximate what the population ought to be seven years later, in 1917. That is what they purported to be.

Mr GORDON Did they use the same figures for the purpose of determining that population that they would use if I wrote a letter to the Census Bureau and asked them to tell me what the population of a city was on June 5, 1917? Did they take the same method of determining the population for the purposes of this draft that they would use for determining the population of any city or State now, by figuring from the population in 1910?

Did the Provost Marshal General frankly answer that question by saying that that very kind of an estimate was submitted to him by the Census Bureau but that he refused to use it? He did not. This is his reply:

Gen. CROWDER. I have only such information on that subject as they gave me in a few conferences we held during the time they were preparing these estimates. They have their own scientific rules for judging the increase of population. I understood they applied those rules and also took as accurate cognizance as they could of unusual flows of population, stimulated, we will say, very largely since the war broke out in 1914 by the demands of various centers for munitions workers. They informed themselves, I think, through the school censuses, through electoral censuses.

The general was merely giving free play to his imagination when he made that last statement. As a matter of fact, the Census Bureau did not use the figures from any school or electoral census in calculating the draft quotas—

Mr. GORDON. To what extent did they take into consideration the actual registration for the purpose of determining their first figures on population?

Gen. CROWDER. Not at all in their first estimates—

That is a true answer—

In the first estimates they were governed by the rules I have named. In the second estimate, which was one we had to have in the execution of the law, they applied a different rule.

The "one we had to have in the execution of the law." That is not a true answer. The Provost Marshal General would have told the whole truth if he had said, "In the second estimate, which was one that I demanded be prepared against the protest of the Census Bureau."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman pretend to say that Gen. Crowder did not tell the truth?

Mr. HAYDEN. He did not tell the whole truth.

Mr. MADDEN. I take exception to the statement of the gentleman that Gen. Crowder would lie about it.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not accusing him of lying. The gentleman from Illinois can not put that word in my mouth. I am saying that when he said that they had to use an estimate of population he did not tell the whole truth, because no estimate was required under the law. The Census Bureau told him so, and told him that he could not lawfully use an estimate but should use the census of 1910.

Mr. MADDEN. And as they made it up they increased the population of Chicago a million and fifty thousand over what the population is. They reduced the population in other places to make up the increase of population, and I deny that Gen. Crowder would lie about any question submitted to him.

Mr. HAYDEN. I submit that the Provost Marshal General did not give a true answer, because he did not tell the whole truth. He failed to state that the Census Bureau advised him against the use of an estimate and that he could not use it lawfully. Nevertheless he insisted that estimates of population be used and stated that he would take the responsibility.

However, listen to his answers to these questions by the gentleman from Ohio:

Mr. GORDON. Why did you not adhere to the original plan of estimating from the best sources available through the Census Bureau what the actual population was, instead of resorting to this second method?

Gen. CROWDER. I called upon the Census Bureau for the estimate of the population which the law commanded me to take into consideration. The law did not contemplate that I would make any estimate, but it did contemplate I would go to the expert branch of the Government for those estimates. I exercised no revisory power over their estimates at all.

Mr. GORDON. You were commanded by the law to determine the apportionment upon the basis of actual population.

Gen. CROWDER. Yes; but Congress contemplated that I would get that from the Census Bureau. You can imagine what standing I would have in court if I had undertaken to estimate the population myself, without reference to the Census Bureau.

Mr. GORDON. The Census Bureau does not contend that their last basis of estimate was more nearly correct than their first?

Gen. CROWDER. I do not think they do, in the light of the criticism of both estimates.

Mr. GORDON. Your contention is that you had no discretion in the matter, but you were bound by the figures, however erroneous they might be, that the Census Bureau furnished you?

Gen. CROWDER. I certainly would not have acted upon figures from any other source, or upon my own revision of their estimates. I would have been unauthorized to substitute my own estimates for the figures of the Census Bureau.

Mr. GORDON. Even when they reported that they estimated the population of Detroit at over 1,600,000 when, in fact, it had less than 800,000, you still felt you were precluded from going behind their estimates?

Gen. CROWDER. Exactly; and I remain of that opinion.

If Gen. Crowder's replies do not constitute a complete attempt to evade responsibility by shifting the burden for adopting estimates of population from his own shoulders to those of the Director of the Census, then we must revise all of our ideas of the meaning of words in the English language.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my good friend from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the law say he shall take the census of 1910? Did not it say that he should take it as a basis?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; the selective-draft law says that the quotas shall be determined according to the population. The Provost Marshal General submitted the matter to the Census Bureau, and they advised him that, as a matter of law, he must use the census of 1910 as a basis.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The population of 1917 was clearly intended in the law.

Mr. HAYDEN. The clear intent of the law was that the census of 1910 should be used. That such was the opinion of this House when the selective-draft act was under consideration is borne out by the fact that no one questioned the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs when he asserted, in answer to a question, that a census was necessary to determine the population.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is it in the record that when the question was asked the Provost Marshal General, who was responsible for making the figures, Gen. Crowder said, "I was required to take the figures that the Census Bureau furnished me," and he put the whole burden on the Census Bureau?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. But the facts are that he insisted upon using figures obtained by estimating the population, against their protest.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How could he do anything else? Who can furnish the statistics of population except the Census Bureau? They are the only ones that have the facilities.

Mr. HAYDEN. The objection that I have to the attitude of the Provost Marshal General is that instead of frankly coming before the Committee on Military Affairs and taking the responsibility, he passed it all over to the Census Bureau. He did not bravely say, "Yes; I did it; because I thought it was the only way it should be done."

Mr. MADDEN. He asked them for the information that he had to have, and they supplied it.

Mr. HAYDEN. They supplied it under his direction.

Mr. MADDEN. They supplied it on his request; and if they failed to give him the information which he requested, he is not to blame for that.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Census Bureau carried out his wishes and gave him exactly what he asked for, but the Provost Marshal General agreed to be responsible for what was done.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Gladly.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is it of record that the Bureau of the Census protested against an estimate other than that established by the census of 1910?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have read into the RECORD a copy of the identical memorandum submitted to Gen. Crowder in May, 1917, when this matter was under discussion, in which the Census Bureau told him that in their opinion under the law he could not use anything except the census of 1910 as a basis for apportioning the draft quotas.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I want to make this statement as to what I stated when the so-called draft bill was before Congress last spring. I made the statement in opposition to the draft legislation and in favor of the volunteer system that the law as proposed demanded that the Government should take an actual census of the country and that it would take such a long time to take that that you could get your volunteers before the census could be taken. I do not think that the War Department followed what Congress intended, because it meant actual population and not estimated population.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me carry out further and say that nowhere in the law is there any mention of an estimate of population being used as a basis for the draft quotas. The Census Bureau points out in the memorandum submitted to the Provost Marshal General that certainly if Congress had meant that estimates should be used the law would have said so. Therefore the census of 1910 had to be used.

The answers that I have read from the hearings were made offhand by the Provost Marshal General, and it might be said that he should not be held to strict accountability for them; but on February 22 he read a prepared statement to the Committee on Military Affairs, in which, with calmness and deliberation, he repeats the assertion that the census of 1910 could not be used to fix the draft quotas. No mention is made of the effort of the officials from the Census Office to induce him to adopt the census figures and of his refusal to do so. In other words, he again failed to tell the whole truth. His statement reads:

All that could be utilized was an estimate of population. In making this estimate the Census Bureau applied the results of the registration as a constant factor and estimated population in such a way that the first quotas were not computed on population at all but on registration. Now, registration was affected by a variety of causes. Since the last census there had been a great coalescence of labor around industrial centers and a great withdrawal of it from rural and agricultural regions. This upset state of affairs was further accentuated by the fact that most of the persons who had changed their residence were young men between the ages of 21 and 30. The resulting population estimated upon this basis was in some cases grotesque and the consequent inequalities could not be cured by administrative act of the Provost Marshal General's Office—

I thank the general for that word "grotesque." It is the very term for which I have searched to describe the result of the estimate of population made for the State of Arizona—

The first draft was relatively small, but, small as it was, the protests of the localities injuriously affected were very powerful and there can be no doubt that they will be repeated if the old rule is adhered to. Those protests could not be answered in any reasonable way. The only answer that can be made is that the law called for a basis of population, and the only population the Government knew was the Census Bureau's estimate, which, under the circumstances, could not be made more accurate, but it was admittedly not accurate in many instances. The sum of the whole problem is that the proposed rule would go far to abate the alien difficulty, would eliminate the difficulty arising out of the inaccurate estimate of the Census Bureau, and in its intrinsic worth and merit is unassailable.

If the Provost Marshal General had followed the plain intent of the selective-draft law and used the census of 1910 as the basis for apportioning the quotas for the first draft, all of this confusion would have been avoided. Any complaint that might have been made could have been properly answered by saying that the Constitution provides for the apportionment of Representatives in Congress and direct taxes in accordance with the number of people in each State, as determined by an actual enumeration of the population. If we can rearrange matters of such importance only once every 10 years, it is not unreasonable to provide that the same rule shall apply to the draft quotas. Instead of the census basis, which is free from complications and everybody understands, the Provost Marshal General seemed to deliberately go out of his way to seek trouble, and he certainly found it, as is evidenced by his own testimony given when he was insisting upon the passage of the present bill.

If the census figures had been followed, the population of the city of Detroit would not have been arbitrarily increased to 1,600,000—nearly twice the actual number of people residing there. Neither would it have been possible to do even worse than that by the city of Akron, Ohio. Nor would the city of Lawrence, Mass., have been compelled to furnish an extravagant quota from a registration which showed but 43 per cent to be American citizens.

The estimate of population used as a basis for the first draft gave my State a total population of 409,203. The census of 1910 actually enumerated 204,354 people. If these new and fanciful figures had been applied in the same ratio to the entire country, we would have to "estimate" that there are 200,000,000 people in the United States. The gross quota of men from Arizona under the first draft was fixed at 4,478. On the basis of the census of 1910 my State should have furnished a total of but 2,524 men, so that there is an excess of 1,954 soldiers now in the Army from Arizona.

But that is not half the measure of our complaint. Out of a total registration of 37,355 in my State there were 15,064 aliens, leaving but 22,291 citizens liable to the draft. Arizona has a larger proportion of alien registrants than any other State in the Union. This is due to the fact that considerable numbers of foreigners, principally Mexicans, are employed in our copper industry. The ratio 9.32 was applied to each one of these aliens, with the result that Arizona is supposed to have a population consisting of nearly 40 per cent who are not American citizens. Anyone who is even slightly acquainted with the people of my State knows that this is obviously untrue. A great majority of the miners are single men, and however often any wizardly estimator may use the fateful figures 9.32 he can not thereby transport their relatives to Arizona on a magic carpet.

Every one of these aliens was duly registered, but the great majority of them promptly claimed and received exemption from the draft. The heavy burden of supplying our quota immediately fell upon the citizen registrants, with the result that in some of the mining communities practically every young man of American birth was at once called to the colors. That they answered the call and presented themselves for enrollment without delay is an evidence of patriotism unequaled by any State in this Union. They are now in the cantonments, doing their very best to prepare for the final battle that will forever put an end to German militarism. I know that I speak for every one of them when I say that our State has been unfairly dealt with and that they have a right to ask that this injustice be corrected. They ask it not for themselves, because they know that this war will not wait for the training of other men to take their places, but for the sake of their brothers and friends who are listed for future military service.

That it may be of record that the unfair apportionment of draft quotas, which weighed so heavily against the people of Arizona, did not go without protest I include as a part of my remarks the following letter which I addressed to the proper authority on August 15, 1917, 20 days before a single one of the selected men had arrived at the cantonments:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 15, 1917.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I shall be greatly obliged if you will advise me by what authority of law an estimate of the population based upon the registration of men between the ages of 21 and 30 years was used, instead of the population as ascertained by the last census, to determine the quotas of the several States for the first call for men made pursuant to the selective-draft act? Section 2 of the act of May 18, 1917, provides that "the population" shall be the basis for determining such quotas, and there is no mention in this section of an estimate of the population. It is true that in section 4 provision is made for estimating the population of cities of 30,000 or over, but the very fact that estimates are specifically authorized in another part of the act would indicate that the omission of the word "estimated" in section 2 was intentional.

Webster defines "population" as the whole number of people, or inhabitants of a country. The Constitution provides that there shall be an "actual enumeration" of the "whole number of persons" in each State" every 10 years. Under this authority Congress has directed that a decennial census of the population shall be taken by the Director of the Census. Since no other method is provided by law for ascertaining "the population" it can not be denied that, when Congress directed that "the population" shall be used as a basis to determine the quotas of the several States, direct reference was made to the actual enumeration of 1910 and not to a later estimate.

The Consitution provides that Representatives in Congress and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the States according to their respective numbers, counting—not estimating—the whole number of persons in each State. Every reason that would justify an estimate of the population, seven years after a census, for fixing the draft quotas would apply with equal force to urge the use of the estimated population, rather than an actual count, at any time between the census periods for apportioning the number of Representatives or levying a direct tax. The authors of the Constitution very properly decided that it was unwise to follow an estimate in matters of such grave importance because any approximation of the population was bound to lead to injustice and consequent dissatisfaction, as has happened in the present instance.

Apparently the word "population" has never been given a judicial interpretation by any Federal court of record. It has, however, been judicially interpreted by the Supreme Court of New Jersey. In construing an act classifying cities according to population, it was held (in re Assessment for construction of sewer, 54 N. J. L., 156, 23 Atl., 517) that "population" could not be determined by the court through the introduction of evidence in the ordinary way, but that it must be determined by some official census or enumeration. In this case the population of a city was 8,326 by the State census of 1885 and 13,028 by the United States census of 1890, but the court held that the city could not be legally regarded as a city of over 12,000 until after April 17, 1891, when the official bulletin of the census of 1890 was published. The opinion in this case was quoted with approval in Dickinson v. Board of Chosen Freeholders (71 N. J. L., 589, 60 Atl., 220), where it was held that the State as well as the Federal census must be taken into account in determining the population of a county. The Code of Iowa (1897, sec. 48, par. 26) provides: "The word 'population' where used in this code or any statute hereafter passed shall be taken to be that as shown by the last preceding State or national census, unless otherwise specially provided. The compiled laws of Utah (1907, sec. 2498, par. 19) contain an almost identical provision. This comprises all the law that I have been able to find on this subject, and every line of it is in accord with my contention that the census of 1910 and not an estimate of the present population should be used to determine the draft quotas.

I also desire to know by what authority of law the Census Bureau estimate of the population in 1915, instead of the census of 1910, was used as the basis for determining the quota of each State at the officers' training camps beginning August 27, 1917? If there is lawful authority for the use of estimates of population, why was not the same estimate used in apportioning the admission to these officers' camps as in the case of the draft quotas? To illustrate the injustice that has crept in by reason of the departure from the official census figures, permit me to direct your attention to the fact that Arizona is required to furnish a gross quota of 4,478 men, while but 52 of her citizens will be permitted to attend the second officers' training camp. Our sister State of New Mexico must provide a gross quota of 3,856 men, yet 83 New Mexicans will be given an opportunity to become officers in the National Army. In other words, New Mexico will furnish an excess of 31 officers whose duty will probably be to drill the 622 additional men who will be drafted from my State. If the census of 1910 had been adhered to in all cases, this evident unfairness could not have arisen.

In view of all this confusion, it seems to me that the only proper way for you to proceed is by promptly ascertaining whether or not an error has been made in departing from the census figures of population in apportioning the quotas of officers and men to the several States. I have, therefore, to suggest that you call upon the Department of Justice for a legal definition of the term "the population" as used in section 2 of the selective-draft act. If the Attorney General should decide that you are bound by the totals of the census of 1910, it will then be possible for you to right the wrong that has been done by equalizing the quotas when the second draft is made.

As the bureau which is most familiar with this subject in a practical way, it seems to me that the Census Office might be able to throw some light on the meaning of the word "population." I therefore respectfully request that you make suitable inquiry of the Director of the Census for his views on this question.

Speaking for the people of Arizona, I can truthfully say that they are not seeking a way to avoid their full duty in the present war. They will promptly obey the selective-draft law in both letter and spirit whenever the meaning of the act is officially interpreted.

Yours, very respectfully,

CARL HAYDEN,
Member of Congress from Arizona.

Three weeks later I received this reply, to which I have heretofore referred, and which was prepared in Gen. Crowder's office. It states that the War Department "had nothing whatever to do" with the estimates of population and that it had a legal right to depend upon the Bureau of the Census for such estimates. The letter ends with the suggestion that the existing basis of apportionment be continued so as not to disturb the completion of the first draft and that any unfairness be corrected by future legislation.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, September 5, 1917.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HAYDEN: I have your letter of the 15th ultimo, in which you inquire:

1. By what authority the population of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, as estimated by the Census Bureau on July 1, 1917, instead of the population as ascertained by the census of 1910, was employed in determining the gross quotas of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, under the first draft pursuant to the selective service act of May 18, 1917; and

2. By what authority the Census Bureau estimate of 1915, instead of the census of 1910, was used as the basis for determining the quota for each State at the officers' training camps, beginning on August 27, 1917.

By consulting the inclosed copy of the document, entitled "Estimates of Population * * * July 1, 1917," it will be noted that those estimates were made by the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce in pursuance of and for the purpose of the act of Congress "To authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917. That act of Congress, in section 4, refers to "the last census taken or estimates furnished by the Bureau of Census of the Department of Commerce" as a basis for determining the population of subdivisions of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, in order that local boards may be established. Section 2 of said act provides that "Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof," and also provides that the draft "shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe not inconsistent with the terms of this act."

The President, under date of July 5, 1917, formally issued regulations governing the apportionment of quotas and credits, which had on June 15, 1917, been sent out to the governors of States and Territories in tentative form but substantially as finally issued. Section 4 of those regulations provides that "gross quotas shall be apportioned to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in proportion to the population thereof as determined by the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce.

The Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce was selected by the President as the instrument by which population was to be determined for the purposes of said act of Congress. The wisdom and the fairness of this selection probably needs no argument to support it.

Complaints concerning the estimates of population furnished by the Census Bureau in May of 1917 were received by this office and no doubt also by the Census Bureau. Those estimates were necessarily prepared in great haste. Subsequently it was possible to readjust the estimates in the light of additional information, and new estimates were prepared accordingly by the Census Bureau as of July 1, 1917. Those estimates were embodied and published in Form 18.

It is a well-recognized fact that in recent years great shifts of population have taken place in this country. Growth in certain sections and certain centers has been phenomenal. The extent of these shifts of population can not be determined with mathematical accuracy until a new census is taken. Nevertheless it seems plain that an estimate prepared by census experts, in the light of available information, is more nearly indicative of the actual distribution of population between States, Territories, and the District of Columbia than is the latest census, taken more than seven years ago.

Two estimates recently prepared by the Census Bureau have been employed in connection with the registration and draft under the selective-service act. The first was hurriedly prepared in May of 1917 and was employed in connection with the registration and the organization of the selective machinery. The second was prepared as of date July 1, 1917, in the light of the latest information then available, and since its publication has been employed in the determination of the gross quotas to be furnished by the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia. In each case the estimate was prepared in pursuance of and for the purposes mentioned in the selective-service act of May 18, 1917, and in neither case was the estimate employed as a basis of final official action until after it had been published.

As the estimates of population are the estimates of the Bureau of the Census of the Department of Commerce, with which the War Department has nothing whatever to do and upon which the War Department has a legal right to depend, and inasmuch as the first call was made for only 687,000 troops, would it not be the part of wisdom to allow the existing basis of apportionment to remain undisturbed until the first draft is entirely completed in order that it may then be determined whether in the interest of fairness throughout the Nation a new basis for any future draft that may be ordered should be prescribed by law?

That portion of your letter which deals with the second question stated above will be taken up in a later communication.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

I might say at this point that I have never received a reply to my second question as to why the Census Bureau estimates of 1915 were used to determine the quota of each State at the officers' training camps. Neither has the Judge Advocate General been willing as yet to permit the Attorney General to pass upon the question as to whether he was in error when he departed from the census of 1910 in fixing the draft quotas. In view of Gen. Crowder's promptness in throwing the responsibility for the "estimate of population" upon the Census Bureau one would think that he might have consistently asked the chief law officer of the Government to relieve him of another part of his trouble.

Now, my purpose in bringing the arbitrary conduct of the Provost Marshal General and his subsequent efforts to evade responsibility for his acts to the attention of the House is not primarily to hold him up to censure. I am trying to do something more important than that. If section 2 of the selective-draft act had provided that the quotas of the several States must be determined in proportion to the population as ascertained by the last decennial census, there would have been no room for evasion or argument. The blame for the omission of such specific instructions is therefore upon Congress. Having seen the evil effect of ambiguity, we should not repeat the mistake, particularly when we are dealing with that same official.

If Congress does not make any law dealing with the draft quotas so clear and simple that he who runs may read, I am warranted in saying that the Provost Marshal General will be sure to twist and distort it into something different from the measure that we think we are passing. It is for this reason that I favor the clarification of this legislation by the adoption of an amendment which will make it certain that the quotas of the several States shall be based upon the number of men actually liable to military service. The majority report says that such is the intent of the act, and the fairness of the proposal can not be denied. The actual wording of the bill does not compel anything of the kind to be done. Let us fix it so that hereafter there can be no dispute about doing the thing upon which we are all agreed.

The bill should be further amended to provide that credit shall be given to each State for the number of men who have entered the military and naval service of the United States. It is only by this method that we can do justice to the patriotism of thousands of men who have volunteered for service. The people of my State demand credit for the 672 men who were in Federal service as members of the First Arizona Infantry when war was declared, together with over a thousand voluntary enlistments in the National Guard and the Regular Army since that date. They also have a right to ask to be credited with the 646 sailors that Arizona has furnished to the Navy and for 52 marines. The officers who have been commissioned in the various branches of the service should also be entered in the count.

But the largest credit to which they are entitled and which otherwise would not be granted is for 3,472 men furnished under the first draft. An additional draft of 148 men departed about two weeks ago and 470 more men are now preparing to leave for Camp Funston on April 26. We also claim credit for several hundred men who have been inducted into various special and technical units of the National Army, none of whom were credited on the first draft nor since that time. It is only by giving credit for every selected man that the injustice done to the people of my State under the first apportionment of quotas can be corrected.

Up to this good hour Arizona has furnished more men in proportion to the number actually liable to military service than any other State in the Union. By that record we have earned the right to say that the forty-eighth star in the American flag is the Mars of the constellation. I want to see this bill amended so that credit shall be given for every son of Arizona who is now fighting for freedom and democracy on land or sea. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this debate is getting interesting, and I think there should be a quorum present. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] Very well, I shall withdraw the point.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I have seven minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I approached the consideration of this Senate joint resolution modifying the draft law with the expectation of supporting it, but the more I examine it the more clear it becomes to me that I can not properly support it in its present form, and the more I become convinced that it is neither wise, fair, nor equitable. We are all tremendously interested in the success of the coming draft. We want it to be fair, we want it to be just, we want it to be equitable, so far as that may be possible, to all sections of the country. As the law now stands the State quotas are based on estimated populations, each State and county furnishing the number of men which is its share according to population. Those estimated populations are, it is true, erroneous in many cases.

They were good enough to credit the State that I have the honor to represent with about 20 per cent more people than it is fortunate enough to possess. But we are filling our quota upon that basis and making no complaint about it. It was suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] that this is a proposition to change the rules of the game after the game is called. It would be more accurate to say that it is a proposition to change the rules after the innings are half played. That practice is of doubtful propriety under any conditions, and as there is no extraordinary condition requiring it, I do not believe it should be done in this case. Why is the change suggested, approved, demanded? Because, forsooth, there has not been a uniform and equitable distribution of the men in the various States and in the various counties of the States in the classification, and it having developed that certain counties and certain States have placed many more men in class 1 than other counties and other States, it is proposed to take advantage of the situation thus created and penalize the States and communities which have placed a large number of their men in that class. One does not like to discuss this matter from the standpoint of a local situation, but the whole subject can be best illustrated by local examples. For instance, in my State, according to the report of the Provost Marshal General, 40 per cent of all the classified men are in class 1—the largest percentage in that class of any State in the Union. In the surrounding States from 21 to 26 per cent of the classified men are in class 1, and under this resolution, this change of the rules of the game, we would be called upon to nearly double our quota, to supply almost twice the number of men, as compared with surrounding States, that we are called on to supply under existing law. Our people are patriotic. One-third of all the counties of our State have furnished so many volunteers that they have had no call under the draft.

Several counties of the State still have sufficient volunteer credits that without change of law they would be called upon to furnish few, if any, men under the coming draft. This resolution as it passed the Senate deprives us of all volunteer credits. In spite of that fact and situation our people are so tremendously interested in the success of this great enterprise of war in which we are engaged that they would, I believe, be willing, so far as they are concerned, to accept this additional burden if it were fair and equitable generally, but it is not, it is as unfair to many local sections of the country as it is to our people. Our boys have volunteered freely because they wanted to get to the firing line, and yet, under this change of law, all credits for volunteering are to be wiped out, and the communities that sent the boys to the front at the first call are to be placed at a disadvantage compared with the communities where volunteers have been few and far between. They are to be put to a tremendous disadvantage compared with those communities where easy exemption boards have placed a large part of the men in the deferred classes. Why do not the gentlemen who were most enthusiastic for the selective draft in its present form stand by their guns? They are now proposing to modify the system by putting in practice a rule that will call only the men who would be most likely to go under a volunteer system, for they are proposing to take the men who made no claim of exemption, who allowed themselves to be placed in class 1, even though many of them might have been exempted or placed in deferred classes at their own demand. Why, at this late date, are we to call to the colors only the men with the volunteer spirit, while the slacker who appealed through affidavits to be placed in the deferred class is to be left at home? Such a proposal violates the very essence and spirit of a selective draft, and in view of that fact I can not see my way clear to support the resolution in its present form. Why can not the draft go on according to the established rules of the game? Why can not the States continue to furnish their quotas according to the estimated populations or the total of men registered? Why can not we go on as we began, under the rule that these gentlemen themselves laid down? And why are the most patriotic communities to be called upon to furnish double their quotas? Why is one county to be called upon to furnish an increased quota compared with a neighboring county, or one State an enlarged quota compared with a neighboring State? Why are communities to be deprived of the credit they ought to have and the proud distinction that they claim of having been foremost in offering volunteers to their country's service?

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. Is not this really a penalizing of patriotism? Is not that just what the majority bill is?

Mr. MONDELL. That is exactly what it is. It is turning back on the essentials of the system that we adopted and under which one call has been made. It is proposed now, as the gentleman from Alabama well says, to penalize the communities that offered the most volunteers to the service, to penalize communities where the smallest number of men asked exemption, to penalize communities whose men come forward without claims of exemption and allowed themselves to be placed in the first class. Without the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska this resolution proposes a rule that is flagrantly unfair, unjust, and inequitable. Gentlemen who imagine that as it applies to their States or districts as a whole, it will not, barring the loss of credits for volunteers, be inequitable, and therefore they are justified in supporting it, will learn much if they will examine the published lists showing the different percentages of men in class 1 in their various counties. They should consult those lists before they support this bill in its present form. I have no doubt it was proposed in good faith, but it could not have been proposed after a careful study of the situation for I can not understand anyone desiring the draft to be as inequitable as this resolution unamended would make it. [Applause.]

Under the law as it now stands the State and local quotas under the draft, based on population, are understood, are definite, and are accepted as being settled, under the plan now proposed to fix the quotas on the men in class 1, with no credit for volunteers, and with further authority to draw from the deferred classes, the quotas are uncertain, indefinite, and, owing to the varying proportion of men in class 1 and the wide difference in the number of volunteers in many cases, inequitable. Under the present law, Congress has definitely fixed the basis of the quotas; under the new plan the determination of the number of men a given State or community shall furnish is largely left to the discretion of the Provost Marshal General.

While I am on the subject of military service I can not refrain from expressing the pride I feel in the record of my State in this war. Its people have responded nobly to every call in men, money, and material. Our quotas of bond issues for the Red Cross and for the work of the Y. M. C. A. have all been oversubscribed. In every community of the State our splendid women have given of their time, talents, and money in liberal and generous measure. They have bravely bid goodby and Godspeed to their sons, brothers, sweethearts, and husbands and taken up the patriotic work of providing articles for their comfort in the field, in camp, and in hospital.

Nor have the war services of our patriotic women ended with war work. They have responded cheerfully to the advice and suggestions of the Food Administration and performed faithfully the duty of conserving the food supply of the Nation, and at the same time providing wholesome and nutritious food for the household in spite of rising prices, food embargoes, and doubtful substitutes hard to get.

Our stockmen and farmers have met the problems of labor shortage and increased costs with a heroic spirit and kept the farms and ranches up to the maximum of production of foodstuffs, so essential to the conduct and winning of the war, in the face of the most trying and discouraging conditions.

In the mines, on the railroads, wherever brawn and muscle, skill and endurance are applied to production and transportation of food and feed and fuel and all articles necessary to keep the wheels of enterprise turning, the Nation clothed and fed, and "the home fires burning," our men of skill and muscle have been true, faithful, and efficient.

In the matter of military service Wyoming's record has been such as to afford our people abundant reason for proper and pardonable pride. One-third of the counties of the State—to wit, Big Horn, Crook, Fremont, Hot Springs, Park, Platte, and Uinta—filled their entire quotas in the first draft by voluntary enlistments. Two counties—Park and Uinta—have volunteer credits remaining, and in the case of Park County the credit is sufficient to cover the probable quota under the second draft.

The State stands fourth among the States in the ratio of enlistments to the gross quota, and if we could have the credits due us for enlistments of Wyoming men in other States, would no doubt stand first. The acid test of service is to be found in the ratio of actual enlistments to gross quotas, and by this test Wyoming also stands fourth among the States, being exceeded only by States which by reason of their location furnished many men for the Navy and received credit for them.

The finest test that can be had of the physique as well as the spirit of a people is to be found in the proportion of men certified and accepted to those called; where this ratio runs high it reflects a high physical standard and a patriotic desire to serve. It is the final proof of the lack of weaklings and slackers. On this test Wyoming stands first in the official records of the draft. Fifty per cent, or one-half of the men called, were certified and accepted. The average for the country is 34 per cent, and in some States it was below 25 per cent.

I have already called attention to the fact that as our men stand classified for the second draft 40 per cent are in class 1. We may realize how high a percentage this is when we consider that the average for the country is a fraction less than 28 per cent and that in some States it is as low as 21 per cent. In our neighboring State of Utah the percentage of class 1 men is 22; in Colorado, 24; in Nebraska, 26; and in Montana, 31 per cent. It is this wide difference in the proportion of men in class 1 that renders the plan of basing quotas on class 1 men, as proposed by this resolution, so inequitable.

It may be claimed that our large proportion of men in class 1 is due to a considerable extent to the large number of unmarried men, but that claim is not sound, because neighboring States, with quite as large a percentage of unmarried men as we, have far fewer men in class 1. Furthermore, the records show that with the exception of the States of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, where there are large colored populations subject to the draft, a larger number of married men were accepted in Wyoming in proportion to those called than in any State in the Union. Class 1, it should be remembered, includes all married men who made no claim for exemption or deferred classification and also those whose claims for deferred classification were not allowed.

In this connection it is interesting to note the spirit of the men called for service as reflected in the claims for exemption. With our fine showing otherwise, we would perhaps be unduly puffed up if we stood at the very head of the list in this respect, but I think we may be proud of the fact that in this regard Wyoming stands fifth from the top of the list of States. This fine record is a splendid testimonial to the enthusiasm and patriotism of our people.

Such, briefly, are the outstanding facts of Wyoming's conduct toward and contribution to the war thus far. Our boys have gone freely with stout hearts and high resolves; our folks at home stand steadfast behind them, prompt and faithful in every good work and necessary sacrifice. Over yonder where the guns thunder are our valiant fighters, and over here are the faithful hearts and willing hands giving them support. We have confidence that our men on the battle line will give a good account of themselves and that the folks at home will do their full duty. In that assurance lies our faith in the ultimate victory of our cause.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes yet remaining before the close of the debate on this side, I want to make plain to the House and answer, if I can, the argument of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], who made the only argument that can be made to support this bill, and which the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] will undoubtedly elaborate. That is that the plan proposed by Gen. Crowder contemplates a nation war; that the thing we of the minority are contending for is a local matter. As a matter of fact, when you investigate the matter you must see that the plan that the minority is contending for is the national principle. If you have the call based on class 1 alone, it makes it a matter of the action of local boards of the different counties—becomes a matter of great local interest to the neighborhood. If the quota is based upon a military population, the action of the board can not change the number of soldiers to be furnished. Here is a tremendous responsibility—a responsibility of furnishing men to fight in this war—and we propose by the rule of military population to distribute that great responsibility fairly over the entire population of the United States. Our proposition is a national proposition. Their proposition makes it a neighborhood proposition. The Census Bureau pointed out to Gen. Crowder, as we learn from the speech of the gentleman from Arizona, that the proposition which we stand for was the fair proposition upon which to draft the country's manhood. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, before yielding the remainder of my time I just want to take time to say a word to the House. If the proposition of the committee prevails, no married men will be taken from their families in any section, so long as there are single men to be called in the country; but if the proposition of the minority prevails, married men will be taken from their families in some sections while there still remain uncalled unmarried men in other sections of the country. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] It seems quite evident a quorum is not present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Beshlin	Curry, Cal.	Fairchild, G. W.	Goodall
Borland	Decker	Fess	Graham, Pa.
Britten	Delaney	Flynn	Hamilton, N. Y.
Buchanan	Dies	Fordney	Harrison, Miss.
Byrnes, S. C.	Donovan	Foss	Heaton
Candler, Miss.	Dowell	Gallagher	Heflin
Carew	Drukker	Gallivan	Heintz
Carter, Mass.	Dunn	Gandy	Hensley
Costello	Elliott	Godwin, N. C.	Hicks
Hollingsworth	McLemore	Reed	Smith, T. F.
Hood	Mann	Riordan	Snyder
Johnson, S. Dak.	Meeker	Roberts	Stephens, Nebr.
Jones, Va.	Miller, Wash.	Rose	Sterling, Ill.
Juul	Mondell	Rowland	Taylor, Colo.
Kettner	Moon	Rubey	Templeton
LaGuardia	Mudd	Sanders, N. Y.	Towner
Lea, Cal.	Neely	Sanford	Volstead
London	Norton	Scott, Iowa	Walsh
McAndrews	Parker, N. J.	Scott, Pa.	Wilson, Ill.
McClintic	Powers	Sears	Wood, Ind.
McCulloch	Ramsey	Sells

The SPEAKER. On this call 350 Members, a quorum, answered to their names.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

LIABILITY TO MILITARY SERVICE OF CERTAIN REGISTERED PERSONS.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has been yielded 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, no one can have read the speech of the English premier, delivered in the House of Commons last Tuesday, without becoming impressed with the seriousness of the European war situation and the magnitude of the task that confronts the American people. Lloyd-George, in speaking on the English man-power bill, announced a program that contemplated the drafting of men up to those 50 years of age; of drafting clergymen and putting them into noncombatant work; and of taking all men under 25 years of age now engaged in the industries and drafting them into the fighting force of Great Britain. He announced frankly that his country had met with a serious reverse, but he said that England will never quit until her last ship is sunk. Her spirit is dauntless. In that same dauntless spirit we will have to fight this war.

Let us not delude ourselves. The man power of this country will be needed to win this war. The men on this floor and in the Senate of the United States have already begun to figure, not in dollars and cents, not in hundreds of thousands, not in millions, but in billions of dollars. The men on this floor and in the Senate will have to figure as to man power in this country not in thousands but in millions. We will have to furnish in the final analysis, as I stated a moment ago, the man power to win this war. There are not going to be a few hundred here or a few thousand there; there are going to be millions of American fighters before we can hope to finish the struggle.

It matters not how we got into the war. We are in it, and no patriotic American will question his country's right in this crisis. We began the war because Germany served notice on us on January 31, 1917, that if our ships crossed a certain line which she herself drew on the Atlantic Ocean, which line under international law we had an absolute right to cross, she would ruthlessly destroy our ships and perchance sink and drown our people. She carried that threat into effect. Thereafter there was nothing for us to do but to surrender or to fight, and we determined to fight. [Applause.] And we have got to win the fight. [Applause.]

Certainly I have tried since this country entered the war not to minimize our difficulties. At times I may have seemed pessimistic in discussing the matter with my colleagues, but I think I understand the psychology of the German people. Members of this House during the past year have often thought that a condition had arisen in Germany when the people of that Empire were starving and that they would have to make peace. Conditions had arisen in Germany, or at least the newspapers told us they had arisen, which indicated that possibly there was going to be a revolution in that country, and therefore the central powers would have to make peace. Personally I constantly held that no such conditions prevailed in Germany. As I asserted a moment ago, I believe I know the psychology of Germany. Personally I maintained that we would have to win this war by force, and nothing but force. [Applause.] High authority in this country has come to that same conclusion quite recently, I am happy to say, and we might just as well face the issue that confronts us on the basis of force from now on. Therein lies our safety, our salvation, I believe. [Applause.]

It is almost a year since we passed the selective-draft law. That law was predicated upon the principle that it is the duty of every citizen to render service to his country, especially when that country is involved in war. It is a sound principle, and the American people have amply justified that law. They have accepted it in the spirit in which it was enacted. The conditions to-day in the National Army camps of this country attest the soundness of that principle. The splendid way the boys went to the colors from their various homes shows how sincerely the people stand behind that law.

To-day we are considering a proposition to amend that law. The pending resolution provides for the calling into the military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable to military service under the terms of the selective-draft law. It likewise is predicated on a basic principle. That principle is that the men who should first be called to the service of their country ought to be those who can be best spared with the least possible injury or disturbance to industrial, agricultural, or domestic relations. The proposed legislation takes these availables from each locality in proportion to the resources of that locality

That is what is involved in this bill. That is what the classification means. All those in class 1 under the questionnaire system have few ties, but the men in class 2 and class 3 and all the other deferred classifications are so industrially or socially related to the affairs of the Nation that to take them ahead of some of the others would be a serious disturbance of those relations. That is the basic principle involved.

It is claimed by those who signed the minority report that this plan is productive of inequalities. I grant that is so. Of course, there will be inequalities. But I contend there will be fewer inequalities under this plan than under the first draft. Therefore, in my opinion, inequalities have nothing to do with the quota basis. There are naturally inequalities in the 4,557 registration districts into which the Union has been divided. In some States the inequalities between these districts within the State have been very great. In the aggregate, however, when the entire country is taken into consideration, the inequalities between the States range less than 10 per cent, and these are due to various industrial and social differences. In fact, the new classification reduces inequalities and does not increase them.

England made her serious mistake by taking all men of certain ages at first, although they were connected with industries necessary to the winning of the war, and then sending them back again to reenter those industries. We want to avoid that. We want to keep the men that are necessary to agriculture, that are necessary to industry, that have families dependent upon them, as long as we can in this country before sending them abroad. Oh, no one can tell how long this war is going to last. We may be fighting for the life of the Republic within a year, and we must have these reserve classes in the final analysis to fall back upon for the maintenance of those very industries that will be needed to be kept alive to help win the war.

It was inevitable that the first draft, based upon population figures, could not be anything like correct. No census had been taken since 1910. The Census Bureau had to guess at the population in many of the rapidly growing manufacturing cities of the country. There will be no census taken in this country until 1920 under the Constitution. So the population figures have been misleading in numerous instances. But the classification figures form a safe basis from which to draw quotas.

But there is another consideration that has to be taken into account. We are not fighting this war as 48 separate States of the Union or 435 congressional districts of the Union. We are fighting this war as a great Nation. It is the Nation's war. It is not the war of any State. It is not the war of any congressional district. It is the war of every American, no matter where he lives. [Applause.] If we win the war—and we must win it—every State will share in the benefit, every congressional district will share in the benefit. But each separate division and subdivision of the American Republic must come wholeheartedly, patriotically, devotedly, to the assistance of the Government, and furnish its man power whenever called upon to do so by the Commander in Chief of the Army, the President of the United States. [Applause.]

In this crisis I contend that no man should take such a narrow view of the situation as to want to make a fight against the proposed legislation because his district may have to furnish a few more men than some other district. If any Member here should be defeated, the country will still be able to survive. There are none of us of such importance that our defeat would be a calamity, but our country's defeat would be a calamity that would have a serious effect on the civilization of mankind. Therefore I repeat we must win this war.

I am afraid those who have signed the minority report have taken too narrow a view of this matter. Suppose we were to follow their views to a logical conclusion in connection with the armies of our cobelligerents. Take the case of Great Britain. Suppose Scotland were to say to Wales, "We have furnished 5,000 more men than you, and we will not send another man until you have furnished as many as we have." What would be the position of England in this war? Suppose England were to say to Scotland and Wales, "We have furnished 10,000 more men than you together. We will not furnish another man until you bring forth another 10,000." Where would Great Britain, fighting as a nation, end in this war? Suppose Yorkshire should say to Lancashire, "We have furnished more men than you. We will not furnish another man until you meet our number." Where would Great Britain be in fighting this war?

Take the case of France. France is fighting superbly, fighting nobly. She has won the admiration of the world. [Applause.] She is fighting as a nation. Under the arguments adduced here to-day Normandy ought to say to Brittany, "We have furnished more men than you, and we will not furnish another man until your number equals ours." Suppose Picardy should say to La Vendee, "We have furnished more men than you, and therefore we will not furnish another man until your quota equals ours." That would be the logical conclusion in Europe if the views of the gentlemen of the minority should prevail.

And what of Germany? What if Saxony and Bavaria and Wurtemburg and Baden should say to Prussia, "We have furnished more men than you. We will not furnish another man until you furnish as much man power as we have furnished." I wish to the Lord they would say that. [Applause and Laughter.] It would make our task a great deal easier. But Germany is fighting as a nation, and the sooner we begin to realize the fact that we, too, are fighting as a great nation that has fundamental rights at stake the better it will be for us and the better it will be for our cause. [Applause.]

I believe we have taken a long step in advance in this war. Our armies are not referred to nowadays as the Regular Army, the National Army, the National Guard Army. They have all been merged into one. They are referred to as the Army of the United States; and in the Army of the United States California has her sons, Wisconsin has her sons, Nebraska has her sons, Virginia has her sons. Every State in the Union has her sons, who have gone to fight for the cause of the Union in the Army of the United States. For me the cause of the Union in this crisis is paramount and the legislation for which we are called upon to vote to-day will enable us to furnish an army of men whose going "over there" with the American colors will do the least possible injury to our economic and social relations.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of my friend from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], the leader of the minority on this question. The only logical deduction I could make from his argument was this, that every local board in this country—and there are 4,557 of them—must be distrusted. That is evidently his conclusion. His argument indicates to me, at least, that they have not acted squarely, and that their work must be distrusted. I have no such view on the proposition. The members comprising those boards were men who were appointed to their positions because they had a known reputation in their respective communities. They were men of probity, of honesty, of integrity, and they did their work according to their lights. In some places they may have been too lenient, in other places they may have been too rigorous; but the Provost Marshal General has already sent a telegram to the governor of every State asking that in those districts where there seem to be an abnormal number of rejections or an abnormal number of acceptances the cases arising in such local board districts be investigated by special agents. These special agents are now in the field.

If they find that some of the boards have been too rigorous, they can order appeals to the district boards, and the district boards will see to it that the proper classification will be made. So, too, in the districts where there have been too many exemptions. The inspectors are out now, and if they find that the local board did not properly interpret the Provost Marshal General's instructions, they have ample authority to see that the district boards shall hear appeals, and those inequalities can and will be corrected. In fact, they are being corrected and will continue to be corrected right straight along.

But there is one other proposition involved in the amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]. He assumes, or must assume from the trend of his argument, that the conditions in every district are practically identical; that practically the same conditions prevail in every district throughout this country. Why, you all know that that is impossible. It stands to reason that in many districts conditions are so dissimilar that there must be a larger number of exemptions or a larger number of acceptances in some than in others. Yet the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] is based practically on the proposition that in every district in this country the conditions are about the same. I deny that such a condition prevails.

My colleagues, I have heard it said that even assuming that we are going to have such a large Army as has been spoken of, it will be impossible for the American forces to be landed in France, or to feed them in France. No condition has ever yet arisen in the United States of America that has baffled the ability of American statesmen and the American people. [Applause.] We will meet those conditions as they arise. We realize that we must win this war no matter how many men it may take, no matter how much treasure it may cost, no matter how long the time in winning it. We are but beginning the struggle now. Let us, by adopting this resolution, give the President every opportunity to take into the service of the Nation those men who can best be spared at this time. Let us take everybody embraced in class 1 before we begin anywhere with class 2. Therein lies our safety. Therein lies our power to win this war. Picture to yourselves millions of Americans leaving their homes, leaving their land to fight for American principles, to fight for American rights. You do not want at the very outset to pull away from their homes and families men who can not be spared. You want to take the men who best can be spared. If, God forbid, we shall ever have to go into class 2 or 3 or 4 to win this war, I know that Americans in those classes will go cheerfully and willingly. But do not let us take them until the country is driven to the extremity of taking them. [Applause.]

One word more and I have done. It has been suggested that you are not going to get credit for those who volunteer. Those who have volunteered have thus far been credited to the districts and the States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I shall then speak of this matter when we get under the five-minute rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That if under any regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," are placed in classes for the purpose of determining their relative liability for military service, no provision of said act shall prevent the President from calling for immediate military service under regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President all or part of the persons in any class or classes except those exempt from draft under the provisions of said act, in proportion to the total number of persons placed in such class or classes in the various subdivisions of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia designated by the President under the terms of said act; or from calling into immediate military service persons classed as skilled experts in industry or agriculture, however classified or wherever residing.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment that I desire to offer to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 5, strike out all after the word "act," down to and including the word "act," at the end of line 8, and in line 11, after the period at the end of the bill, insert the following:

"Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, called under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' shall hereafter be determined in proportion to the total number of persons registered and liable for military service therein, including resident aliens who have waived all claims for exemption, and credit shall be given on its quotas to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, for the number of men who have entered the military service of the United States from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, since April 1, 1917, including members of the National Guard who were in the Federal service on that date."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Nebraska permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would it not be well to agree on some time for debate on the amendment?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I suggested to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] that we should make some agreement as to time on the amendment, and he thought we had better go on a little bit under the five-minute rule, and then arrive at an agreement later.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska is proceeding under the one-hour rule, having offered an amendment, this being a House bill?

The SPEAKER. He undoubtedly is.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there ought to be some agreement as to time and not run along without limit. Does the gentleman have any objection to the bill being considered under the five-minute rule?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. Reserving the right to object, literally the five-minute rule would permit a speech for and against the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska, which presents the whole question by way of amendment to this bill, but I think there ought to be more debate than 5 or 10 minutes on a side under the five-minute rule. If we can have an understanding that those who have not been able to speak in general debate, who have been busy in other work, may have a reasonable opportunity to debate the matter, I shall not object.

Mr. DENT. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Nebraska that debate on this amendment be limited to, say, one hour, the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be limited to one hour, half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] and the other half by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]. Is there objection?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. May I be permitted to make a suggestion, that so many gentlemen have made application for time that I am quite sure that one hour is not sufficient, and I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he ascertain how many Members want to speak for five minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, so many Members have a desire to speak that I ask unanimous consent that the time be limited to two hours, one hour on each side, to be controlled one half by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] and the other half by myself.

Mr. CANNON. Does that cut off all other debate?

Mr. FIELDS. That is only a request to limit the time on the pending amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate on the Shallenberger amendment be confined to two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Nebraska. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman in yielding this time to yield only five minutes to a Member? There are several gentlemen who I think ought to have more than five minutes to discuss this amendment, who have not participated in general debate, and if they do it is going to require more than two hours. I do not think that necessarily the Members who desire to discuss the amendment under this arrangement should be confined to five minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. It is my intention to be fair and extend the time as far as I can. I hope that gentleman will confine themselves to five minutes as near as possible, because the rights of all Members are equal in the House, one man having just as much right to speak as another. I hope Members will confine themselves to five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. The committee is entitled to first recognition, and the committee consists of 21 members?

Mr. FIELDS. Twenty-one members.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman think of an hour on a side for that?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we make it an hour and a half on a side.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed under the five-minute rule for the present, without fixing any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed under the five-minute rule, without limiting the time. Is there objection?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I object. I think we ought to pass this bill and agree upon a time to debate it. If two hours are not enough, let us make it two hours and half.

The SPEAKER. Has anyone any request to make? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman for an hour.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, we have already spoiled the day, and we will likely not do anything more than this, and I suggest that we debate this matter for three hours.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment be confined to three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that include the amendment and all amendments thereto?

The SPEAKER. It includes the Shallenberger amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to offer an amendment to the Shallenberger amendment. I desire to propound an inquiry as to whether I shall be shut off from debate of my amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman can get his amendment before the House now, you might debate the whole subject at one time.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I shall modify my request by making it the Shallenberger amendment and all amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate upon the Shallenberger amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to three hours. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Kentucky as to whether or not I will be taken care of to debate my amendment during those three hours?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not say what the gentleman from Kentucky will do.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that I will yield to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there are two items only that I want now to bring to the attention of the House that were not presented heretofore, and I do not want to take more than a minute or two to do it. First, I want to call attention to the fact that when we passed this great draft law the Congress of the United States surrendered to the War Department the lives and the bodies of these young men of draft age with but two limitations only upon that department. You may search this law through and you will find only two possible limitations on the absolute power of the War Department over the lives of these men. One is—and I quote from the act—

> Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population.

That is something they could not change. The population is determined. It is fixed. That was one safeguard that you put around it, that every section of the country should be treated exactly alike in asking this great sacrifice. The second is that credit shall be given upon those quotas for the number of men who are in the military service of the United States and the National Guard, or who have entered that service since the 1st of April, 1917. Those are the only two limitations put upon the War Department in handling these men. This resolution that is so carefully drawn is intended to and does take away the last limitation of protection that the Congress of the United States threw around this matter to protect the interests of these men.

This resolution provides that nothing in this act shall prevent the President of the United States from calling for immediate military service under regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President all or part of the persons of any class or classes, except those exempt from draft under the provisions of the act. The first part of the act which it repeals is the one basing it on quotas, and the other is that which says that credit shall be given for volunteers. They tell you they have a classification now. Do you know that if you enact this law the Provost Marshal General can do what he has done before? He can change this draft classification to suit himself. If you repeal that provision of the present law, he can issue a classification that all of the men who are red-headed shall be placed in one class, that all of the black-headed men shall be placed in another class, and all of the light-headed men shall be placed in another class, and then he can say that he will keep the red-headed men at home, because the enemy can see them in the nighttime, and that he will take the black-headed over there, because they can not see them in the nighttime, and that he will use the light-headed men for day attacks. You say that that is absurd. Well, many absurd things are being done in certain bureaus of the War Department. And he can do another thing if you adopt this bill without amendment. He can classify all of the men from Iowa in one class, all of the men from New York in another class, all of the men of military age from any particular State in one class by themselves, and then he can call those men from different States in the order that he determines. He is in effect doing that already. The gentleman from Georgia calls your attention to the fact that he has asked for more men from Georgia than he has from New York in this new draft.

In the first call under the second draft no credit was allowed for the volunteers. I wrote a letter to the Provost Marshal General and asked him why no credit was allowed, and reply was made that credit was refused at present because he had to get a certain number of men, but that in subsequent quotas they expected to give credit to those entitled to it for volunteers. Now he is calling for more men from Georgia than he is calling for from New York, and he can keep on calling, if you repeal this law, until he has taken every man from Georgia under that draft quota as he goes on getting his 800,000 or his 2,000,000 men, and he may finally say, "I am going to take those fellows from New York next summer."

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can not be interrupted now. But, my friends, this war may be over in six months and those men from Georgia may go over there and get into the trenches while these other fellows remain here drilling. You surrender every protection of the present as to equality of liability to military service to these men who are over there fighting for us in the trenches, who are giving their lives for us.

Now, is the Congress of the United States going to attempt to repeal and take away from these drafted men every protection that the law gives to them at present? And yet that is what you do when you repeal this act. Now, I want to make this point and then I am done: The present law is attacked frequently because they state that it is unfair as between those communities having only a small alien population and those having a large alien population. Gen. Crowder is upon record that of this second call of all the men remaining of proper draft age he expects to get 2,200,000 certified for service and in class 1.

Every delinquent in the United States that failed to respond to the draft or answer the questionnaire is in class 1. We had in the last draft 3,000,000 to get the first million certified men from, and they had 252,294 delinquent from that 3,000,000 men. Every one of those are in class 1 if they are still delinquent. Now, he has called 6,000,000 men to draw his new quotas from, and we have the right to assume that since he got that number of delinquent men from the first 3,000,000 men it is only fair to assume he will get 500,000 delinquents from the remaining 6,000,000 men. If that is so, then he will get 750,000 delinquents in class 1. The gentleman from Arizona has pointed out the fact that he has had a telegram from the adjutant general of that State that in a certain county of Arizona more than half the men of class 1 are delinquent—Mexicans leaving the country to avoid service. Now, these are some things in this bill I want you to understand. Mr. Speaker have I used five minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an hour and a half.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I shall not use much more time, as there are many other gentlemen who have applied for time. The Judge Advocate General says we should secure for service 2,200,000 men. He only claims that many by counting also the boys he expects to get when you allow him also to take in the million boys that have come of age since the declaration of war. It is in the RECORD that 1,500,000 men are all the men expected to be furnished this country from the boys called from class 1, taking those men absolutely fit for service, unless we include also those 21 since last June. As I stated yesterday, gentlemen of the Congress, if you limit this class to class 1, we can not possibly get the size army that we will require; and the contention is made and the only argument that I have heard that seems to appeal to a great many gentlemen with force is that class 1 excuses married men. Now, gentlemen tell you that class 1 excuses married men. Do you know how many men in the United States did not claim exemption under class 1? Sixty per cent of all the men that went in did not claim exemption.

We do not know whether they are married or not. Thousands of married men are in class 1. Do you think that those counties that have got 75 per cent of all their registrants in class 1 have not got married men in that class? Every married man that a board thought did not support his wife is in class 1. Every married man who they thought had enough money to support his family without him, and that he ought not to stay at home, is in class 1. Every married man who did not claim exemption as having dependents is in class 1. Nobody knows how many married men are in class 1.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield.

Mr. SABATH. The local boards have the power to classify so; for instance, in the case of Nebraska, it was up to the local boards to properly classify them, is not that true?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULLIVAN. If there is a fault anywhere it would lie with the local board?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The local boards when they classified the men did not know that was going to be the basis for quotas. Now, as to the classification, and I want to say with regard to that, that I am glad the gentleman brought it to my attention, that those of us who advocate this amendment do not propose to do away with Gen. Crowder's classification at all. Our contention is that the classification is a proper thing. Of a thousand men of draft age in a certain county we say that county shall be required to furnish the same number of soldiers as any other county of the same military population, and we propose under this selective plan to allow that board to determine the order in which they shall be taken. If a county has a large number of men of military age and a call goes forth for those men and the men refuse to go as volunteers, what are you going to do to the boy who has the courage to go? Is it not the purpose to take that fellow who ought to go and did not go? Is not that the purpose of the law?

Mr. SABATH. Is it not much better even to take those who are desirous of going and ready to fight than to take a lot of cowards and slackers who do not want to serve their country?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the object of my amendment.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman point out in the committee bill specifically what there is to prevent the President from taking class 2 men when he sees fit, even though he desires to take class 2 men before all of class 1 are exhausted?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. He can. He can take all the men, if we pass this bill, in any class that he sees fit. We have repealed all restrictions as to that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then why should not the apportionment be based on all the men of these four classes, because they are all made liable to be called under this bill at the same time?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes. Some have misunderstood my language when I say that the quota should be based upon those men of military age, liable to military service. That includes the four classes. Under the classification every man who is not liable to military service is in class 5, so that in these places that have a large alien population every alien claiming his alienage is in class 5, and he is not counted. The only distinction I make from those who are liable to military service, I say, is including those aliens who waive exemption, and I do that because under the ruling of the draft board every alien who is willing to fight and waives his exemption is placed in class 1, so that under my amendment every soldier who is willing to fight is allowed to go to the front, and each county furnishes its quota according to its population.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is with great reluctance that I oppose the amendment of my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], but this matter has been agitated to such an extent in my State that I feel that it should be my privilege to briefly give my reasons for opposing the amendment.

The debate has indicated that certain territorial divisions of the United States have been independently classifying as soldiers all men liable to military service. On the contrary, the United States itself, as a nation, through regularly authorized agents, has been taking a census of man power within this Nation. These agents have selected for class 1, presumably acting honestly and in good faith, those men who are best fitted to bear arms for their country. They have put into class 1, as I understand it, those men who in large measure, or the greater proportion of whom at least, are without dependents at home, who can be best spared from the employment the curtailing of which would materially reduce the military efficiency of the Nation.

There never was a time when the Republic needed efficient soldiers as it needs them now. It is useless for us to deny or minimize the tragedy which the cause of civilization now faces. Disaster lurks just around the corner in France.

Roumania has made a separate peace; Russia has collapsed; Italy is driven back to the plains; the western front is 2 miles nearer Paris than it was on this date two years ago. What is there in the present condition to justify the belief that this war can be won without the greatest assistance from us of which the Nation is possessed?

With that idea in view, the man power of the Nation has been classified. Into class 1 has gone that type of man whose mind will be unfretted by anxiety and worry for dependents left at home. He will have nothing to divert him from the stupendous task allotted to him. Class 1 is made up in large measure of the lads who are searching life for its adventures, and who will seek upon the fields of France the opportunity that hearts unafraid have searched for since the world was young. An army of such as these when assembled will be the most potent military force that ever troubled the earth with martial tread. In this day of apprehension it is not essential what city or county or district or State shall claim them, for they come as soldiers of the Republic, not as citizens of a community. [Applause.]

This is not a county war, nor a congressional district war, nor a State war. This is the war of the Nation. Never since the old bell clanged out the announcement that a new Nation was born has the Republic faced such a crisis; never during its glorious history has the Nation had the opportunity for world service that it has at this hour.

Already we fight side by side with those with whom we make common cause. Already, beyond the sea, American boys are thrusting their strong young bodies between the advancing hordes and the Nation they serve. In the trenches, hollow-eyed with fatigue, grey of face from weariness, struggling, panting, sobbing from exertion, the American soldier seeks to stop the advance of those who are bent on the destruction of all that you and I hold dear. Why, even as I talk to you in the fading light of this day, boys, American boys, lie with torn and twisted bodies, mere huddles of clothes, with white upturned faces in the blood puddles of France. The wires beneath the restless waters of the ocean are singing with the burden of appeals for help that they carry. Appeals from France, from England, from Pershing. Efficient help and immediate help. But with our ears dulled we debate as to whether Waterloo, Iowa, shall furnish more or less men than Cedar Rapids. We are calling upon the citizens of the Nation, for in this hour nothing but the country counts. In this day of peril if every man able to bear arms and to be of military service to the Nation lived in my State I would bid them go, for they would go to defend the Nation without which there would be no State.

Because the exigency is national in aspect, and because the need for efficient soldiers is so great, I oppose the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I do not see why there should be so much feeling over the proposition involved in this bill as has been displayed in the debate. Whether you adopt the proposition proposed by the War Department, which is sponsored by Gen. Crowder, a very able man, or the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], you do not add one single solitary soldier to the forces of the United States. So that it is useless to talk about raising a big army by adopting the War Department plan instead of the Shallenberger plan. You do not add a single man to the military forces of the United States, and I am getting awfully tired of the propositions that are being advanced by the newspapers, criticizing Congress because it does not absolutely adopt everything that the War Department proposes. [Applause.]

So far as this bill is concerned, for instance, there appeared in the morning press the statement that I was opposed to the bill and that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was leading the fight for it. As a matter of fact, under an agreement between the gentleman from California and myself, the time in favor of the bill is controlled by the next ranking Democratic member of the committee, Mr. FIELDS. Now, it is not fair that Congress should be continually criticized because we happen to exercise some little judgment and opinion as to what the character and the nature of legislation should be in order to carry on this war. [Applause.] So far as I am concerned, I have been holding back the report of the Army appropriation bill, because I want to know, when the Secretary of War returns from France, whether he wants a million and a half men that they have asked now or whether he wants 3,000,000 men; and if he wants 3,000,000 men, I am going to vote for it. [Applause.] There is absolutely no difference of opinion between the members of the Military Committee, so far as supporting the War Department and the administration is concerned, except as to matters of detail.

Now, I have heard a great deal of discussion here to-day about the difference between the plan proposed by Gen. Crowder and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska. Let us see what it all means. In a nutshell Gen. Crowder's proposition gives to each local board the opportunity and offers the temptation to eliminate from class 1 those who might have some political pull and influence.

Under the plan proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] there is recognized the classification proposed by the War Department. He recognizes the fact that there ought to be a call, first, of men who have no dependents, but he says that they ought to be called from class 1 first, not in accordance with the number that the board puts in class 1, but in accordance with the number totally liable for military service under the law that has been enacted. [Applause.] Now, is there anything unfair in that proposition? Are we unpatriotic because we support a proposition like that? Are we to be charged with not supporting the administration and the war because we say that each community should furnish from class 1 its proportion in accordance with the total number liable for military service?

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield for a minute?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. What does that mean—the first four classes—"the total number liable for military service?"

Mr. DENT. It means all liable to service.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman will admit that under the proposed amendment it is possible to exhaust class 1 and go into class 2 in one district and not in another, is it not?

Mr. DENT. That may be possible, it is true, and it is also possible that one county in one State could exclude men who ought to be in class 1 under the program proposed by Gen. Crowder, whereas another county would live up to the law.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And it is possible, under the bill as asked for by Gen. Crowder, to go in and take all of classes 2, 3, and 4 before taking those from class 1.

Mr. GORDON. He can also take all the men he calls for from one State—is not that true?

Mr. DENT. He certainly can.

Mr. GORDON. There is no mistake about it.

Mr. FIELDS. The very fact that he can would obviate the objection that men might be placed in class 2 instead of in class 1. His department has authority to do that.

Mr. DENT. Of course, it has authority to do it, but that is not the program that Gen. Crowder told us he was going to carry out.

Now, there is another proposition involved in this. I want an army just as much as anybody else; but, as I said in the beginning, you do not add anybody to the military service by this bill. We deliberately, under the act of May 18, 1917, commonly known as the selective-draft law, provided that every community should be given credit for volunteers in either the Regular Army or the National Guard. The proposition of Gen. Crowder absolutely repeals that idea. The amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] preserves it. I have been so worried over this situation——

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman is referring to credit for volunteers?

Mr. DENT. Yes. If the gentleman will give me time, I will state that more fully.

Mr. FIELDS. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that that question is not the issue in this amendment?

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. DENT. Certainly it is.

Mr. FIELDS. I understand the gentleman divided his amendment.

Mr. DENT. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY. Will not this law and the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska both repeal the original law, which provided that quotas should be furnished by States in proportion to their population?

Mr. DENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HARDY. Both repeal that.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. It has never been carried out, anyway.

Mr. HARDY. So that with either one of these amendments adopted we would go to making each State furnish its quota in proportion to the number of those who seem to be liable for military service?

Mr. DENT. That is the interpretation of the War Department.

Mr. HARDY. And a State, with its population composed one-half of foreigners, will be called upon to furnish its quota in proportion only to those liable to military service?

Mr. DENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman just stated that if the original bill passes it will do away with credit for all those who volunteer. Now, under the original law, all those who volunteered got credit under the first draft. Is it not a fact that the gentleman really means that if this original bill is passed there will be no credit, only for those who have volunteered since then.

Mr. DENT. That is exactly what the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] seeks to correct, and under his amendment credit will be given for those men who have volunteered in either the Regular Army or the National Guard since then.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Since the first draft?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one other question. I started a few moments ago with a statement to the effect that under the act of May 18, 1917, credit was given for volunteers. I have been exceedingly worried and anxious to have bills coming from the Military Committee receive unanimous support from every member of that committee—this is the second bill about which there has been any difference of opinion. I have taken no stock in this fight one way or the other up to this time. I took this matter not only to Gen. Crowder, to the Acting Secretary of War, but to the President himself, and voluntarily, on the 26th of March, the President wrote me this letter:

THE WHITE HOUSE.
Washington, March 26, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. DENT: After my brief conference the other day with you and two of your colleagues of the Military Affairs Committee, I laid the matter we then discussed before the Acting Secretary of War, and he has sent me the inclosed memorandum. I must frankly say that I find the arguments contained in this memorandum very hard to answer. The whole thing is very debatable, but, on the whole, I think the weight of the debate lies on the side of the contention of the War Department.

That is in favor of the first proposition offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], the President himself admitting that the proposition is exceedingly debatable, and therefore nobody can be criticized, I think, for voting either way.

It may be, as they say—

Continuing the reading of the letter of the President—that in giving credits for voluntary enlistments under the new draft no "useful purpose" would be served, but I think, nevertheless, that it would be perfectly proper to include such allowances in the new law.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

[Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there anything that requires the House to take all of the Shallenberger amendment in order to deal with the question of giving credit for volunteers?

Mr. DENT. Why, certainly not. It is a divisible proposition. The gentleman is a good parliamentarian, and he knows that.

Mr. SHERLEY. But there seems to have been such an effort to tie them together, so as to make the House take all or none, that I wanted the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. DENT. I think it is a divisible proposition, but I do not care whether they are tied together or not. The gentleman from Nebraska came to me and asked me whether or not I thought the proposition was divisible, and not being a parliamentarian, like my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], I went to the gentleman from Georgia, Judge CRISP, and asked his opinion, and he told me it was, and I accepted his opinion on the subject. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am strongly in favor of the Crowder plan for the next draft, and against the Shallenberger amendment. I represent a population of 265,000. In my district is a voting population of nearly 60,000, showing you that I have no sectional interest but certainly a sectional pride, and that I have no large foreign population in my district. For the information of the House I would like to attempt to show you that some credit is given in the next draft to the volunteers who have already gone out into the service of the Nation.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], on page 123 of the hearings before our committee, in discussing this bill, says:

Mr. FIELDS. For instance, the county of Bracken, in Kentucky, had no draft; they had no men taken by the draft. They had 52 more enlistments than their quota under the draft. How would that county be affected?

Gen. CROWDER. They would take the reduced strength of class 1 in that community, due to the fact that all these men had been transferred to the service, as the basis for determining the number of men to be taken from that community into the second draft.

Then Mr. HULL of Iowa asked this question:

Mr. HULL. That means that we must accept the principle and not claim any credit for all the National Guardsmen who have already gone in.

Gen. CROWDER. You get credit in the way I have suggested. The basis for determining credits is the strength of class 1. If you have had a large number of enlistments, the number of men in class 1 is correspondingly reduced, and therefore you work out a smaller quota for that community under the new rule than under the old rule.

Yesterday the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], in his most eloquent speech, said:

Let us have done with foolish fancies about winning this war or fighting with ships, with speeches, etc. This war will be won and can only be won when we put more fighting men in France than the central powers of Europe can muster.

To be sure, Mr. Speaker, we have the men here. It is acknowledged that we have nearly 2,000,000 men under draft, many of whom volunteered, and we must feed these men. These men must be clothed and ships must be built to send these men across the water. I am in favor particularly of the Crowder plan of drafting because it drafts according to eligibles and not population. I have no large foreign population in my district, perhaps, except in one city, the city of Quincy, the home of the Fore River Shipbuilding plant and the Victory plant. In one of these plants are employed 8,000 men working in two shifts. In going through this plant more than a year ago I ascertained that 2,500 men could not speak a word of English.

The city of Quincy in the first draft exhausted nearly 40 per cent of its eligibles, and why should the city of Quincy be penalized by going on in the old way according to population because it has a large foreign population—2,500 men in that city building ships which are of prime necessity in winning the war. These men are just as useful in their occupations as many of the men who have gone into the draft service.

The President and Secretary of War may approve this plan or that plan; they have not as yet indicated that they are for this amendment or for the Crowder plan, but I should prefer to take the dictation of the Provost Marshal General whose function is to carry out the plan for raising the next draft army. He is in the position perhaps of my father, the proprietor of a woolen mill, who knew all about the buying of wool and the sale of woolen goods; but he did not know, perhaps, about the intricate and special work of the sorting room, the weaving room, or the carding room, but left the functions of that important duty to his boss sorter, the boss carder, the boss spinner, and the boss weaver, and yet he was the actual administrator of the woolen mill, as the President is the Commander in Chief of the forces of the Army, and the Provost Marshal General is the particular officer designated by the Government to propose draft legislation, and he has worked out the first draft with notable ability and efficiency.

Gen. Crowder has worked out a splendid plan for reinforcing the Army of the country, and his wisdom can be absolutely relied upon. This is no district matter, it is not sectional, not a proposition of the State, but is of national consideration. My own town of Dedham, with a population of 11,000, has sent to the war in volunteers and in other capacities 400 men. In the first draft its quota amounted to about 70 men, showing you that there is no sectional reason for my favoring the Crowder plan; but it is just a matter of eligibility and the fairest way to raise the next quota of 500,000 men for service in France. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on the measure because I thought it was so fair in all of its provisions that it would hardly be necessary to appeal to the House to enact this necessary legislation. I regret very much to differ from the distinguished chairman of the committee, for whom I have the highest regard and who, I believe, is working to the best of his ability to form, equip, and provide for a splendid Army for the United States. I think that Gen. Crowder in his splendid presentation of this matter before the committee has simply given the country and all of us the benefit of practically one year's actual experience in the operation of the so-called draft law. And I believe that the classification as arranged for, which has been carried out, is a step in the right direction. In other words, the local boards have decided by scanning the questionnaires which have been submitted to them, regardless of whether exemptions have been claimed, who in their communities belong in these different classes. The Shallenberger amendment presupposes two things. First, that you can not trust the local boards in the different communities to do their duty.

I want to ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] whether he is afraid to trust the local boards in his own State? I want to say here that my own experience has been that these boards are trying just as conscientiously as any men can to do their whole duty. All of our laws are administered through human agencies, and these men are courts administering this law, just as the judges and the juries of our local courts administer all of our laws, and I say it is absolutely absurd to claim that we can not trust the men who have been selected for these boards to do what they know is right in making these classifications.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman, of course, understands that no draft board had any idea when it classified these men that it was going to determine the percentage of men that was going to be sent?

Mr. CRAGO. I am not so sure about that, but I venture to say that the boards in this country did their duty as they saw it when they put these men in the classes where they belong. The amendment which the gentleman has offered presupposes another thing, and that is that conditions are the same, economically, industrially, socially, all over this country. We know that is a fallacy. They are not the same, and these boards in doing their duty to the utmost will necessarily find in some of our communities class 1 will be small and class 2 larger and class 3 still larger. You can not take our entire country and so standardize our conditions as to make the classes the same in all of them. Our whole draft law was based on the idea of furnishing to the service of the United States the men most available. These men have been classified by our local boards, and is it not the fairest thing to take from that classification No. 1 the men who have been placed there before we touch any other class? "Oh," but it is said, "they have the power to take men from any class." I have heard that repeated several times. Any member of the committee surely knows the purpose of that language as it was explained to us by Gen. Crowder, namely, this: These local boards, by reason of a man's environment, by reason of the fact that he may be the pivot man in some industry, will put him in a deferred class, but the time will come perhaps when that man will not be needed in that community for that particular purpose, when he is more necessary to the Government by reason of the fact which gave him his deference into that class, and, consequently, if the Government needs so many expert carpenters, so many expert electricians or mechanicians of any kind, they can go into those other classes and take them from those classes only when the President has decided it is for the best interests of the Government rather than the community to take these men out of the other classes. I think some of the members of our committee have forgotten the testimony that was voluntarily given before our committee when a Member from Texas brought in some of his constituents from along the border and they said to us: "Gentlemen, under this present plan of assessing quotas you have absolutely robbed us of all of our American citizens within the draft age. We have in our community so many men who have come across the border who are not subject to this draft that in order to furnish our quota you have absolutely robbed us of our entire citizenship between the ages of 21 and 30."

That made an impression on our committee at that time, and that situation is exactly what this classification plan will correct.

The great stumbling point, as I see it, is the misunderstanding as to giving credit for the volunteers. I want to say this, and I wish I had time to go into it further, that we did get credit in the local communities for the men who went voluntarily into the National Guard organizations, and that was the real purpose of putting that provision into the draft act. Most of the volunteering since that time has not been in the line of the Army, and to-day they are not taking volunteers in the line of the Army for which these communities can get credit. They are taking them for technical purposes, and they are being urged for this or that particular purpose, but not for the line of the Army. There is no great argument in that, because the community is not doing itself justice when it asks that the individuals who want to stay at home be protected by reason of the fact that patriotic young men have been found to volunteer for this technical service in the Army. You are not protecting any community; you are taking from that community and its industrial life more of its strength than you would take under this classification system, and you are only protecting the individuals who would be left at home, who do not want to serve, because the community will have sent the same number of men into some service—not into the line of the Army—and they are getting credit for them, not as a community, but the individuals who stay at home are getting credit for them. It seems to me that would not appeal to anyone. We have had our credit for our volunteer organizations—namely, the National Guard—and why should any community ask this in behalf of the individuals in class 1 who want to stay at home? It results in their asking it for those individual persons who are benefited, and they are the only ones who are benefited at all by this so-called claim for exemption. Indirectly they are getting credit anyhow, because the men within the draft age who go into any arm of the service voluntarily go directly out of class 1. At least 90 per cent go from that class. Therefore class 1 is reduced to that extent, and the district will not be required to send as many men as they would otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr Speaker, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN].

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, considerable feeling has been aroused by the Shallenberger amendment. Supporters of this amendment, of which I am not one, have made statements insinuating that the local draft boards would use their power in an unfair and unjust way. On the floor there have been suggestions, if not absolute accusations, to the effect that if the quota is based on the total number of those eligible to military duty in class 1 that the local boards would discriminate and put some men in class 2 who ought to be in class 1. This is an insinuation and accusation against the fidelity of the local boards. I contend that any indictment of a draft board is equivalent to an indictment of the Government itself. It is an indictment of the selective-draft law, which constitutes the bulwark of our present and future Army. If we can not trust these 4,500 boards to act as fairly and justly as boards humanly can, then our whole system fails. If it is true, if the suggestion is at all valid, if it is possible or remotely probable that these draft boards would fail justly and fairly to consider all the facts with regard to each case, then these draft boards should be shot at sunrise. I can not conceive of anything more damnable than for a draft board, dealing with human lives, to do otherwise than their very best, to deal justly and fairly with every young man coming before them for consideration. Personally I have the greatest confidence in the fidelity of our local boards, and I do not believe that the great mass of them would ever consciously do anything but the fair thing and the right thing. They have given strenuous labor to their task and have sought to do justice in exercising their great powers. These boards have tremendous responsibilities, and involved in these insinuations that the draft boards are going to put men in class 2 in order to escape the draft is an indictment of the whole selective-draft system. The day will come, if it is not already here, when the Nation will recall the selective-draft law as the salvation of the country at a time when we faced our greatest crisis. It was with regret that I listened to other insinuations to the effect that Gen. Crowder had not been open and above board in all his work.

Too great credit can not be given to Gen. Crowder for the splendid manner in which he has accomplished the great task placed upon him by the Government. He has worked early and late, amid many provocations, seeking only to act justly under conditions which could not but bring forth criticism from one source or another. It would not be humanly possible to raise a great army in the short time in which our Army was raised without injustice of one kind or another. But I, for one, believe that the Provost Marshal General based all his actions on fundamental principles involved in the selective-service act and deserves not the condemnation that has been meted out to him by some, but words of praise and commendation for the tremendous task he has achieved.

The Nation has accepted the selective-service law with that splendid spirit that always characterizes our people. If this draft law is wrong, abolish it. I am one who fought consistently for it, and I believe in it now as the only democratic method of raising an army, and I want to see it perfected.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNN. In a moment.

I want to see it perfected, so that the selective character of the draft can be more effectively carried out. This bill without the Shallenberger amendment carries out the purpose of the selective-service law better than in any other way. It would take as a basis for the quota the total number eligible for military service in class 1. And who are those in class 1? The young men who are most able to serve; those who would be most effective in the Army. The great majority of them are unmarried and without dependents. It has been the purpose of the questionnaire to place those who are married and have dependents in class 2. That being the case, it seems to me we are following out the spirit of the selective draft as we have not been able to follow it out heretofore, owing to our lack of experience when we first adopted the law.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McKEOWN. I just want to ask the gentleman if he stood by his statement that, in a certain event, it ought to be abolished. Would not the adoption of this resolution abolish the principle of the selective-draft law?

Mr. LUNN. No; it would not. I am speaking now against this Shallenberger amendment. Insinuations have been made to the effect that we can not trust the local boards. The gentleman would be the first to invoke the severest penalty on any board who would be guilty of giving any man deferred classification who ought to be in class 1.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNN. Yes.

Mr. COX. I would like to get the gentleman's viewpoint on this proposition, if I can make myself plain: What would be the remedy in the event a local board would not put in class 1 the men who ought to be there? Or what would be the remedy in the event a local board put in class 1 the men who ought to be put in classes 2, 3, and 4?

Mr. LUNN. If it can not be covered by regulation, it should be covered by law if they purposely and willfully do that thing.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNN. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is it not a fact, since you raised the question of the draft board's honesty, that certain draft boards have been removed in your State because they were corrupt? [Applause.]

Mr. LUNN. Yes. We should do that. But the fact that one man is guilty of robbery in America is not an indictment of the whole population, and the fact that we have removed a board simply shows the determination of those in charge of the draft to penalize as far as possible those who would do wrong. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think there is any danger along that line?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LUNN. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to the gentleman from New York two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word as to the statement made that we are penalizing patriotism by this bill. We are not penalizing patriotism. The whole Nation has volunteered, and the selective-service law simply calls in his proper turn the young man at the time needed and in the way needed. I do not believe that credit to the community should be given for men who for one reason or other volunteer over the men who are kept until they are called in the draft, and would as gladly go in advance of the draft as they do when called to the colors. The basis of our Nation's life is on the principle of universal service. Not military service, for it is impossible for all to serve in the Army, but we are all universally obligated for service to the Nation. Let me also emphasize as strongly as I can, that men are not volunteering because they love the small city or the larger community or the whole State, but are, to my mind, volunteering and going in advance of the draft because they love America and are able to go in advance of the draft.

That is the object of those who volunteered, and the ones who are to benefit by such volunteering should be the entire Nation. Those who claim that the patriotic men who volunteered are being penalized unless their community is given credit are, in their turn, endeavoring to penalize patriotism by capitalizing it locally. To my mind no one within the draft age should be allowed to volunteer on the basis that all have volunteered and are waiting call when the Nation needs them. The whole Nation should be benefited by those who are above the draft age volunteering their services. I would not allow any man in the draft to volunteer for the reason that I would more and more honor the draft system, for the man following his call in the draft is as patriotic as the man who volunteers. Many a man naturally waits his call in the draft who, if conditions allowed, would gladly volunteer. Therefore the men in the draft should not in the least be considered as deserving of any less honor than the man who volunteers.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUNN. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Suppose the gentleman would find that of two exemption boards in two counties of similar population one of them had put in class 1 25 per cent of its population and the other had put 45 per cent. Would the gentleman think, however honest the boards might have been, that that would be a criterion on which to base the quotas of those two counties?

Mr. LUNN. I would say that would be an apparent wrong, but I think that under any system there may be here and there an injustice.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman is basing his quota upon an apparent wrong.

Mr. LUNN. That would not exist over the entire country in the 4,500 boards. Some inequities would arise inevitably. There would be cases of injustice, but the whole purpose of the selective-draft law is to avoid this as much as possible and gradually take care of every case where an injustice has been done.

America is confronted by the most tremendous task in its history; her very life is threatened; her future imperiled. Therefore we need the protection of the selective-draft law and must not witness its impairment in any case whatever. America must win this war, and America will win this war for the reason that our cause is just.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PRICE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, during last year there were two great events—particularly great—in this country. The first was on the 6th day of April, when this Congress, the Members of this House, nearly 400 of them, sat in this Chamber and voted to serve notice upon the Imperial German Government, "So far shalt thou go, and no farther," and on which occasion we pledged all the resources of this great country to that cause. The other was on the 5th day of June, when 9,600,000 of our young American manhood went to the registering places in their respective States and placed their names upon their country's roll and said, "Here am I; send me."

I say to you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of this House, that that was one of the most inspiring spectacles that the American people have ever been called upon to observe. It was brought about without disorder, in a spirit of patriotism and of loyalty. There were scarcely any violations of the law. And why was that? In this great Nation, with our prejudices for peace and with our inherent love for the volunteer system and our abhorrence of the draft, why was that possible? Simply because the young men of the country felt—and they had a right to feel—that when they registered themselves for service to their country they would be treated fairly. They felt that this great Government would see to it that they had a square deal. In the law that we passed it was specifically stated that the different quotas of the different States and political divisions of this country should be based upon the population of those communities.

Can anything be fairer than that? Is not our whole theory of Government based upon representation according to population? And why should that whole system be now disturbed? Is it not fair to assume that the registered military strength of any community is the proper proportion for that community to furnish to the military service? These young men who felt that this Government had pledged them a square deal have the right to expect of this Congress to see to it that the agreement is kept and that our contract with them is carried out in good faith.

Now, this resolution proposes to disturb the whole theory on which this draft law was based. I can see the argument that the shifting of population or the predominance of aliens in a community may work unfairly, but that will be rectified in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, which gives credit for volunteers and fixes the status of aliens, so that if that is disposed of and the young men of a community go and register, can anything be fairer than that those people should be called in proportion to that registration?

I want to give an illustration. I am not one who charges that local boards in this country are corrupt. I do not believe they are. But I have had occasion to question the judgment of some of them, and I want to show you, gentlemen, on what a flimsy pretext you would disturb this great national policy of distribution of quotas for military service.

I took occasion recently to ascertain from the local boards in my own district the number of registrants in each class, and in the nine counties of my district the variation in the judgment of the local boards is shown in the fact that the proportion of the registrants in class 1 runs from 13 per cent in one county to 41 per cent in another. Do you think that is anything on which to base a national policy? It so happens that in one county which has 13 per cent in the first class, the adjoining county has 41 per cent. They are alike as two peas. They are not like the two counties referred to by my friend from California [Mr. KAHN]. One is not Republican and the other Democratic; they are both Democratic. It so happens that each county has about 1,100 registrants in the four classes, and it also so happens that the two counties are absolutely like one community. I know them. There is practically no difference either in the mode of living or in the industries of those two counties. Yet one of them furnishes 148 people in class 1, while the other furnishes 450. It is merely the judgment of the local boards in those counties and nothing more. Shall we base a great national policy on such judgment as this? I assume this is no exception, and that such conditions exist all over the country, in fact, several instances have been cited during this debate by gentlemen from different sections of the country.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRICE. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman know the number of men who volunteered from these two particular counties?

Mr. PRICE. No; I do not.

Mr. McKENZIE. That might change it, might it not?

Mr. PRICE. I do not think it does. So far as I can see, that has nothing to do with the classification. That had to do with those who went away in the first draft, whether communities were given credit or not.

Mr. McKENZIE. It would change the number remaining in those counties in class 1, would it not?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. If a large number of them had volunteered?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir; I do not think so. That is not my understanding of it.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. PRICE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the differences between the local boards is not so great under the questionnaire system as it was under the system under which the first draft was made?

Mr. PRICE. This was done under the questionnaire system, and I have received this information within the last few days.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Do not these very discriminations exist under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]?

Mr. PRICE. These discriminations still exist, but the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] will prevent the taking away of all of one class all over the country, and will distribute this military service in the place where it ought to be distributed.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman think a man ought to be dragged from his family and put into the service while there are single men who have no ties, and who could go with the least effort to serve the country?

Mr. PRICE. I do not think it is necessary to drag anybody from his family. That does not enter into the question at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PRICE. I prefer not to be interrupted. The question is this: My friend from California [Mr. KAHN] very beautifully described this proposition as a great national question. I believe it is a national question. I believe this Nation is alive to its responsibilities and its duties, but I also believe if you want to nationalize it in the best possible way, the best way to do it is to let each community and State be permitted to furnish only its proportional part. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN].

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see something done on this matter. Last September I appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs and urged the reporting of a bill of a similar kind. Whether we adopt the bill submitted by the committee or the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], either one will be a great improvement over the present law.

I favor the bill reported by the committee, but I should like to see it amended. I hope to see it amended first so that the new provisions will apply whether classes are made or not. In other words, I should like to see the word "population" stricken out of the present law. I should like to see it amended, furthermore, so that credit will be given for voluntary enlistments or inductions. In that particular I want to point out that in lines 9 to 11, on page 2, those men especially ought to be considered in giving credits, and I think under the present bill they probably will not be.

In both the present committee bill and the amendment offered we find these same propositions. These provisions in this bill apply only when classes are made. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] applies only when classes are made. We find also that under each the division into classes is intended. All this talk, therefore, about the injustice done by the various boards under the bill proposed by the committee is begging the question. No matter whether we have the present law or the Shallenberger amendment or the law proposed by the committee, we still have classes and we still have classification boards; we still have the liability to error of men's judgment, or even unfairness on their part, and the possibility of a lack of uniformity in arranging the classes. So that when you argue that proposition you are begging the question.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I will if I can get more time. I will say that it might be a little more accentuated under the committee bill, but the question still remains. Now, here is the fundamental principle underlying the difference between these two. Under the committee bill you can not go into one class until you have exhausted the class before it, unless you go into that same class proportionately all over the country. Or, to put it another way, every time you go into one class, no matter what class it is, the same process applies all over the United States, and the same percentage is applied to that class. Under the Shallenberger amendment it is possible and probable, and it undoubtedly will happen in many cases that in some parts of the country while you are still drawing men to fight in the trenches from class 1 in other parts of the country you will be taking men from class 2 to do the same thing. Now, if that is so, will somebody tell me why you should make any classes at all?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I have not the time, unless I can get my time extended.

Mr. MONDELL. I thought the gentleman wanted an answer to his question.

Mr. PHELAN. I do, but the gentleman takes too long to answer questions. Let me give a few figures. These may not be the actual figures in a particular case but they will show the point: Suppose in one community we have 5,000 men in the first class, 2,000 men in the second class, 2,000 in the third class, 1,000 in the fourth class, making 10,000 altogether. Suppose in another community we have 2,000 in class 1, 2,000 in class 2, 2,000 in class 3, 4,000 in class 4, making 10,000 just the same. The call goes out to take 25 per cent. Under the Shallenberger amendment you take the whole 10,000 in the first community and take 25 per cent of that. There you get 2,500 men from that community—community No. 1—and you take 2,500 men out of class 1, and it leaves 2,500 men still in class 1. In the other community you again take 25 per cent of the total 10,000. That amounts to 2,500. You take 2,000 out of class 1, and then go into class 2 and get 500 additional to get the total of 2,500. In other words, while you are taking men from class 1 in one part of the country you may be taking men from class 2 in another part of the country. I feel that it would arouse a great deal of discontent if a condition like this were permitted. Our people will gladly make any sacrifice, but they do insist, and have a right to insist, that burdens shall be distributed equitably. The Shallenberger amendment will not distribute them equitably. With the changes I have suggested I shall support the committee bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the proposition, it is primarily to change the method upon which the draft law of 1917 was built. That law provided that the draft should be based on population, and the Census Bureau worked out a scheme of population which, it is claimed, is inequitable and unfair.

This bill that is now proposed by the committee, which I favor, proposes to place this whole matter on the basis of the persons that are registered and liable for military service. That is the only equitable way in which to build an army in this present crisis.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBBINS. No; I have not the time.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, on the 5th day of April, 1917, the Congress of the United States declared—that a state of war between the United States and the Imperial German Government had been thrust upon the United States is formally declared, and pledge the entire resources of our country to carry forward this war to a successful termination.

In order to successfully carry out this declaration it was necessary to raise men and money, and the selective-draft law was enacted and approved by the President on May 18, 1917.

This law established a new method of raising an army in the United States and provided that the quotas for the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and subdivisions thereof, should be determined in proportion to the population thereof, and credit should be given to any State or Territory or subdivision thereof for the number of men who were in the military service of the United States or members of the National Guard on April 1, or who had since entered the military service, either as members of the Regular Army or National Guard, and all male persons between 21 and 30, both inclusive, should register in accordance with the regulations to be prescribed by the President.

Pursuant to this the President issued a proclamation fixing June 5, 1917, as the date upon which all those subject to this selective-draft law should register, and in accordance therewith, on said date, 9,586,508 men registered as subject to military service. It was decided to select from this number 687,000 men by the first draft, and a system of selection was devised whereby the names were placed in black capsules and drawn from a glass bowl by blindfolded men specially selected from among the students of the various universities. The first drawing took place on Friday, July 20, 1917, in the Senate Office Building, the first number being selected by the Secretary of War himself, in the presence of a vast concourse of people, in the Senate caucus room, the event being epoch-making.

In order to carry this law into effect it was necessary to organize 4,557 local draft boards, each composed of 4 persons, which with their clerical force and assistants voluntarily rendered, made an aggregate of 100,000 men engaged in this service, who, between July 30 and August 25, heard and disposed of about 1,000,000 cases, averaging 70 cases per day per board. This service was rendered voluntarily in most instances, so that the cost per man selected averaged from 54 cents cost per registrant to $7.59 per man drawn, or an aggregate of $5,211,965.38, to the General Government.

This preliminary statement is given to explain the cause of the necessity for now amending this law, because it was found that this draft bore inequitably upon the various districts from which the men were drawn and that much dissatisfaction arose from the literal enforcement of the law.

In order, therefore, to ascertain the true facts and circumstances that surrounded each registrant, and in order to enable the various boards to properly consider claims for exemption, because there had been taken and filed with the President 22,250 appeals from the decisions of the local boards under the rules promulgated by the Provost Marshal General's office, an order was issued October last to each registrant to file a statement, called "questionnaires," disclosing the facts with reference to his employment and history, so that the question of exemption and classification could be worked out equitably, promptly, and justly.

These "questionnaires" resulted in the division of all registrants into five classes; the first class was to include those who, under the selective draft registered throughout the entire country, could best be spared for military service. The second, third, and fourth classes embraced those less available in the order names, and class 5 contained those who were not subject to military service in any event, namely, those physically and morally unfit aliens, those already in the military service, conscientious objectors, and some others.

With the completion of the first draft and the filing of these questionnaires, the exact amount of men in each district available for military service was fully disclosed and the inequalities under the existing law were made apparent.

May I call the attention of this House, Mr. Speaker, to my own district.

In the county of Westmoreland, Pa., which is the largest of the two counties in the district which I have the honor to represent, this condition was disclosed:

Number of registrants		26,940
Number of aliens not subject to military service	9,570
Number of alien enemies	96
Total aliens		9,666
Registrants subject to military service		17,274
In Butler County, Pa., total registrants		7,036
In Butler County, Pa., total aliens		1,109
Total from which quota must come		5,927

Under the selective-draft law, therefore, the quota which Westmoreland County must furnish was based on 26,940, but after deducting those who had already claimed exemption and were released the number of men that were available was but 17,274, from which the entire quota must be furnished, because the law required the quota to be furnished "in proportion to the population thereof," while the quota to fill the draft must come from the lesser number, to wit, those remaining after deducting aliens. In Butler County, the other county in my district, the same inequality appears by the above figures.

This was manifestly unfair. With this mere statement this situation cries loudly for correction.

Therefore the joint resolution now being considered is proposed. This resolution provides, omitting unnecessary verbiage, as follows:

> That if under any regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress * * * are placed in classes for the purpose of determining their relative liability for military service, no provision of said act shall prevent the President from calling for immediate military service under regulations heretofore or hereafter prescribed by the President all or part of the persons in any class or classes * * * in proportion to the total number of persons placed in such class or classes in the various subdivisions of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia designated by the President under the terms of said act, or from calling into immediate military service persons classed as skilled experts in industry or agriculture, however, classified or wherever residing.

This, therefore, means that when in my district, because of the large number of aliens, class 1 is exhausted no further calls shall be made therein until class 1 in the other districts of the country have been exhausted.

The selective-draft law was passed in order to organize the Nation to carry on this war. The classification found on the questionnaires is made up by sorting out all men within the draft age, so that those who can be most readily spared to enter the military service shall be first taken, and those who are required to remain at home to carry on the business of the country, produce food, manufacture arms and equipment for the soldiers, build ships, and support dependents shall not be taken until dire necessity compels the Government to withdraw them from industrial pursuits.

The effect of the enforcement of the act of the 18th of May, 1917, is to strip all districts where there is a large foreign population of all the native-born Americans and leave the foreigners to take their good jobs, grow rich on the profits arising from war activities, while the Americans must bear the brunt and hardship and suffering and death caused by this terrible war. This is unjust. This condition can not be imposed upon the inhabitants of the districts where industrial activities have attracted large foreign population. This war can not be fought without the munitions and fuel, equipment, and industrial output of the large populous centers, along the Atlantic seacoast, and in the mineralized sections of the United States. The iron mills of Pittsburgh are located there because of the presence of fuel and ore and natural environment.

The shipbuilding of the Delaware was located there because natural conditions make it the most available spot. Coke and bituminous coal are produced in my district, because the minerals exist there in a state of nature, and in their development a large foreign population has been attracted by the advantageous conditions of employment, and yet to say that because the population is enhanced, by a number of residents of foreign birth and who are not subject to military service, and that the native Americans must furnish all the men for the Army, is to assert that an inequality and unjust burden must be borne by these people. Such position is untenable, unfair, and should not be seriously advocated by anyone.

It has been asserted on this floor that this war can only be won by the men in the trenches with a gun in his hand and a bayonet pointed toward the foe. Far be it from me that I should detract anything from the man who risks his life, he is undoubtedly the greatest factor in winning this war. He is the one who is making the supreme sacrifice; he is the man who is entitled to our undying gratitude, and over him and his deeds the enconium of his countrymen should ever be pronounced. But we must not forget that this man must have ammunition for his gun, must have the protection of artillery and airplanes, and must have behind him a mighty fleet to carry him food, clothing, medicines, and munitions.

The Russian infantry made poor showing when their munitions ran out, and they fought the Germans with shovels, crowbars, and guns without bayonets. The collapse of their army was largely due to the failure of the people to support it, equip it, sustain it, and this Congress and this Nation would blush with shame and disgrace if the day ever comes when the American troops will be driven from their trenches because of lack of munition, lack of artillery, lack of airplanes, lack of food.

It has been stated that it requires five men working at home to support, equip, and maintain one man in the trenches.

Just now, with the greatest battle in this horrible, terrible war raging in Europe, and the American troops are just entering this great battle, it does not become us here in the American Congress to long debate any measure that looks for the better equipment of our Army. What we want to do is to strengthen the American Military Establishment, not weaken it nor embarrass it by criticism. Let us lift the draft age to 40 years, so opportunity may be given to other men who are ambitious to serve. But let us not be unfair to the districts throughout the country, where, by reason of the large alien population, the enforcement of present law has stripped it of the American citizens and left the foreigners at home who claim and receive exemption from military service to grow rich on war profits.

The principle of the selective-draft law demands that all those in class 1 throughout the whole country be first taken. This is a national war. The army we are raising is a national army, and the Member of Congress who seeks to protect those in class 1 in his own district while seeking to force those in classes 2 and 3 in his neighbor's district or any adjoining State into military service is taking a very narrow view of our selective-draft law and of our part in this great war. He has by strict construction defeated the whole theory of the selective-draft law. "The word of the law killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

The selective-draft law is intended to accomplish two principal things:

The first is to make a scientific and most complete inventory of our man power, with a searching inquiry into the qualifications and the industrial and domestic circumstances of each man registered. With this at hand, the second is to make a scientific classification of their relative availability for military service and for all the war-time activities of the Nation.

This has been accomplished, and if we but permit the law to be administered in the spirit in which we enacted it, the result will be the complete mobilization of the Nation for the war. This purpose is thus announced by the Provost Marshal General in his annual report, in which he says:

> It can be announced now as the policy and belief of this office that in all probability it will be possible to fill our military needs without ever invading any class more deferred than class 1, and this is the promise, the standard, and the goal, here for the first time announced, toward which every administrative effort of this office shall be directed.

It is, therefore, more than ever incumbent upon this Congress to sustain the War Department in this great war. We shall undoubtedly be compelled to raise the draft age to probably 40 years or possibly 45. This will more than treble, in all probability, the number of men available for class 1. In fact, the large army that volunteered to go with Col. Roosevelt, who were all above the draft age, voiced the desire of men over 30 who wished to enter the military service in defense of our country.

But this increase in the number of selective draftees in class 1 will only make more imperative the adoption of the amendment here pending changing the basis of selectives from "population" to "registrants" in class 1.

Gentlemen of the House, the reports that come to us from the battle field of Picardy indicate the eagerness with which the Americans are entering the first baptismal fire in the great battle for freedom.

The meager information that passes the censor's pencil tells us that the German assaults against the American columns have been uniformly and without exception broken, driven back, and defeated. Even in the face of superior numbers, American troops have won signal honor. Veterans of the French and English Armies, both officers and men, stand in their presence acclaiming them men of great bravery and soldiers of the greatest skill and valor.

Those high in authority in Europe have given to our soldiers unstinted praise and honor and speak of them only in terms of highest admiration.

Let us therefore stand behind our American soldiers and support them with unfaltering loyalty, believing, as we all do, that by the bravery of the American troops the battle of freedom will be won on the battle field of Europe.

We have organized in the United States for the purpose of fighting this war not only by man power but industrially and in every other way. When they first drew the men under the law they drew 687,000 men. They started out in a blind scheme of drawing them by lot. But it was soon discovered that that would not work out equitably, so in October last they devised a scheme known as the "questionnaire," by which they ascertained from every man available of military age in the 9,500,000 that had registered on the 5th of June all the conditions that surround him. And then they have started out to build a National Army, but we are confronted with this serious defect in the draft law. It has been established by its operations that in some communities when the draft calls for the number of men to be furnished under the quota on the basis of population, that it has stripped the communities of native Americans, because of the large foreign population that reside therein. Of course, we are all here to legislate for the country as a whole, we are fighting the war as a national war, but each one of us must apply the laws we are considering to the facts that arise in our own districts, because we are familiar with the situation there.

Applying this selective-draft law to the twenty-second district of Pennsylvania, which I represent, I want to call your attention to how inequitable, unjust, and burdensome this draft law has worked out. In the county of Westmoreland, the largest of the two counties I represent, may I in conclusion recapitulate, there was a registration on the 5th of June of 26,940 men. But it was discovered under that registration that there are embraced 9,666 men who were aliens, and who were not compelled to render military service under the draft law to the Government of the United States. So that left 17,274 men to answer a quota based on a population, or based on a registration of 26,940 men. There are eight registration districts in that county, and the practical application of this law has been that it has actually entirely stripped class 1 in some of these districts. As we have learned in the course of this debate, class 1 embraces the men who have no ties to retain them at home, either socially or industrially.

Take Butler County, the other county of my district, and we have a condition just as accentuated and emphatically calling for relief. There were 7,036 registered, 1,139 aliens not compelled to render military service, leaving 5,937 from which we must furnish a quota based on 7,036. Now, gentlemen, this amendment proposes to remedy that inequality, that unjust burden placed on certain communities. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for this bill whether the Shallenberger amendment prevails or not, though I think it ought to be adopted. I have never refused my vote to any war measure simply because it did not accord with my individual views, and I shall not now.

There has been much misrepresentation of the issue now involved. It is not a question of whether the Government shall be furnished the men which it needs. We decided that long ago, and the men will be furnished. It is simply a question of how the draft act shall be changed to make it more equitable. Everyone agrees that it should be changed, and that is the sole purpose of the bill before the House. I voted for the original conscription bill and urged its passage on this floor. The bill contains certain inequities in it which afterwards developed in its application, some of which have been mentioned by the gentleman preceding me [Mr. ROBBINS]. The majority of the committee say that they have brought in a bill to correct the unfair apportionment of the draft made in the original bill, but when shown that their own bill unfairly apportions the men drawn among the different counties, they take the position that no district ought to complain.

Mr. Speaker, at the time of the passage of the original bill for the selective draft, some Members thought it would not be accepted by the country; but I believed then, and believe now, in the patriotism of the masses of the people. They are ready to do anything that is necessary to bring the war to a successful conclusion, but they want the burdens of the war distributed as equally as can reasonably be done. The original bill undertook to do this, but we have found that in some parts of the country where there are large numbers of aliens who were not subject to the draft it was not fair to apportion it in accordance with the total population. Hence, I favor that portion of the bill before the House which seeks to correct this injustice, but I do not favor permitting another injustice in order to remedy the faults of the original bill. The astonishing statement is now made and has several times been repeated on this floor, that it makes no difference if one community is required to furnish more men than its share, and that we ought not to concern ourselves about a matter of that kind.

Mr. Speaker, if any Members should rise in this House and advocate that in the apportionment of taxes required to carry on the war it made no difference whether one man or any one community or State paid more than its share, we would be somewhat inclined to question his sanity. Such a proposition would be considered too preposterous for consideration. To my mind it is, if anything, more unreasonable that where the lives of our citizens are concerned that we should not consider whether the counties and States are going to do more or less than their share. Great hardships are unavoidably inflicted in many instances by the draft; but can we justify ourselves in bringing them about when by an unfair apportionment some person who has not the slightest excuse is relieved from going at all? In fact, Mr. Speaker, I do not complain so much about the burden which will be added in my own community or the district or the State which I have the honor to represent. My town, my district, and my State is always ready to do all and more than its duty. It has led in enlistments and has not only furnished its share of men, but more than its quota, and has always oversubscribed for liberty bonds. Naturally I resent the imputation of want of patriotism which has been thrown out by some of the speakers who have preceded me with reference to those who favor the Shallenberger amendment, which nobody has denied or can deny presents a perfectly fair and just apportionment, namely, to base the draft upon the number of men eligible to military service; and I notice that some of those who have been so insistent that this bill should not be changed in word or letter represent States or communities which would be largely exempted from the draft by virtue of its provisions. I have not time to give figures in this respect, but they have or will be given before the debate is concluded and will show that some of the States have only placed about 20 per cent in the first class, while others have gone as high as 35 and 40 per cent. Yet it is proposed by this bill to make the numbers taken depend upon this classification and thus permit those communities with the lower per cent to shirk their duty. The citizens of my State are quite willing to perform their own duty, but they are unwilling that others should be permitted to evade it. The bill as it stands encourages the slacker who is trying upon one excuse and another to escape the draft.

Mr. Speaker, at the opening of this war we had several companies of the Guard in my district which young men joined. Many could not wait even for that to go, but enlisted with the Regulars which went with Pershing. The Guard regiment which they joined followed closely after the Regulars and all are now fighting on the battle front. There they have gloriously maintained the traditions of this Nation and some 10 or 12 have already been decorated by the French Government for gallantry, among them Lieut. Col. Tinley from my own city. Numbers of them have already sealed with their blood the covenant they made to protect this country and the glory and honor of its flag; and now gentlemen stand here and say that no credit ought to be given for their enlistment; that it should not be taken into account in making up the quota for their county, their district, or their State. They urge, in fact, that communities which have made up their classifications in such a way as only to put 20 per cent into class 1, should be permitted to escape their duty, but others who have a classification with as high as 40 per cent in class 1 shall furnish men accordingly. It needs no argument to show the injustice of requiring one community to send 40 per cent of its men who are subject to military service and requiring only 20 per cent from another, the two communities being, perhaps, side by side.

Mr. Speaker, the Shallenberger amendment not only avoids the inequalities which were created by the original bill, but avoids those which are created by the bill now before the House. It bases the apportionment on the number of men subject to military duty and gives credit for enlistments either in the Regulars or Guard. It is as fair and just an apportionment as it is possible for us to make. We can not entirely avoid inequalities, some will always exist, but it is our duty to avoid them as far as we can and not interfere with our military success. I have always been for the highest efficiency and would sacrifice any man or community to efficiency and the success of our arms. Efficiency ought to be the motto of our military preparations, but you will not gain in efficiency by the bill as it stands over the provisions of the Shallenberger amendment.

The bill as it stands will not add one man to the force over what would be provided by the amendment. The same number of men will go; there will be the same number at the front. If the bill stands in its present form, the gallant men who have been first in the fight, first to lead the charge, first in honors, will be told that their communities will receive no benefit from their action in the apportionment of future drafts.

I make no attack upon the local officials. They had a difficult task to perform without any definite directions from Washington. Naturally, the different boards took different views with reference to the claims for deferred classification. There were in some States a few unworthy officials who abused the trust which was imposed in them; but, whether it was done by mistake, ignorance, or willfulness, we ought not to let these variations in the classifications control, but should equalize them so far as possible.

I do not care so much about that part of the amendment which fixes the basis of the draft. There may be something in the contention of gentlemen that inequalities in the basis proposed by the bill will, to some extent, be rectified by the boards which pass on each case, but I insist that in fairness and justice credit should be given for those who enlisted, and that States whose citizens held back until they were summoned should not profit thereby. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this question resolves itself into a question of whether we are going to try to adopt a theory or take advantage of experience and adopt that kind of a measure that experience has taught us is the thing that we ought to have. We have had a draft law in operation under which about three-quarters of a million men have been drawn into our Army. The men who have had the administration of this law have had more experience in detail than all of the Members of this House combined, and the men attached to the Provost Marshal General's office are unanimous in the indorsement of the suggestion as set out in this resolution. Before the Provost Marshal General suggested it to the Secretary of War, and before it got the indorsement of the President of the United States, a poll was taken of all of the local boards in the United States, and this is the result of the concensus of opinion of the men who have actually had to do with the operation of this draft. It seems strange to me that the membership of this House, which is thoroughly American, and in which there is not a single man who is not prepared to do everything he can to promote this war, will vote millions of money practically without discussion, pass bills relative to the future of our country, pass any kind of law controlling our industries, and the men who work in them simply on the belief that it will help our boys win, but when it comes to the question of who shall take a gun and go away and fight for the country we find a great number of the Members of this House standing up and saying that the boys in his locality shall not go before those in some one else's State go.

This is an American fight, and every man must do his share, whether somebody else goes or not. The question is, How are you to do it—in a practical way or are you going to do it in a theoretical way? I believe we ought to take advantage of the experience of the men who have been administering this law and iron out the kinks that have been in their way. They tell us that by the passage of this resolution they will be able to more evenly and justly administer the law that we have placed in their hands. Understand, this war is not going to be over in a day or two, nor in a week or two, nor in a month or two, nor in a year or two. We have in our Army 1,640,000 men today fully armed, ready to go away. We have in our Navy over 300,000; practically 2,000,000 men bearing arms for our country. That is only a drop in the bucket that we are to pour out for democracy's salvation. This war is going to last, it is going to take billions of money and millions of men, and the point is, Are we going to stick to theory or learn from experience? If we are to close our eyes, then we must be prepared for the war to last longer than the time that I have suggested. I say to you in all sincerity of purpose, I believe that by the change of law, as here suggested, it will work with greater equality and with greater justice to the South than the present law does, and it will work with greater equality and greater justice to the North than the present law does. I therefore am heartily in favor of the resolution without amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the House and the country are to be congratulated in that both the majority plan and the minority plan which come from the Committee on Military Affairs will enable us to eliminate from our calculation the alien element which was under the original law included in determining quotas and which hence was responsible for so much inequality during the last year. My inquiry mentally has been which of the two plans was the better. I think the plan proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] has one advantage in that it rests upon mathematics and not upon human discretion, with the inevitable possibility of error and frailty. On the other hand, I think that the committee proposal has the advantage, which has been brought out several times and very clearly a few moments ago by my colleague [Mr. PHELAN], that it insures that all the most available men are taken before the class containing less available men is invaded at all. That, to my mind, is the controlling consideration and the one which has determined me——

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I can not yield—to support the contention of the majority of the committee. I wish those who are following me would turn to page 5385 of the RECORD, which appeared this morning, where I printed a table which was furnished some Members of the House by the Provost Marshal General. This shows the number of men by States who have been classified into all classes, the number of men classified into class 1, and, finally, the percentage of men in class 1 as compared with those in all classes.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I am sorry, but I have not the time. I desire to make my point, and must proceed. Gentlemen have suggested that there would be a very wide disparity, a very wide probability of error among the several States, because of the different views which members of the local boards would take of the type of men who should be put in class 1. That may be true as between individual districts, but I think the table very clearly establishes that it is not true as between States. The general average for the United States, as the figures show, of men in class 1 as compared with men in all classes is 27.71 per cent. I have made an analysis of the percentages which go to make up that 27 or 28 per cent. I find that 7 States have exactly the correct percentage; that 15 States have within 1 per cent of the percentage shown as normal for the United States; that 26 States are within 2 per cent of the United States mean; that 34 are within 3 per cent; 38 within 4 per cent; and 41 within 5 per cent of the mean of the United States. That indicates that there are only seven States in the Union which are more than 5 per cent away from the normal for the entire United States. Of those seven, three are below the normal and four are above. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] said in the course of his remarks yesterday that the reason for the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], as he sees it, is that the States in the East made in a deferred class a larger proportion for industrial reasons than the States in other parts of the country. Here is his exact language:

> The East took the Army contracts, and they filled their munition factories with their young men, and they want to pass this law in order to exempt them. That is the real truth of the matter.

The facts as developed by this table show the contrary—that the three States which are more than 5 per cent below the mean of the United States are Arizona, Utah, and California, which would, I think, not be regarded as industrial States, and would certainly not be regarded as Eastern States. The States which are above 5 per cent in excess of the mean are Florida, Louisiana, South Dakota, and Wyoming, with a total registration of less than 3 per cent of the registration of the entire United States. Now, of course, we can not——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield two minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. I thank the gentleman. Of course, we can not assert with confidence that there will be no trace of disparity between the several States of the Union; but when we find that 41 out of the 48 States, large and small, East and West, are within five per cent of the normal, it indicates that there was a remarkably close approximation throughout the United States of identical action by the draft boards. When we develop the further facts that those appreciably below the average are all agricultural and Western or Southern States, and that those far above the average are also, in general, agricultural States, it would seem perfectly clear that the distinctions which have been made are neither fundamental or sufficient to justify the charge that in different States there was any appreciable unfairness on the part of the several draft boards. All States are, of course, not exactly alike. There is an infinite difference of conditions and situations among them. As the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] said in reply to a question from me yesterday, there is machinery for correcting errors. If the draft board in an individual case has been dishonest or has been erroneous, there is a provision in the law for correcting it. I agree, if this proposal of the committee is adopted, that these decisions of the draft boards should be very carefully scrutinized to eliminate any improprieties which may creep in.

I rose to make clear what a remarkable degree of uniformity has been attained by the thousands of draft boards, acting independently, in classifying into class 1. The figures I have cited indicate remarkable efficiency in applying the regulations of the Provost Marshal General, and I think answer the contention that the discretion left to the draft boards will be abused by them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, whether the bill is amended or not, the number of men to be taken for military duty remains the same. The only difference between the two plans is in the order in which men will be taken for service.

There is disagreement as to which is the better plan, as there have been varying opinions on many other policies; but there is no conflict of opinion—we are all of one mind—on one subject: That as a Nation we have one, and only one, business now—to win the war.

Citizens all over the country have disagreed upon war questions; some have criticized because the United States became a party to the war; some have held to one opinion on governmental policies and some to another opinion; but now everyone who loves life and liberty and home realizes that each one must do his part to preserve those things.

This is the most serious hour that the Nation ever faced. The very existence of the Nation is at stake. The time for earnest, active effort is here.

It is useless to waste time bewailing the fact that we are at war. Expressions of regret will not win battles. Surely all of us would prefer peace to war, but we must face conditions. As a great man once said:

There is no use arguing with the inevitable; the only argument with the east wind is to put on your overcoat.

So we must meet the inevitable. The war is a solemn, living fact. No matter what opinion a man may hold as to the rightfulness of our entry into the war, certainly each one believes now that he owes it to himself, his family, and his country to do everything in his power to bring the war to a successful conclusion.

There can be, there is, no difference of opinion among Americans about the safety of America. There have been, and perhaps will continue to be, differences about what is best, in many instances, to do; but on the one great question of protecting ourselves we are all agreed.

That our Nation shall not be destroyed; that our institutions shall not be overthrown; that what we reverence and revere shall not be trampled upon and desecrated; that violent and unclean hands shall not be laid upon our mothers and sisters and daughters, is a determination fixed in the heart and mind of every citizen of the United States.

We have been made to shudder with horror and revolt at the German Army killing, burning, ravaging, respecting nothing, defiling all that it touched; at the German soldier becoming less the semblance of a man than the personification of a wild animal—ferocious, murderous, thirsting for blood, grinning for delight at his victims' helplessness.

Mr. Speaker, that an army of this kind should conquer us and visit upon our own people such horrible and barbarous treatment is unthinkable; and I feel sure that the people of the Nation will see to it that it does not come. Those that do not fight in the Army will give of time and money and effort that will aid those on the battle line.

But, back to the amendment. I said that it will affect somewhat the order in which men will be called for service. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] opposes it. It happens that his State has a smaller percentage in class 1 than any other State in the Union. I merely call attention to that. Of course, I know that the gentleman was not influenced in the slightest by that fact.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say candidly to the gentleman that I never saw that table until about two days ago, and therefore it did not in any way actuate me. About two days ago I saw that table for the first time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I had already said to my friend that I felt sure that it did not influence him. But I called attention to that in order to say that it is not right for any discrimination to be shown between the States.

Every State, every community, every citizen is equally interested in this matter; and I trust that no one will fail to do his whole duty in this trying time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, if we were considering this matter from the standpoint that each State should be called upon to send only its proportionate number to the trenches, I would be in favor of this amendment. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the question that ought to impel us in legislation of this character. It is now nearly a year ago since I said upon this floor that in all war legislation there should be but one motive, and that motive was to so legislate as to win this war in the shortest possible time. [Applause.] And having that motive in mind I must support the recommendation of the majority of the committee, so far as quota is concerned.

It is not primarily a question of who shall go to the trenches. It is primarily a question of using the men and the resources of this Government to the very best possible advantage in winning this war. [Applause.]

Now, the statement has been made that the man who works in the shipyards, the man who is working in industrial enterprises necessary to carry on the war, is not engaged in an equal service with the man who is in the trenches. He is not, so far as any credit to him is concerned; but he is, so far as the winning of this war is concerned.

And what is the position of those who now offer this amendment? We take a district where a majority of those registered may be in a deferred classification because they are engaged in shipbuilding, without which we can not win the war. If this amendment be adopted, in that district we will have, after class 1 is exhausted in that district, to take the men from the building of ships and put them in the trenches. That is not the theory of the selective draft. The very theory of the selective draft is to take those men who can best be spared and utilize the others in the best possible way at home for the winning of the war.

And then there is another thing that we ought to remember. This is not a war of a combination of States. This is a war of a Nation, and it is going to require all of the resources and all of the men to win this war. A year ago we did not realize that as we do to-day. If it were a question of furnishing some men and some resources, then the amendment would be very proper. But we should realize to-day that the very future of this Republic is imperiled this very hour. And when that is true we have no right to make as a primary consideration the balancing and the leveling of the different States of the Union. We ought to consider only the utilizing of all our resources, all of our men, to win this great war in which we are now engaged. And looking at it from that standpoint, I can do nothing other than support the majority of the committee upon that proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], and if that amendment is divided I shall support both divisions of the amendment.

I shall do it because I believe his amendment is in harmony with the spirit and the intent of the selective-draft law, for which I voted when it was passed.

I vote for this amendment because it is just and right, and because I further believe that the method of calling men into the service proposed in the Senate resolution reported by the committee is susceptible of grave errors and abuses. Already it has been brought to light during this debate and in information furnished by the public press of the country that some local and district boards have placed a much larger proportion of registrants in class 1 than have some other local boards and district boards.

Gentlemen of the House, I do not believe that we can justify the provisions of this bill as it now stands except upon one basis, and that is to assume that the local boards and the district boards have observed uniformity in the classification of registrants, and that throughout the several States of the Union men who are within the draft age have been dealt with in substantially the same manner.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I am sorry that I can not, on account of the brief time that I have. To my way of thinking, it is too violent an assumption for us to indulge to say that there has been that uniformity which ought to exist in so important a matter as this, if we are to follow the method proposed in the pending bill for calling these men into service. Now, what does the Senate joint resolution now under consideration provide? It provides that when the War Department, under the provisions of the selective draft law, calls out a particular class of registrants it shall call them, not in proportion to the men registered who are liable for military duty, but in proportion to the total number of persons placed in such class or classes in the various subdivisions of the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia. This method would entirely change that which was provided in the original draft law and would make it entirely possible for one State to be called upon to bear much more than its share of the military burdens of the Nation. Now, what does the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska propose to do? It says that when a State's quota is called for it shall furnish its men in proportion, not to the population nor in proportion to the number of men in any particular class, but in proportion to the total number of persons registered and liable for military service therein, including resident aliens who have waived all claims for exemption.

Is that just? Is that fair? I think so. I do not see how any possible objection can be found to it. We are all anxious and determined to provide the necessary machinery needed in raising the great army to prosecute to a successful conclusion the war in which we are now engaged. The question is: What shall be the method used in calling out the men? Gentlemen, if it were true that the man who is at work in the munition factory, that the man who is at work in the shipyard, that the man who is at work on the farm at higher wages than he ever received before in his life was rendering as great a service to his country as the man who bares his breast to the whirling bullets and the onrushing bayonets, then you might justify this bill. But I do not subscribe to that kind of talk. The very most that you and I do—that the man on the farm, in the shipyard, in the munition factory does—will be very small in comparison to what our brave soldiers are doing at the battle front in this great fight for liberty and justice, virtue and truth, and the democracy of the world. Oh, to be sure these noncombatant branches of the service are essential, and I do not decry or minimize their importance, but the real sacrifice, the one that tries men's souls, is that which sends them to the dreadful, bloody orgy of battle to fight for our country and the honor of its stainless flag. By the side of that kind of service all other sinks to negligible notice.

Some gentlemen have said during this debate that this is a war of the Nation, and there is nothing sectional in it. Notably the gentleman from California, Mr. KAHN, endeavored to make much out of that line of argument, as if anybody here was disputing it. Of course it is a war of the Nation, and the Nation has never been so united in all of its history than it is to-day. Shoulder to shoulder and man to man, the sovereign States of the American Union have rallied behind our Commander in Chief, President Wilson, to carry on this war until a sane and just peace can be secured and men can return to their civil occupations unmolested by the haunting fear of militarism and its hideous instrumentalities—the fire and the sword.

Yes, gentlemen, we agree with you that this is the war of the whole Nation, and all that we ask—the only purpose we have in mind who support this amendment—is that the blood and the sacrifice which must be laid on the altar of service to win the conflict shall be shared equally by the several States. Perhaps it will be so, even if the resolution is enacted in its present form, but in my opinion it would be more certain of accomplishment if the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska were adopted. That, gentlemen, is the reason why I shall support the amendment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have been laboring under some confusion, which I have sought to eliminate by consultation with various members of the Committee on Military Affairs, about the effect of the latter portion of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], providing for credits to be given for those who entered the service since April 1, 1917. Under the original selective-draft act it was provided that credit should be given for all those who were in the National Guard on April 1, and for those who might enter the service thereafter, either in the National Guard or in the Regular Army. Under the operation of the first selective draft credit has already been given to those. In the raising of the Army already in the cantonments credit has been given for all those who were in the National Guard on April 1, 1917, and all those who volunteered thereafter, either in the Regular Army or the National Guard, up until the time the first draft was completed. Now, it is perfectly apparent to me that credit ought not to be given twice for these same men. I have no serious objection to giving credit for men who have volunteered or who have enlisted or who have entered the service in any way since the first draft was completed; but under the language of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] credit is given for all those who have entered the service since the 1st day of April, 1917, and, according to my interpretation of the act, it is bound to result in a duplication of credit given to the various States and districts for men who have entered the service since then.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The language I used is the exact language of the present act. Does the gentleman mean to say that if we do not repeal this act they would keep on giving credit for those who volunteered for whom credit was given in the last quota?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I submitted this language to the Provost Marshal General himself, Gen. Crowder, and he said it was perfectly practicable under the language just as I have got it.

Mr. BARKLEY. But this is not an amendment to the original act. This is a new bill to provide for future drafts.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is the exact language of the present law in the respect to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BARKLEY. The fact that it is the exact language of the present law does not prevent a duplication of credit for those who volunteered up to the 1st of April, and under the effect of the language, I think, that credit would have to be given for every man who had entered the service, whether he was a volunteer or whether he was drafted; and if this amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska is adopted it ought to be amended so as to provide that credit shall not be given in the future for men for whom credit has already been given in the first draft under the selective-draft law. I have consulted members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and they attempt to explain this on the ground that the War Department is working out a system of bookkeeping by which they will preserve a record of all volunteers who have entered the service since April 1, and that in providing for the second draft under this amended bill they will give a sort of gross credit, I believe they call it. They take into consideration all the men registered and deduct from that the men who have been enlisted in the Army or who have been drafted in the Army, and thereby bring about a net result by which they arrive at the number they want to bring into the Army under the second draft, but it strikes me that there ought not to be any confusion at all about it, and I am afraid that whereas that may be the practice of the War Department now, it is purely voluntary on their part, and they may change it at any time, so as to go back and make it possible for some county which had volunteers enough in the beginning to equal its quota to receive credit for that number of volunteers in every subsequent draft, which might result in preventing that county from ever adding any more men to the Army, since its original volunteer list was as large as the original quota, or as the quota of the county under the amended bill.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. If I understand this bill introduced by the committee, it simply means that, regardless of what has been contributed heretofore by a community, its future contribution shall be determined by the number remaining in class 1.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. HARDY. There is no question of credit in the bill at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am speaking of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], which provides that the quota shall be based on all those registered and liable for service, and that credit shall be given for every man who has entered the service since April 1, 1917.

Mr. HARDY. It could be remedied by providing that there should be no duplication.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have prepared an amendment, which I shall offer unless it is demonstrated to my satisfaction that this duplication which I fear can not result.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is talking about a theory. I know the facts. I have been to the office of the Provost Marshal General, and I have been to the statistical division of the War Department, to find out about this very question. At one time I was under the same impression as the gentleman from Kentucky, that it was possible to give duplicate credits. But after inquiry I find that this is the way in which credits are given. In the last draft the Provost Marshal General combined the number of men to be drafted, with the number of men who had volunteered, which made the gross quota for the entire country. He then allocated to each district its gross quota, and each district was given credit for the number of men already in the service, leaving the net quota which had to be produced. We have to-day about a million and a half men in the service. If we were going to draft 500,000 more that would make a gross quota of 2,000,000 men. That gross quota will be distributed in the same way. Now, in the allocation of the quota to each district, either according to the plan proposed by the majority of the committee or by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], credit will be given for the men already in the service, leaving a net quota for each district. Later there will be another draft. Now, suppose there were 2,000,000 men in the service, and we want to get 500,000 more men. That gives a gross quota of two and a half million men. Credit will still be given to each district for all the men enlisted since the beginning of the war. The amendment prepared by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] conforms exactly with the practice and the procedure of the War Department, and they could not do differently if they wanted to. To adopt his amendment is liable to lead to something that I am sure the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] himself does not want.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the sense in adding to the number desired those who are already in the service, and then immediately subtracting them from the number desired, when it makes it necessary to go through a lot of bookkeeping in order to arrive at the very same result that might be arrived at by beginning from the bottom and taking the drafted men liable to serve?

Mr. HAYDEN. There is only one way to do it, and that is to make up the gross quota, consisting of the men in the service and the men to be drafted, each time that a new draft is called. Then give credit to each district for the number of men already in the service. In the enlisted division of The Adjutant General's Office, a branch of which is located in the old Census Building, near the Driscoll Hotel, they are now preparing a list of the credits due to each State, which will be completed within the next three days. This list will show how many men have been brought into the service by voluntary enlistment up to March 31 and where each man came from. They keep that data up to date, because each recruiting office reports every 10 days on the number of men who have enlisted. Now, I am sure that neither The Adjutant General nor the Provost Marshal General desire any other amendment to the existing law, because that would mean some change in the procedure. They are successfully administering the law as it is written, and the Shallenberger amendment does not change the method in the least.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. BARKLEY. The first draft was based on population. If this bill passes it will be based on registration, and if you take into consideration the men already in the service under the draft you have a mixed basis for quota by bringing in men on the population basis instead of registration.

Mr. HAYDEN. The same number of men are in the service and each State gets credit in the same way. Furthermore, Gen. Crowder has testified that the last apportionment of draft quotas was not based upon population at all, but upon the registration.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House that the Census Bureau wanted this amendment?

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from California misunderstood what I said. I mentioned the fact that a branch of The Adjutant General's office is located in a building formerly occupied by the Census Bureau. I did say that the Provost Marshal General wants no change in the method of apportioning credits.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Provost Marshal General's office wants the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER]?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. The Provost Marshal General's office said that it was perfectly feasible to give credit for voluntary enlistments in the future as they have in the past, and if credit is given they want it given in the same manner as provided by the present law, which the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] does. The Provost Marshal General's office would be glad to do away with the allocation of credits for voluntary enlistments, but all of the work is actually done by a branch of The Adjutant General's office, so that I do not see how the Provost Marshal General has any real interest in the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to send my amendment to the Chair to have it read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina). That can not be done, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be read for information.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it might be well to add that the time taken to read it shall not be taken out of the time for general debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky be read for information, and the gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time be not taken out of that for general debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the amendment reported for the consideration of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands it is being read for information.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the ruling of the Chair to be that the gentleman could not offer it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not without unanimous consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because the gentleman did not have the floor for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the unanimous-consent agreement a Member can offer an amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; but the time of the gentleman from Kentucky had expired.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, that is all I want—to have it read for the information of the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the gentleman from Wisconsin said he could offer it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request that the amendment be read for the information of the House. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the amendment add the following:
"Provided further, That no such credit shall be given to such State, Territory, or subdivision thereof for any men who have been already so accredited to such State, Territory, District, or subdivision, as provided under the provisions of the act of May 18, 1917."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall support the amendment of my colleague for the reason that I believe we are not keeping good faith with the communities, counties, and States if we do not support that amendment or its equivalent. I shall vote for the resolution whether it shall be amended or not. No executive officer of this Government will have any excuse to offer for lack of action on the part of Congress or to cover his errors from any act of mine. We must have effective fighting done and soon.

I was very much interested in the trend of the arguments in support of this resolution, and opposed to the Shallenberger amendment, by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]. I note the peculiar ring they give. Each speaks from the great national standpoint. One would think the arguments were made in favor of another and different way of raising the American Army. They talk now like those who opposed the draft last spring. Perhaps I might be expected to say I was glad that they had come back to the other system, but I will not. The enactment of a law in these times makes your choice my choice, and I want to defend rather than criticize the deliberate determinations of this Congress.

We adopted a system in America and there ought to have been stability enough in this Congress to stay by it for at least one year. The passage of this resolution unamended takes Congress out of the army-raising and hands it over to the executive department. We adopted the selective draft nine months ago. The reasons given by its supporters were they did not want to too greatly disturb the various communities in their social and industrial relations. They did not want a man to offer himself to his country, but wanted him to have the great distinction of having the Government select him. Therefore they said first the State, next the county, and sometimes running down into the precincts, but especially the county should be called upon to find out how many men there were to come from it as a fair share of the National Army draft. That has been true of every county in the United States, except where there were very large populations within the county. In such cases they were subdivided. They were drawn in that way. Each man was given a county number and assured that with his national number, which chance gave him, should fix his status. That number was to be his passport to the Government gratitude and favor. He in his order was the representative on the battle front of his county folks at home.

In each county a selective-draft board was formed of his own county neighbors.

A county quota was determined to be so many fighting men. First 5 per cent of them was called; then 15 per cent; next 40 per cent; afterwards 35 per cent; and finally 5 per cent, all in terms of and from the county. Then came the questionnaire, with the corps of legal aids for the registrants, all of and within the county. Every question of construction having reference to the county. Nay, more, every member of the local board solved every question of eligibility and exemption with reference to the county as a unit. Every registrant, reading in newspapers and listening to patriotic speeches, heard the selective-draft law extolled for its perfection. From how many tongues have we heard the ranking member of the Military Affairs Committee extolled for his efficient aid in securing the passage of the selective-draft law. It is perhaps fitting that the same member should in this proceeding give the law its coup de grâce, because no one will seriously claim that the working under the present resolution will closely relate to the working of the present law.

I desire whatever this House and the Senate passes shall be the law of the land, and I desire to support it and give its merits as best I can to the people. But it is difficult after opposing a measure to go and heartily support it, and then before a year has passed see its original sponsors declare it all wrong and force a substitute in its place which will do a manifest injustice to a patriotic constituency.

I desire especially to favor that part of the Shallenberger amendment which gives, or ought to give, credit for voluntary enlistments from the counties. I trust it will prevail.

It was expected by every member of every draft board in the United States, by every young man who answered the questionnaire, that he was answering with reference to the existing law, with no prospect of repeal or important change, such as is here proposed. So that every man who answered the questionnaire and every member of the board acted upon it with reference to that condition.

I believe the local boards of the United States are loyal, honest, impartial. But each board acted differently, depending somewhat upon the sentiments of the community. It was not a question whether they were going to take the next quota from class 1. They agreed on that. The ordinary question arising was, Shall we encourage a large field in our county to be selected from or shall it be a restricted field? Every board, I venture to say, believed that all they would have to do would be to give so many men from their county, whether or not 10 or 90 per cent of their registrants were placed in class 1. That was what was before the boards and that is why we claim this is unjust, with no notice given by this Government or its officials that this remarkable change was to be made. We have a state of affairs that would result unjustly in many parts of nearly every State in the Union. I challenge most of you gentlemen to figure out just how it affects your States and counties before you pass on this by your vote. I accept the figures submitted by Gov. SHALLENBERGER as to Nebraska, taken from Gov. Neville, rather than those submitted on page 4998 of the RECORD.

This condition obtains in my own district. There are 11 counties, every one of them an agricultural county, with about the same percentage living in the towns and country in each one as of the others. The percentage of registrants in class 1 in Butler County is 20, while in Seward County, which adjoins it, the percentage is 98. These counties are very much alike in almost every essential particular. Ninety-eight per cent of all of the registrants in Seward, 74 per cent in Gage, and 80 per cent in Saunders are placed in class 1. Why? I am informed that there was very little encouragement to plead exemption. There was insistent urging not to plead exemption. And above all there was a patriotic spirit among the young men, all of which prompted many, regardless of their vocation, dependents, or circumstances, to waive exemption, so that very few were placed outside of class 1. Later a number did plead their exemption, but 722 out of a total of 1,287 were placed in class 1, with no exemption claimed and no appeal, so if every appeal was allowed and exemption judgment rendered Seward County would be furnishing 56 per cent, or 28 per cent more than it should. And that would go to make up the shortcomings of every slacker county in the United States under this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. May I have one minute more?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I grant the gentleman half a minute more.

Mr. SLOAN. I want to say this, that my district has 45 per cent of its registrants in this class 1, while the rest of the State has 30 per cent, and the United States has only 27 per cent.

Mr. GORDON. And the country at large 26 per cent.

Mr. SLOAN. In Nebraska there were registered for classification under the recent questionnaire 103,491 men; placed in class 1 and not appealed from, 27,351, or a percentage of 26.4. There were 6,330 appeals. If all these were left in class 1 the percentage would be 32.5 per cent.

For the fourth Nebraska district there were unappealed from 4,241 out of a total registered of 15,324, or 27.6 per cent. Including 2,715 appeals taken, there would be in class 1 6,956, or 45.6 per cent of total registered.

The average for the State outside of the fourth district was 30.2 per cent. This includes all placed in class 1, including the appeals. Outside the fourth district the percentage of men in class 1 not appealed from is 26.1 per cent.

	Number registered.	Class 1 unappealed.	Class 1 appealed.	Per cent appealed.	Per cent appealed and unappealed.
Butler	1,275	225	35	17.67	20.38
Fillmore	1,143	219	70	19.16	25.28
Gage	2,443	794	1,014	32.50	74.00
Hamilton	1,241	248	45	19.98	23.61
Jefferson	1,303	347	148	26.63	37.98
Polk	877	192	4	21.87	22.35
Saline	1,447	301	89	20.80	26.95
Saunders	1,697	657	655	38.71	79.90
Seward	1,287	722	540	56.09	98.05
Thayer	1,131	246	15	21.27	23.07
York	1,480	290	100	19.72	26.35
Total	15,324	4,241	2,715

And men say that is not an injustice! If Seward, Gage, and Saunders County young men, married or single, on farm or in trade, had of their own volition been permitted to join the ranks there would be no injustice, but simply because these young men waived their exemption so as to be in a class of fighting men to meet any equitable demands that should be made upon their county, now, without warning to them or their board, they surged into class 1 not only to meet their county's share but to help make up the dodgers and slackers of every county in every State of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, as I look at this resolution its main purpose is to correct a mistake in the original draft act, a mistake which was the result mostly of oversight. When we were discussing the original draft act last May we did not realize what the effect would be of basing the draft wholly on population. The difficulty was, however, detected in the Senate, and the Senate made an effort to amend the bill along the lines somewhat of this resolution, but that amendment was lost in conference between the two Houses. It is obviously fairer to base a draft on the men eligible to serve than on the population, because the population in some places is much more largely ineligible to serve than in others. In some places there is a very large proportion of aliens in the population, and in some rural communities the young men have moved away to go into the cities or to go West, and there is therefore a very much larger proportion of women and children than in other communities, but the act as it stands bases the draft on population. It seems to me that no argument can be made with regard to the possibility that local boards are going to be unfair in classifying the men. In the first place, the classifications are all made for the present, and the local boards are composed of good men. They have had a pretty severe responsibility. The eyes of every community are on them. You can not presume that any community wants its men as a whole to avoid their fair share of the duty of defending our country. I do not believe that you can point to any community in your neighborhood where you would want to say that the sentiment of the people would uphold the local board in trying to exempt young men from doing their part in defending the country.

I think we must presume that the local boards have, as a rule, done their duty well, and we know they have, as the figures show, as pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] in the table printed in the RECORD of April 11. The year's working of the law has shown that this oversight which we made when we first passed the act should be corrected, the War Department urges its correction, and now we have a resolution to correct it. The correction proposed is fair and just and should be made.

I was somewhat taken at first by the Shallenberger amendment, but the more I studied it the more I saw it would not do. The first part of the amendment I am strongly against. I should like to see credit given for the volunteering, as proposed in the second part, but I do not think it is particularly important excepting as it applies to young men who volunteer when they are under 21. Most of that, however, has already gone by, and has been credited, and unless some better arguments are made than have so far been made I shall vote to stand by the resolution as recommended by the War Department.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Can the gentleman reconcile with his sense of justice the idea that two counties side by side should furnish quotas, one of them at the ratio of 20 per cent and the other at the ratio of 40 per cent just because that was the way their classification of class 1 stood?

Mr. PLATT. One community might have twice as many women and children or twice as many aliens as the other.

Mr. HARDY. But I spoke of two counties standing side by side.

Mr. PLATT. And one might have a big city in it and the other might not.

Mr. HARDY. But the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] gave an illustration of two counties.

Mr. PLATT. He did not tell what the character of people was in the two districts, and I should like to know.

Mr. SLOAN. I would say that they are practically the same, but I should like to look into the census figures.

Mr. PLATT. It is a possibility as to those two counties. If the local board of one of these counties has deliberately given a deferred classification to many more men than it should have so classified, it should be called to account and should be required to reclassify its men of draft age. There is provision for correcting such matters, but if you pass this amendment as it stands you defeat the very purpose of the selective draft. You base the draft on all the men of draft age with exception of a portion of the aliens, instead of basing it on those who are eligible for service. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not looked up the census figures with regard to my own district, and I have no definite recollection of the proportion of aliens or others ineligible to serve. I hope we shall soon have treaties ratified that will provide for the service of the aliens from countries on our side in the great war. But the proposal of this resolution, as recommended by the War Department and the Committee on Military Affairs, is equitable and fair, and I shall vote against the Shallenberger amendment and in favor of the resolution as reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] on the broad principle that it destroys the scientific character of the selective draft. The selective draft has certain great advantages over any other system that we have ever used in drawing an Army. A year's experience has more than justified the wisdom of those who proposed the selective draft. We are to-day gratified by hearing from every quarter, not from a few or a majority, but from every quarter of military information that the men who have responded to this country's service under the selective draft constitute in appearance, in the character of their training, in morale, in habits, in spirit, and in efficiency the finest body of troops that ever were marshaled for battle. [Applause.] Certain inequalities have appeared in the administration of the selective-draft law. A year of careful study on the part of those who had the administration of the law has resulted in the recommendation that the majority of the committee has presented for our adoption. It is proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska that we engraft upon it a change, and this is the change: That there shall be selected from one locality no more men to carry a musket than are selected from another locality. Now, that is absolutely wrong in principle. The selective draft means that we shall send to the battle field those who by reason of family connections, by reason of their utility or nonutility in industrial life can best afford to go, and it means that those who may be needed in their avocations can be retained for those. I was drawn very strongly to the selective draft from the outset on the principle that this would enable our country to become scientifically efficient in war. This, as has been said many times, is not simply a war of men on the battle field.

It is a war of nations organized to their fullest capacity and strength, and I for one firmly believe that the men who are digging coal in the coal mines, the men who are mining iron ore, the men who are working on battleships, the men who are working on merchant ships, the men who are working in munition factories, are soldiers of this country equally with those men who are on the battle field, and there may be the utmost reason in the world why certain of those men should be retained to perform those various works. One thing I learned while in Europe, which I think I am justified in making public here, strengthens my conviction. I was informed by the intelligence department, by a very able man, it is not necessary now to state who, that while Germany has squatted upon nearly all the coal mines of Europe, nevertheless she is short of coal and is having great difficulty in furnishing Holland, Switzerland, and Sweden with that coal that is absolutely necessary for those countries to have and which Germany must furnish in order that she may in turn receive from those countries vital necessary munitions, and that her shortage of coal is due to the fact that she was unwise in taking from the coal mines her trained mine workers and putting them in the Army——

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota (continuing). Who ought to have been retained in large measure in the mines digging coal to make Germany efficient. I have only a moment or two, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman understand that the coal miners of the bituminous field, if they are single and have no one dependent upon them, are not in class 1 classification?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can see that is a matter of administration——

Mr. BLAND. They are.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I should think it were entirely proper and competent for the Provost Marshal General to put them in a distinct class, which will not be possible if the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska is adopted. Therefore for the scientific administration of the selective draft I say, vote for the bill exactly as it is introduced by the committee. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield four and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have heard a great deal here to-day about this war being a national war. That is a sentiment to which we all agree, and for that very reason I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska to the pending resolution. If we want to make this war national, I for one am not only willing that my district do its part, but I am willing that the district of every other Member in this House shall be permitted to do its part. No part of the country ought to desire to do less than its share nor should it be permitted to do less than its share. A great deal of harm has already been done in this country by this preachment which has been made that we are going to exempt the workers in factories and the farmers, that we are going to exempt the miners, that we are going to exempt the men in the shipyards, and that we are going to exempt everybody who is of any account and performing any useful function, and only take those who are not properly articulated into the industrial or commercial or some other kind of useful life of this country. We must come to know that we may have to draft men in all lines of endeavor [applause], and it is a false theory to preach to the people of this country because some particular class happens to be engaged in a certain character of work that it is to be free from the draft. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska because it preserves the theory of universal service.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why do you have any classification, then?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will state to you why—in order to determine the relative order in which they shall be called.

Mr. SHERLEY. If you are going to determine that in that way, why do not you stick to it after you have determined it?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will stick to it, and I will grant the gentleman's position might be correct if every board throughout the United States construed the rules and regulations in the same way and enforced them in the same way. [Applause.] But, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, you do not have to charge local boards with fraud, you do not have to charge them with corruption, in order to know they have applied the law in different ways. The tables of statistics submitted before you in the RECORD prove that. Your own experience, if you have gone back home and investigated local conditions, will prove that to your mind, because, my friends, any law must be administered by human beings, and whenever administered by human beings, naturally that administration will partake somewhat of the mental, temperamental, and other characteristics of the men who are enforcing it. I am not charging the local broads with corruption, but I am in favor of protecting the local board which does its duty and makes a fair classification and the registrants who have been fairly and properly classified against the fraudulent or improper action of some other board in some other district which does not make a fair and just classification under these rules.

Now, I grant you that the old regulations which based it upon population are proven to be unfair in many particulars. Therefore I think they should be changed. But I can see no reason why it is not fairer to base the quota upon the theory propounded by the gentleman from Nebraska when you proportion it according to the entire number within the respective ages and liable for duty than to place it simply upon those who have been in many instances arbitrarily placed in class 1 while others similarly situated in civil life have been by some other board placed in deferred classes. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] complains because he fears that Arizona will be obliged to furnish too many men. The average percentage of men in class 1 is 27.71. The percentage from Arizona is 22. I do not see what he is kicking about. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] complains because he fears that Nebraska will furnish more men than the average State should furnish, and I find that Nebraska has only 26 per cent of its men in class 1.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I have not the time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is not correct.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what the record shows. I refuse to yield.

Now, the inequity of the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Nebraska is that it will make matters worse, if that be possible, than they are to-day. Illinois has 28 per cent of its registered men in class 1. No complaint has come from Illinois, and no word of complaint, so far as I know, will come from that State.

Pass the bill reported by the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs and you will find this condition to exist in the future: There will be no man taken from any class below class 1 in any section of the United States until every man in class 1 from all sections of the United States is taken.

And so I find no reason why we should listen to these pacifists who here to-day are trying to embarrass the administration in its conduct of this great war by the introduction of an amendment by the gentleman from Nebraska. These men, most of them, at any rate, who are in favor of the amendment, who have advocated it and who have spoken for it, were opposed to the draft, and they have stood here on the floor of the House at all times since then and fought every movement calculated to vigorously prosecute the war. If you want the war prosecuted to a successful conclusion, adopt the bill as proposed by the majority of the committee and you will have some hope of success. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HARRISON of Virginia). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, some words have been spoken here about the change of sentiment on the part of gentlemen who favored the selective-draft law and who now propose to make some changes in that law. The fact of the matter is that those gentlemen who favored the selective-draft law and who have seen the inequalities under that law that ought to be corrected are trying in this law to mend their fault of yesterday by the wisdom of to-day. The people who are opposing the proposition, with one exception, never were for the selective-draft law. The members of the committee who signed the minority report, except the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON], opposed the selective-draft law; they opposed in every way they could the selective-draft law. They were for the volunteer system; and I was rather surprised yesterday at the remark of my friend from Nebraska on the committee, Judge SHALLENBERGER, when he said that the selective-draft law "must be held inviolate." He has at least arrived at the point of admitting that the selective-draft-law "must be held inviolate." But about this proposition of the credit for volunteers: Every district in this country will get credit for those who have volunteered. They will not get direct credit, but indirect credit, and in this way: Most of the men who have volunteered have been inducted into the service. They are of the draft class; they are class 1 men. They would be put in class 1 in their respective districts; but having volunteered their names are not in class 1. Therefore class 1 in their respective districts will contain fewer names than if they had been certified in that class. Indirectly the district will get credit for the man who is already in the service under his voluntary enlistment.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the deferred classifications are that much larger by reason of his volunteering?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly; and class 1 in his district is not as large as it would have been if he had not volunteered.

Mr. BARKLEY. And other classes are larger?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; and therefore the district indirectly gets the credit for his volunteering.

Now, about the district that my friend from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has referred to: I do not recall anywhere in the figures, which I looked over pretty carefully, that any district in this country has 98 per cent of its registrants in class 1; but if that did occur, I have here a copy of the telegram which the Provost Marshal General has sent to the governor of each State, asking that in all those districts where the local boards seemed to have been too rigorous or too lenient the lists be investigated and looked into. That if the local boards have acted improperly, appeals be taken to the district boards and the matter rectified; if that be done, these inequalities which the gentleman speaks about will cease to exist.

Mr. Speaker, I shall put the telegram into the RECORD:

[War Department telegram—Mail copy.]

WASHINGTON, April 3, 1918.

(No. B 366.)

To all governors, except Nebraska, Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico:

PARAGRAPH 1. An examination of the reports being received from various parts of the country indicate a wide variance in the number of men classified in class 1. In a few cases the classification is too high and injustice to individuals may have resulted, while in a much larger number of cases it is too low, thus putting an additional burden on other local boards.

PAR. 2. You are requested at once to examine the reports on file in your State headquarters and direct inquiry to the local boards who have unusually low percentages in class 1, requesting detailed reasons for such classification. You should give particular attention to local boards which have reported a strength of class 1 falling considerably below the State average. You will scrutinize under similar rules reports of boards showing unusually high percentages considerably higher than the State average.

PAR. 3. It may be presumed that a local board returning a class 1 substantially varying from the average has failed to administer the requirements of the law with sufficient care and has loosely allowed a smaller number of men to be classified therein than the spirit and letter of the law would justify. The belief that a low number in class 1 would reduce the quota to be drawn from that area may account for this excessive depletion of class 1 in such boards.

PAR. 4. It is true that such low figures may often be justly attributable to peculiar local circumstances, such as an extraordinary number of aliens, of physically unfit, of enlistments, of pivotal men in industry or agriculture or the like circumstances, which would increase the relative numbers of classes 2 to 5. If such shall prove to be the case, the presumption of error will be overthrown and the board's classification will be allowed to stand as final.

PAR. 5. But the burden of explanation will lie upon all such boards. And such explanation must be promptly made, with adequate details to support it. The explanation must be scrutinized by you.

PAR. 6. Immediate inspection should be made of all local boards who do not give a complete and satisfactory explanation for the abnormal number of those appearing in class 1. This inspection will be made best by local board members, or Government appeal agents, or others who have demonstrated their ability and skill in the application of the selective-service regulations. They should be men who have handled the same kind of problems which confronted the local board whose classification has apparently failed. They should be charged with the importance of the task assigned to them, and perform it without offense to the local board whose records are being examined. They should work expeditiously and make prompt report. Where possible they might through suggestion have errors corrected, and thus accomplish immediate results, without a large number of appeals to district boards.

PAR. 7. A sufficient number of inspectors should be appointed, consistent with the character of men required, to insure the earliest possible completion of this task. It is suggested that immediate assignments be made and that a complete investigation be under way not later than April 10. It is earnestly desired that a complete report be in your hands and a copy of such report filed with this office not later than April 25.

PAR. 8. You may issue to them the necessary travel orders and compensate them on the basis of $7.50 a day. This inspection should be made at the earliest possible moment, as the information sought is of the greatest importance at this time.

CROWDER.

N. B.—After the addition of the following paragraph the above telegram was sent to Nebraska:

PAR. 9. For congressional criticism of selective-service law in Nebraska see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 29, page 4306.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD some tables which show that certain parts of this country have mainly young and unmarried men who would go into class 1. I have taken these from the census of 1910 which nobody can challenge.

Mr. GORDON. But New Jersey is not one of those States

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. New Jersey is one of those States that has sent out a number way above its quota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Under leave to extend my remarks, I add the following:

The unfairness of making the draft in proportion to population, or even to registration, is shown by the fact that some States are full of newcomers, who are young and mostly unmarried men of class 1, while in other States many of the young men have gone away. In the Abstract of the Census of 1910 there are no statistics of the males in each State between 21 and 30 years of age, but the militia table shows that the proportion of males from 18 to 44 years of age per thousand was, in—

North Carolina	178
Georgia	191
Virginia	193
Tennessee	194
Alabama	188
Mississippi	192
Maine	204
New Jersey	236

And the average for the whole United States was 223, while it was in—

Montana	328
Wyoming	374
Nevada	359
Washington	298
Arizona	289
Oregon	283
California	280

(Taken from page 119 of the Abstract of the Census, 1910.)

This proportion was very much greater in the younger ages. The per cent of the whole population between the ages of 20 and 29 of both sexes was as follows, as shown on page 136:

	20 to 24 years.	25 to 29 years.	20 to 29 years.
Vermont	8.1	7.6	15.7
Maine	8.3	7.7	16.0
New Hampshire	8.6	7.8	16.4
Virginia	9.5	7.8	17.3
North Carolina	9.5	7.6	17.1
Average	8.8	7.7	16.5

While in—

	20 to 24 years.	25 to 29 years.	20 to 29 years.
Oregon	10.5	10.4	20.9
Arizona	10.2	10.8	21.0
Washington	10.7	11.0	21.7
Montana	11.5	11.8	23.3
Wyoming	13.3	13.4	26.7
Average	11.2	11.5	22.7

Even this does not represent the real difference, because in the States first named there were just about as many men as women (see p. 100), while in Montana there were 152 men for every 100 women; Wyoming, 168.8 men for every 100 women; Arizona, 138.2 men for every 100 women; Washington, 136.3 men for every 100 women; Oregon, 133.2 men for every 100 women; so that a much larger proportion of the population of draft age were men in these latter States, and were largely or mostly unmarried.

For example, in North Carolina, there were 171 of every 1,000 of both sexes between the ages of 20 and 29, and in that State there were only 99.2 men to every 100 women, by which proportion less than 85 would be men (84.321). In my own State there were 192, of whom just half, or 96, were men. On the other hand, in Montana, there were 233 of every 1,000 men and women of ages between 20 and 29, and in that State there were 152 men to every 100 women, by which proportion over 140 of the 233 would be men (140.64).

The difference was still greater between Vermont and Wyoming. In Vermont there were only 157 between 20 and 29 of the 1,000 of both sexes, and there were 105.6 men to every 100 women, so that of this 157, less than 81 (80.63) would be men. While in Wyoming, 267 of every 1,000 were between the ages of 20 and 29, but there were 168.8 men to every 100 women, so that of the 267, more than 167 (167.66) would be men, or more than double the number of men in Vermont.

In Wyoming, where there were two-thirds more men than women, most of the men seem to have been unmarried and in class 1.

We want to win this war, and in order to be fair we should first take the class that can go without deranging society. Younger men even than 21 are eager to come in. We should add younger ages to the draft; and if they prove fit they should be qualified to be officers.

I support the joint resolution as it is—I oppose the amendment which, like the present law, would disregard the principles of the selective draft and compel some communities to send forward men from the deferred classes, while others would keep back a large number of class 1, who should be the first called.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, the table of classification of registrants in the various States that has been referred to so very frequently happens to show that of class 1 registrants my State's percentage is 28, a fraction over the average of the whole country, and consequently its position can not be urged as affecting my view. In fact, I do not think it matters one iota in the determination of this question, and it is because of the emphasis of that phase of the matter that so many gentlemen here are being led into error. I shall not waste any time in impugning the motives of men. I shall not follow the example of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who at first spurned any imputation as to the motives of those on his side and then proceeded to challenge the motives of those opposing him. I think the differences of opinion that have arisen have arisen because of the emphasis men put on certain phases of the question. Many gentlemen seem to think that the most important thing here is to do exact and complete equity between localities.

I think the most important thing to-day is to give to the National Government that class of men that can perform the greatest service with the minimum cost and loss to the Nation. [Applause.] That is the distinction that existed between the two sides when the original fight was up here upon the draft law, and it is the distinction that runs through this whole matter here to-day. We are really fighting over in a new guise the old issue as to whether men shall think of locality and the equities and rights of individuals as the paramount consideration, or shall consider what the Nation needs as the paramount thing. What is the difference between the two proposals as I see it? Both sides have reached the point where they believe in a classification, a classification that designates what men shall be chosen first, and presumably designates those men because they are the men best fitted to perform the work for which the Nation calls them.

One group here, after making a classification, proposes to live to it, and the other group says, "We are in favor of the classification and we will live to it as long as it does not interfere with an arbitrary rule of distribution according to population." I submit to the House, which is the logical position and which is not?

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.

Mr. GORDON. That arbitrary distinction the gentleman speaks about is in the law which he voted for and advocated on this floor?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and it is because that arbitrary distinction did not work well that we are willing to amend the law. We are not so hidebound that we have to stick by a position, even though it be a wrong one, and I suggest that liberality of mind to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. [Applause.]

We have had another curious parallel in this debate. We have had gentlemen express tremendous fears as to what the War Department could and would do; fears which, by the way, could not be realized without a violation of the law. I desire only to call attention to the fact that those fears so expressed here are equaled only by the fears expressed by the same gentlemen touching the frightful results that would flow from the draft act at the time it was up for discussion. [Applause.] After all, Mr. Speaker, there is only one basis upon which the opposition to the majority proposal can really rest its case, and that is that the various boards have either so ignorantly or so fraudulently performed their work as to create such inequalities in localities as to justify your disregarding the classification rule that we have set out.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, that is a necessary predicate for the position that is taken by those gentlemen to-day. I deny it as a fact. I deny it according to the figures that they themselves have here put in evidence and which show an average for the whole country that is much nearer to the percentages of each of the States than the average that would be obtained by using the arbitrary rule of population. Let me suggest to the gentleman one other matter. You can correct, and you are correcting by the revision of the action of the local boards, the inequalities and the wrongs that have been done by the local boards. You state that they are human and that they make mistakes and that therefore you should not follow them. It is true they make mistakes, but when they make a mistake there can be an effort to remedy it, but when there is inequality from an arbitrary rule that has been adopted, then there is no way of getting away from the inequality of that arbitrary, mathematical rule which you adopt and which does not fit the facts, and gentlemen should bear that in mind when they discuss the matter.

It is important, in my judgment, that every man in class 1, broadly speaking, should be taken before the other classes are invaded. If that is not true, why did you classify? If you are going to have the rule of apportionment applying to all men who are subject to military service, what is the use of having five groups? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it is an unfortunate fact that as a debate proceeds it too often happens that gentlemen undertake to project into that debate suggestions that have no sort of relation to the matter before the House. This is too often done in the hope that the cause advocated may be won in the result, by the creation of a distracting and befogging prejudice. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] stated that the great bulk of the speeches that have been made to-day in favor of the Shallenberger amendment had been made by gentlemen who were opposed to the war resolution. I merely wish to say in response to that statement that I challenge it absolutely. So far as I am aware, only one speech of the many that have been made this afternoon in support of the Shallenberger amendment was made by a gentleman who voted against, or was opposed to, the declaration of war.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not want to do me an injustice? He does not want to misquote what I said?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. I do not.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not state what I said at all.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. What I did say was that the gentlemen who were making speeches here to-day advocating the Shallenberger amendment opposed the draft.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I did not understand the gentleman to use the word "draft."

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I said.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman states that he used the word "draft," why of course I withdraw what I said. I did not so understand him, but if I was mistaken, I have nothing further to say in the way of comment on the gentleman's remarks. It is true that I was one of the Members who opposed the draft, and the difficulties which have confronted the War Department in the administration of the draft act, an act which they are now seeking to radically amend very clearly shows that our attitude of critical opposition to that act was well qualified.

There is no one word that I had to say in the debate on the draft act that I care to withdraw to-day. It has never been shown that at the time that act was passed, it was necessary to resort to conscription. But that incident is closed. Like every other Member of this body I accepted the verdict of the majority, and have uniformly from that time forward given my hearty and undeviating support to every proposition designed to win this war. [Applause.] But to return to the question before the House. The gentlemen opposing this amendment, have sought to a most astonishing extent to confuse the pending proposition with some other proposition heretofore acted upon and with which it has no relationship. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who ought to be informed about this legislation, has sought to create the impression by what he has had to say, that this in another form is the old fight, against the draft, presenting the same issue, and to be decided upon the same considerations. The Shallenberger amendment will in no wise hinder, or obstruct the task of raising a National Army by the process of conscription.

In this connection allow me to quote the declaration made on yesterday, by my colleague, Judge HARRISON, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and thereby bring the House back to the consideration of the real question that is in issue:

> The difference between this resolution and the Shallenberger amendment does not involve the size of the Army. Neither resolution, nor the amendment will add a single soldier to the number now authorized.

The Shallenberger amendment proposes to give a State, or a subdivision, credit for its enlistments, and in addition that a quota required of a State shall be in proportion to the men in the four classes liable for military service, and not in proportion to the men in class 1. It is the purpose of the War Department to make class 1 the reservoir from which the fighting men shall be drawn. The Shallenberger amendment in no wise contravenes, or interferes with that purpose. Bear that in mind. Keep it in view in the consideration of this amendment which is a proposition of simple and fundamental justice. Why should one State, or one community furnish more fighting men than another State, or community similarly situated, and equally well supplied with men liable to military service? Why do gentlemen seek to befog this argument, by suggesting that this amendment has a meaning which plainly it does not carry?

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] stated on yesterday that this is a national war, and that we ought to think in national terms. Certainly I agree to that. I believe that I can think in national terms as truly and as patriotically as my colleague.

But when you undertake to think in national terms why is it necessary to commit injustice? Think nationally, if you will, but in the same connection, think justly, and do justice. The two are not incompatible. Now the foundation of any law, and of any thought, national or local, should be justice. Justice to the individual, means justice to the collective mass. No law not founded in, and resting upon justice, will ever receive the comprehensive and enthusiastic support, of the truly patriotic citizens of this Republic. Why, said the Member from Kentucky, the gentlemen who support the Shallenberger amendment talk about the equities of the case. Aye, why not? Unless we regard those equities how will you maintain the morale of our people who are asked to sacrifice themselves and their nearest and dearest in the prosecution of this colossal, world-shaking war? Unless you have regard for those equities, how will you appeal to them to make the ultimate sacrifice for home, and country? Unless those equities are conserved do you believe that you will ever be able to implant in the hearts of the American soldiers the flame of imperishable, and undying patriotism, the sense of high endeavor, and immortal sacrifice, without which we will never win this war?

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I regret I have not the time to yield. In this connection, I desire to present another thought. What is the underlying principle upon which the right of national conscription is supposed to rest?

It is that upon all alike, one man with another, there is imposed the obligation of national service. What does that mean? It means that the men in Maine and in California, in Washington and in Florida are equally liable to be expended and to be sacrificed in the service of the motherland. Is that universal liability consistent with the suggestion that it is more incumbent upon one section than upon another to defend the flag in Flanders? Surely not. Every community, in proportion to its supply should furnish fighting men for the armies of the Republic. If Maine has 10,000 fighting men, and California 20,000, then on every call California should furnish two men for every one furnished by Maine. Who will gainsay a proposition so plainly just? The pending resolution is an ingeniously devised method by which a State with an inferior population may be required to furnish more soldiers than another State, with double its population. This injustice the Shallenberger amendment is designed to correct. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], in the course of his remarks threw up many coruscating rhetorical fireworks, star bombs, skyrockets, and Roman candles. He alluded to Picardy, and Normandy, and Brittany, to Ireland, and Scotland, and possibly other countries known to ancient, and modern history, but not intimately connected with the Shallenberger amendment. And when he returned to earth, after this dizzy aerial flight, the substance of what he seemed to be saying was that after all, it should not be considered an act of injustice to require one State to furnish more young men for the supreme sacrifice, than another State of equal population.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at this time, I will be glad to yield later. I would like to put up this proposition to the gentleman from California, and ascertain whether he would be willing to live up to the magniloquent sentiments announced in the course of his rhetorical appeal to this body to reject the Shallenberger amendment.

Mr. KAHN. I will try to do so.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If California had furnished 50,000 men to carry on this war, and Virginia had not furnished a man, it would be competent for the Nation to call upon California for another 50,000, and exempt Virginia from that call. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from California whether under those circumstances, he would approve that national action, and justify it before the people of his State and district, as a fair and just exercise of national authority? As a matter of fact, it appears from the figures put into the RECORD by the gentleman from Arkansas, that the gentleman from California is very differently situated. So far from his State being called upon to furnish more fighting men, than other States, it appears that under the plan which the gentleman advocates, his State will fare uncommonly well. California has about one and a half times as many people as Arkansas, but the latter State will furnish many more soldiers than California. Is that right? Can an amendment which will correct so gross, and palpable an injustice, be possibly wrong? Any proposition which makes such an inequality a possibility, reeks with injustice.

Mr. KAHN. Allow me to furnish the gentleman with the figures from those two States.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have the figures, and will furnish them later. The resolution which the gentleman from California supports, provides in substance according to the plans of the Provost Marshal General, that class 1 shall furnish the fighting material of the future drafts. The other classes may be drawn upon, in theory, but in practice, it is contemplated that class 1 will be drawn upon, until it is exhausted, to furnish the men for the line. This class has been created under the questionnaire system. By the action of the local boards in the exercise of a flexible and ill-defined power of discretion, this class has been so constituted that if the future soldiers are drawn in proportion to its contents, the grossest inequalities and injustices will be developed. Some counties with a large population have a small class 1. Other counties with a small population have a large class 1. This means that under this resolution, if the Shallenberger amendment is defeated, a county with a small population but a strict local board, will furnish a very much greater number of soldiers, than another county with a larger population but a more easy-going board. This will be absolutely and fundamentally unjust. The gentleman from Virginia, and the gentleman from Iowa, have furnished a number of illustrations showing the inequalities between counties, that have been created by the action of the respective local boards. The boards that have so administered the regulations of the Provost Marshal General, as to create in their respective counties a well-filled first class, have created a situation in which their people will be the inevitable sufferers. Other counties with a small class 1, and abundant material in the other classes, will profit at their expense. It is suggested that this inequality is only apparent, not real, since the Provost Marshal General can draw men from the other classes, in the favored counties. Yes, these may be drawn, but for expert work, not for fighting. I am concerned for the men in class 1. They are the men upon whom the real burden, the real tragedy of this war will fall.

Another ground of objection to the pending resolution is that it is grossly unfair to the farmers. Under the questionnaire system inaugurated by the Provost Marshal General, young men who are suitable for fighting men, but who in addition can qualify as skilled laborers are not included in class 1. But the farmers in the view of the department and taken as a whole, are not rated as skilled laborers. Gen. Crowder stated in his testimony that class 1 would be larger in the country, than in the urban communities, for the reason that skilled labor is not so abundant in the country. This means of course that the country people, that is to say, the farmers will be required to furnish more fighting men than the towns. Is this just, or fair? Is it true that skilled labor is lacking in the country? The fact is that in any real sense the farmers are as a class, entitled to be rated as skilled laborers, fully as much as the blacksmith, or the carpenter, or the shipwright, or the boiler maker, or the motor car craftsman. The young man who has spent 15, or perchance 20 years of his life, in the active and intelligent cultivation of the soil, is a skilled laborer. If put into the shops, or required to do artificer's work, he would be fully as efficient in his new field, as the handicraftsman upon the farm. It is absurd to contend otherwise. It is said that the man in the trades is serving his country, and doing his bit. Yes, but do not compare his lot with that of the man in the line, at $30 a month, confronting death at every turn in its most horrid forms.

What is the sacrifice involved in working in the munition plants, or shipyards, in perfect safety, and in the regular enjoyment of the normal wages? These enterprises are necessary, I agree, but so is agriculture. Daily we are told that food will win this war. How will that food be produced? If class 1 in the agricultural communities is to be filled with the so-called unskilled labor now tilling the farms, and this labor to be later drawn into active service, the question may well be asked who will till the farms? Why is the man who can handle the auger, or the broadax, or the plane, to be preferred over the man who can drive a team, turn a furrow, direct a reaper, or handle a tractor? I know many men of the latter type who are now in the camps, and their farms lying idle. Still food, we are told, will win the war. So will guns, and powder, and ships, and over and above all, men. But these men should be fairly, and justly procured. No artificial distinction should put the artisan in the skilled labor class, and recruit the experienced agriculturist to class 1 for service in the trenches. I protest against this injustice, just as I protest against the proposition to make one section, or community furnish proportionately more fighting men, than another community similarly situated. Such an inequality means that a greater burden will fall upon the community furnishing the excess of men. There will be more sorrow, and tears in that community, more sorrowing fathers, more weeping mothers, more pitiful figures in stricken homes, the pathetic wastage thrown up by the tides of war. I protest that this burden should be equally shared and that an amendment which in the largest measure will secure this equality, should receive the full support of this body. The task of raising an army is our task under the fundamental law.

In the discharge of this task, we should think in national terms, but remember that equality is equity. The bare power to do injustice, does not justify injustice. The right to call to service in unequal proportions, does not justify the exercise of that right. It should be our task to formulate a law which will afford an army adequate to our necessities, but one so fairly constituted, so appropriately selected that no one will be found to challenge the justice of our creation.

In conclusion I submit the figures as to California and Arkansas, taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: California has a population of 2,377,549. In class 1 are found 21 per cent of her registrants. Arkansas has 31 per cent in class 1, that is in her reservoir of fighting men, and a population of 1,575,449. It will not be difficult to figure out which of these two States occupies a preferred situation. Under the Crowder plan, Arkansas will furnish many more fighting men than California, though the population of that State far exceeds the figures for Arkansas. I need not enlarge upon the lesson conveyed by this comparison. Mr. Speaker, the decision of this issue is remitted to the Members of this body. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to myself the time that remains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, the first thing I desire to call attention to, in view of the colloquy between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is that Alabama has furnished 1,998 volunteers, while California has furnished 5,430 volunteers. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. How about Kentucky?

Mr. FIELDS. I have not looked up the figures, but she has always furnished her share.

Mr. CALDWELL. Kentucky has furnished 2,415.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of camouflage about this whole proposition. The minority members did not offer these amendments in committee and they did not suggest or even refer to them in their minority report. They opposed the bill in committee and attempted to defeat it because, forsooth, in a county here and there in their congressional districts there was apparently some inequality in the classification by the local boards. Notwithstanding the fact that the head of that branch of the War Department that has taken the responsibility of raising the soldiers to fight this war urges that the passage of this bill is absolutely essential, these gentlemen oppose it because of these minor inequalities that exist here and there in counties throughout their districts. I regret that these conditions exist, but they are not as extensive under the new classification as under the old, as I showed you yesterday and as has been shown by other members of the committee.

Now, in order to carry out their plans to defeat the bill they come in with a proposition to cut out of the bill all there is in it.

The first part is the Shallenberger amendment with regard to the quota basis, which, if adopted, will destroy the bill and defeat its purpose, and in order to try to pass that amendment they tack onto it two propositions. First, the proposition that all aliens who do not claim exemption shall be classified. Why, that is done anyhow. Every registered alien in the United States who did not claim exemption because of his alienage was classified and put into class 1, unless he claimed a deferred classification because of dependents.

Then what is the other proposition? It is camouflage, pure and simple. In order to win votes for the first proposition, the purpose of which is to destroy the bill, they tack onto it a proposition to give credit for enlistments that have already been made and for which credits have already been given. And in order to relieve them of that advantage I shall demand a division of the question at the proper time, and the first vote will be upon the quota proposition. I want gentlemen to bear that in mind. I do not want gentlemen to get confused. The second vote will be upon the question of allowing credits. So gentlemen will understand the vote when it comes.

Gentlemen this is not a time to cavil over differences that exist here and there in some parts of a county or of counties of the various districts of the United States. The War Department says that this legislation is necessary. Every Member of Congress owes it to the War Department to uphold its hands, because we have laid upon it the responsibility of conducting this war, the outcome of which will write the future history of the democracy of the world.

At a time like this, when the democracy of the world is hanging in the balance, men can not on the floor of this House afford to cavil over minor differences that may have grown out of some injudicious act or some unwarranted decision of some local board somewhere in the United States. We have laid this responsibility upon the War Department. We expect that branch of the Government to make good, and we should give it the law necessary to enable it to do so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the Shallenberger amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands a division of the amendment, and the Clerk will report the first proposition in it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, called under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," shall hereafter be determined in proportion to the total number of persons registered and liable for military service therein, including resident aliens who have waived all claims for exemption.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to that proposition, the first half of the Shallenberger amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. KAHN. I ask for a division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 132.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the first half of the Shallenberger amendment, the first proposition just read, will vote "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 243, answered "present" 3, not voting 67, as follows:

YEAS—118.

Alexander	Caraway	Estopinal	Humphreys
Almon	Carlin	Goodwin, Ark.	Jacoway
Aswell	Carter, Okla.	Gordon	Johnson, Ky.
Austin	Cary	Gray, Ala.	Jones, Tex.
Ayres	Church	Griffin	Keating
Bankhead	Clark, Fla.	Hardy	Kehoe
Barnhart	Claypool	Harrison, Va.	Kincheloe
Bell	Collier	Hayden	Kitchin
Black	Connally, Tex.	Helm	La Follette
Blackmon	Connelly, Kans.	Helvering	Larsen
Blanton	Crisp	Hilliard	Lee, Ga.
Booher	Dent	Holland	Lesher
Brand	Dewalt	Houston	Little
Brodbeck	Dies	Howard	Lobeck
Burnett	Dill	Huddleston	London
Cannon	Dominick	Hull, Iowa	McKeown
Mansfield	Rayburn	Stafford	Watson, Va.
Martin	Roberts	Steagall	Webb
Mays	Robinson	Stephens, Miss.	Welling
Mondell	Rouse	Stevenson	Whaley
Montague	Russell	Sumners	Wheeler
Nicholls, S. C.	Sanders, La.	Taylor, Ark.	Williams
Oldfield	Saunders, Va.	Thomas	Wilson, La.
Oliver, Ala.	Sells	Thompson	Wilson, Tex.
Overstreet	Shackleford	Tillman	Wingo
Park	Shallenberger	Van Dyke	Wise
Polk	Sherwood	Venable	Wright
Price	Shouse	Vinson	Young, Tex.
Ragsdale	Slemp	Walker
Randall	Sloan	Watkins

NAYS—243.

Anderson	Esch	Knutson	Rogers
Anthony	Evans	Kraus	Romjue
Ashbrook	Fairchild, B. L.	Kreider	Rose
Bacharach	Fairchild, G. W.	Langley	Rowe
Baer	Fairfield	Lazaro	Rubey
Barkley	Farr	Lea, Cal.	Rucker
Beakes	Ferris	Lehlbach	Sabath
Beshlin	Fields	Lenroot	Sanders, Ind.
Bland	Fisher	Linthicum	Sanford
Bowers	Focht	Littlepage	Scott, Mich.
Britten	Fordney	Lonergan	Scott, Pa.
Browne	Foster	Lufkin	Scully
Browning	Francis	Lunn	Sherley
Buchanan	Frear	McArthur	Siegel
Burroughs	Freeman	McCormick	Sims
Butler	French	McFadden	Sinnott
Byrns, Tenn.	Fuller, Ill.	McKenzie	Slayden
Caldwell	Fuller, Mass.	McKinley	Small
Campbell, Kans.	Gard	McLaughlin, Mich	Smith, Idaho
Campbell, Pa.	Garland	McLaughlin, Pa.	Smith, Mich.
Cantrill	Garner	Madden	Smith, C. B.
Chandler, N. Y.	Garrett, Tenn.	Magee	Snell
Chandler, Okla.	Garrett, Tex.	Mapes	Snook
Clark, Pa.	Gillett	Mason	Stedman
Classon	Glass	Mecker	Steele
Condy	Glynn	Merritt	Stephenson
Cooper, Ohio	Goodall	Miller, Minn.	Sterling, Ill.
Cooper, W. Va.	Gould	Moore, Pa.	Sterling, Pa.
Cooper, Wis.	Graham, Ill.	Moores, Ind.	Stiness
Copley	Gray, N. J.	Morgan	Strong
Cox	Green, Iowa	Morin	Sullivan
Crago	Greene, Mass.	Mott	Sweet
Cramton	Greene, Vt.	Mudd	Swift
Crosser	Gregg	Nelson	Switzer
Currie, Mich.	Griest	Nichols, Mich.	Tague
Dale, N. Y.	Hadley	Nolan	Talbott
Dale, Vt.	Hamill	Oliver, N. Y.	Temple
Dallinger	Hamilton, Mich.	Olney	Tilson
Darrow	Hamlin	Osborne	Timberlake
Davidson	Haskell	O'Shaunessy	Tinkham
Davis	Hastings	Overmyer	Treadway
Dempsey	Hawley	Padgett	Vare
Denison	Hayes	Paige	Vestal
Denton	Heaton	Parker, N. J.	Volgt
Dickinson	Hersey	Peters	Waldow
Dillon	Hull, Tenn.	Phelan	Walsh
Dixon	Husted	Platt	Walton
Dooling	Hutchinson	Porter	Ward
Doolittle	Igoe	Pou	Wason
Doremus	Ireland	Pratt	Watson, Pa.
Doughton	James	Purnell	Weaver
Drane	Johnson, Wash.	Quin	Welty
Dupré	Kahn	Rainey	White, Me.
Dyer	Kearns	Raker	White, Ohio
Eagan	Kelley, Mich.	Ramseyer	Wilson, Ill.
Eagle	Kelly, Pa.	Rankin	Winslow
Edmonds	Kennedy, Iowa	Reavis	Woods, Iowa
Elliott	Kennedy, R. I.	Reed	Woodyard
Ellsworth	Key, Ohio	Riordan	Young, N. Dak.
Elston	Kiess, Pa.	Robbins	Zihlman
Emerson	Kinkaid	Rodenberg

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Good	Longworth	Lundeen

NOT VOTING—67.

Borland	Flynn	Jones, Va.	Powers
Brumbaugh	Foss	Juul	Ramsey
Byrnes, S. C.	Gallagher	Kettner	Rowland
Candler, Miss.	Gallivan	King	Sanders, N. Y.
Carew	Gandy	LaGuardia	Schall
Carter, Mass	Godwin, N. C.	Lever	Scott, Iowa
Cleary	Graham, Pa.	McAndrews	Sears
Costello	Hamilton, N. Y.	McClintic	Sisson
Curry, Cal.	Harrison, Miss.	McCulloch	Smith, T. F.
Decker	Haugen	McLemore	Snyder
Delaney	Heflin	Maher	Stephens, Nebr.
Donovan	Heintz	Mann	Taylor, Colo.
Dowell	Hensley	Miller, Wash.	Templeton
Drukker	Hicks	Moon	Towner
Dunn	Hollingsworth	Neely	Volstead
Fess	Hood	Norton	Wood, Ind.
Flood	Johnson, S. Dak.	Parker, N. Y.

So the first part of the Shallenberger amendment was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi (for) with Mr. BRUMBAUGH (against).

Mr. SISSON (for) with Mr. LONGWORTH (against).

Mr. LEVER (for) with Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. KETTNER with Mr. SCOTT of Iowa.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. McLEMORE with Mr. RAMSEY.
Mr. MAHER with Mr. TOWNER.
Mr. NEELY with Mr. VOLSTEAD.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.
Mr. MOON with Mr. SANDERS of New York.
Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. HEINTZ.
Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. McCULLOCH.
Mr. SCHALL with Mr. DRUKKER.
Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. CURRY of California.
Mr. SEARS with Mr. DOWELL.
Mr. DECKER with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.
Mr. BORLAND with Mr. GOOD.
Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. HICKS.
Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. DUNN.
Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. FOSS.
Mr. GANDY with Mr. NORTON.
Mr. McCLINTIC with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.
Mr. CAREW with Mr. PARKER of New York.
Mr. CLEARY with Mr. COSTELLO.
Mr. DELANEY with Mr. FESS.
Mr. DONOVAN with Mr. HAUGEN.
Mr. FLOOD with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.
Mr. FLYNN with Mr. JUUL.
Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. KING.
Mr. HEFLIN with Mr. MILLER of Washington.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. GOOD. When my name was called I voted "nay." I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BORLAND, and I desire to withdraw that vote and to answer "present."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SISSON, voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I voted "nay." I desire to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the last half of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And credit shall be given on its quota to every State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof for the number of men who have entered the military service of the United States from any State, Territory, District, or subdivisions thereof since May 1, 1917, including members of the National Guard who were in the Federal service on that date.

Mr. PHELAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHELAN. May I offer an amendment to that amendment without debate?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is it not too late?

The SPEAKER. There were two propositions, and the vote was on the first. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. RAGSDALE. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. In agreeing to a vote at a particular period of time my understanding was that we would then vote on the amendment and all amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The debate was on the amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that my request for unanimous consent applied only to the debate on the Shallenberger amendment and amendments thereto.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PHELAN: Amend, by inserting after the word "military," the words "or naval," so that the line will read as amended "or subdivision thereof for the number of men who have entered the military or naval service of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Phelan amendment to the Shallenberger amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KAHN) there were 226 ayes and 31 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The original amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska provided that certain words should be stricken out of the bill and his whole amendment inserted in lieu thereof. The first half having been voted down, do we vote on the proposition nevertheless to insert the last half, or does the last half come in after the bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The motion to strike out the lines in the first part of my amendment was voted down, and this will go to the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the last half of the Shallenberger amendment as amended.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 292, nays 66, answered "present" 3, not voting 70, as follows:

YEAS—292.

Alexander	Fairchild, B. L.	Larsen	Scully
Almon	Farr	Lazaro	Sells
Ashbrook	Ferris	Lee, Ga.	Shackleford
Aswell	Fisher	Lenroot	Shallenberger
Austin	Focht	Lesher	Sherwood
Ayres	Fordney	Linthicum	Shouse
Bankhead	Foster	Little	Siegel
Barkley	Francis	Littlepage	Sims
Barnhart	Frear	Lobeck	Sinnott
Bell	French	London	Slayden
Beshlin	Fuller, Ill.	Lonergan	Slemp
Black	Gard	Lufkin	Sloan
Blackmon	Garland	McArthur	Small
Blanton	Garner	McCormack	Smith, Idaho
Booher	Garrett, Tex.	McFadden	Smith, C. B.
Bowers	Goodall	McKeown	Snell
Brand	Goodwin, Ark.	McKinley	Snook
Brodbeck	Gordon	McLaughlin, Pa.	Stafford
Browne	Gould	Magee	Steagall
Brumbaugh	Graham, Ill.	Mansfield	Stedman
Buchanan	Gray, Ala.	Martin	Steele
Burnett	Green, Iowa	Mason	Steenerson
Burroughs	Greene, Mass.	Mays	Stephens, Miss.
Butler	Gregg	Mondell	Sterling, Ill.
Byrns, Tenn.	Griest	Montague	Stevenson
Campbell, Pa.	Griffin	Morgan	Stiness
Cannon	Hadley	Mudd	Strong
Cantrill	Hamill	Nelson	Sullivan
Caraway	Hamilton, Mich.	Nicholls, S. C.	Sumners
Carlin	Hamlin	Nichols, Mich.	Sweet
Carter, Okla.	Hardy	Oldfield	Swift
Cary	Harrison, Va.	Oliver, Ala.	Switzer
Chandler, N. Y.	Haskell	Oliver, N. Y.	Tague
Chandler, Okla.	Hastings	O'Shaunessy	Talbott
Church	Haugen	Overmyer	Taylor, Ark.
Clark, Fla.	Hayden	Overstreet	Thomas
Clark, Pa.	Heaton	Padgett	Thompson
Classon	Helm	Paige	Til'man
Claypool	Helvering	Park	Timberlake
Collier	Hersey	Phelan	Treadway
Connally, Tex.	Hilliard	Polk	Vare
Connelly, Kans.	Holland	Porter	Venable
Cooper, Ohio	Houston	Pou	Vestal
Cooper, W. Va.	Howard	Pratt	Vinson
Cooper, Wis.	Huddleston	Price	Voigt
Cox	Hull, Iowa	Purnell	Walker
Crisp	Hull, Tenn.	Quin	Walsh
Dale, N. Y.	Humphreys	Ragsdale	Walton
Dallinger	Husted	Rainey	Ward
Darrow	Hutchinson	Raker	Wason
Davidson	Igoe	Ramseyer	Watkins
Davis	Ireland	Randall	Watson, Pa.
Dempsey	Jacoway	Rayburn	Watson, Va.
Dent	James	Reavis	Weaver
Denton	Johnson, Ky.	Reed	Webb
Dewalt	Johnson, Wash.	Riordan	Welling
Dickinson	Jones, Tex.	Roberts	Welty
Dill	Kearns	Robinson	Whaley
Dillon	Keating	Rodenberg	Wheeler
Dixon	Kehoe	Rogers	White, Me.
Dominick	Kelly, Pa.	Romjue	White, Ohio
Dooling	Kennedy, Iowa	Rose	Williams
Doolittle	Kennedy, R. I.	Rouse	Wilson, Ill.
Doremus	Key, Ohio	Rubey	Wilson, La.
Doughton	Kiess, Pa.	Rucker	Wilson, Tex.
Drane	Kincheloe	Russell	Wingo
Dupré	Kinkaid	Sabath	Winslow
Dyer	Kitchin	Sanders, Ind.	Wise
Eagan	Knutson	Sanders, La.	Woods, Iowa
Eagle	Kraus	Saunders, Va.	Woodyard
Edmonds	Kreider	Schall.	Wright
Esch	La Follette	Scott, Mich.	Young, Tex.
Estopinal	Langley	Scott, Pa.	Zihlman

NAYS—66.

Anderson	Dale, Vt.	Kahn	Olney
Anthony	Denison	Kelley, Mich.	Osborne
Bacharach	Elliott	Lea, Cal.	Parker, N. J.
Baer	Ellsworth	Lehlbach	Peters
Beakes	Elston	Lunn	Platt
Bland	Emerson	McKenzie	Robbins
Britten	Fairchild, G. W.	McLaughlin, Mich.	Rowe
Browning	Fairfield	Madden	Sanford
Caldwell	Fields	Mapes	Sherley
Campbell, Kans.	Freeman	Meeker	Smith, Mich.
Cleary	Fuller, Mass.	Merritt	Temple
Copley	Garrett, Tenn.	Miller, Minn.	Tilson
Coady	Gillett	Moore, Pa.	Tinkham
Crago	Glynn	Moores, Ind.	Waldow
Cramton	Greene, Vt.	Morin	Young, N. Dak.
Crosser	Hawley	Mott
Currie, Mich.	Hayes	Nolan

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Good	Longworth	Lundeen

NOT VOTING—70.

Borland	Curry, Cal.	Drukker	Foss
Byrnes, S. C.	Decker	Dunn	Gallagher
Candler, Miss.	Delaney	Evans	Gallivan
Carew	Dies	Fess	Gandy
Carter, Mass.	Donovan	Flood	Glass
Costello	Dowell	Flynn	Godwin, N. C.

Graham, Pa.	Juul	Moon	Smith, T. F.
Gray, N. J.	Kettner	Neely	Snyder
Hamilton, N. Y.	King	Norton	Stephens, Nebr.
Harrison, Miss.	LaGuardia	Parker, N. Y.	Sterling, Pa.
Heflin	Lever	Powers	Taylor, Colo.
Heintz	McAndrews	Ramsey	Templeton
Hensley	McClintic	Rankin	[illegible]ner
Hicks	McCulloch	Rowland	Van Dyke
Hollingsworth	McLemore	Sanders, N. Y.	Volstead
Hood	Maher	Scott, Iowa	Wood, Ind.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Mann	Sears
Jones, Va.	Miller, Wash.	Sisson

So the second part of the Shallenberger amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. SISSON (for) with Mr. LONGWORTH (against).

Mr. LEVER (for) with Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts (against).

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi (for) with Mr. SANDERS of New York (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. DONOVAN with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. MOON with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. DIES with Mr. VOLSTEAD.

Mr. EVANS with Miss RANKIN.

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. VAN DYKE with Mr. LAGUARDIA.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HARRISON of Virginia: Amendment at the end of the bill: Strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

"Provided, That all those registrants who are bona fide engaged in agricultural enterprises, conducted for commercial purposes, and producing supplies in excess of the necessities of those engaged therein, shall be entitled to deferred classification as long as and no longer than they are so engaged, whether they are engaged therein as proprietors, managers, tenants, or farm laborers. For the proper enforcement of this provision such rules and regulations shall be prescribed not inconsistent therewith similar in character to those prescribed for registrants on emergency fleet classification list in sections 153, 154, and 155 of the selective-service regulations."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia rose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the demand comes too late.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; if the gentleman from Virginia desires recognition, he is entitled to it.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, how much time does that give me?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one hour.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can not take the gentleman from Virginia off the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia desires to proceed, he has the right to do so.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I would be very glad to yield if I could have my time in the morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would be entitled to the time in the morning if the bill comes up.

Mr. FIELDS. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. There are a number of gentlemen who desire to be heard upon this amendment, and I desire to give them the opportunity to do so. For myself I want only five minutes, but I am willing to take my hour in the morning if I can get it.

The SPEAKER. If the bill comes up to-morrow, the gentleman is entitled to his hour.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 13, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations, customhouse and post office at Providence, R. I., and post office, courthouse, and customhouse at Richmond, Va. (H. Doc. No. 1036); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting tentative draft of legislation for inclusion in the sundry civil appropriation bill granting authority for the construction of an additional building for laboratory purposes and research work and for enlarging and remodeling the present animal house for the Hygienic Laboratory, Public Health Service, Washington, D. C. (H. Doc. No. 1037); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FLOOD, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10264) to prevent in time of war departure from or entry into the United States contrary to the public safety, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 485), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11143) granting an increase of pension to John A. Ott; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 1224) granting an increase of pension to George Edward Blackmer; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 11407) to provide for an aircraft administrator, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 11408) to amend section 4516 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by sections 1 and 2 of an act entitled "An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea," approved March 4, 1915; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 11409) authorizing the President to appoint as quartermaster assistants in the Quartermaster Corps of the United States Army certain clerks employed in the Quartermaster Corps of the Army and heretofore known as clerks, Quartermaster Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLSWORTH: A bill (H. R. 11410) for the classification of members and preparation of correct tribal rolls, the completion of allotments, and the disposal of all remaining property of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in conformity with the agreement of 1889, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LUNN: A bill (H. R. 11411) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma: Resolution (H. Res. 309) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to furnish to the House of Representatives information as to why the Osage Indians in Osage County, Okla., were not paid the moneys due them in March, 1918; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11412) granting an increase of pension to Felix Beske; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions

Also, a bill (H. R. 11413) granting an increase of pension to Edgar P. Spooner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11414) granting a pension to Mary E. Livingston; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 11415) granting a pension to David J. Holbrook; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11416) granting an increase of pension to Wellington Harder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11417) granting an increase of pension to Eli Brainard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HELVERING: A bill (H. R. 11418) granting an increase of pension to George W. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 11419) for the relief of George A. Smith; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 11420) granting an increase of pension to Levi W. Short; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McLEMORE: A bill (H. R. 11421) granting a pension to Otilia P. Smythe; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED: A bill (H. R. 11422) granting an increase of pension to William B. Dunlop; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11423) granting a pension to Nancy J. Clark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 11424) granting a pension to Belle S. Robinson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEAGALL: A bill (H. R. 11425) granting an increase of pension to William Goodwin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRONG: A bill (H. R. 11426) granting an increase of pension to Levi Lindenmuth; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VESTAL: A bill (H. R. 11427) granting an increase of pension to John Stout; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 11428) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Wainwright; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petitions of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., relative to payment of income and excess-profits taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Fond du Lac (Wis.) Woman's Club, against increase in second-class postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of faculty of Lake Erie College, of Painesville, Ohio, against increase in second-class postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of New York State Ice Manufacturers' Association, against increase in second-class postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CLASSON: Petition of J. B. Steele, publicity chairman, liberty-loan committee, relative to subscription for liberty loan in Outagamie County, Wis.; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GRIEST: Memorial of Lancaster (Pa.) Clearing House Association, relative to payment of income and excess-profits taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: Memorial of The Bronx Board of Trade, New York City, favoring pneumatic-tube mail service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Memorial of Northwestern Typographical Conference, opposing the admission of oriental labor into the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Petition of the representatives of the building industry of the States of Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, South Dakota, North Dakota, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, requesting that a representative from the States mentioned above be appointed to serve upon the war emergency construction board; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Machinist Helpers' Lodge, No. 959, Minneapolis, Minn., asking that Federal control of railroads be given a fair trial before return of roads into private hands; also, asking that no definite time be set for return of public roads back to private capital; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McARTHUR: Petitions of Linn County Pomona Grange, favoring prohibition during the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Linn County Pomona Grange, favoring law conscripting wealth; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAKER: Petitions of Goodyear Rubber Co., Weir Fancy Goods Co., Frank B. Peterson Co., Cardinell-Vincent Co., and Newbauer Bros., all of San Francisco, Cal., urging support of Senate bill 3962, relative to payment of income and excess-profits taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RANDALL: Memorial of Owensmouth (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, indorsing employment in agricultural pursuits of prisoners of war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of Ella D. Nicholson, secretary Woman's Club, Thief River Falls, Minn., against use of national parks for grazing purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of Young Women's Missionary Society of First United Presbyterian Church, McDonald, Pa., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TILSON: Petition of Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States, in favor of permitting the soldiers and sailors of the United States to receive decorations given by our allies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 13, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the comradeship of service brings us very close together in this tragic life of ours. To-day as we meet with the notice of the passing of one of the honored Members of the Senate our hearts are saddened. We thank Thee for his life and for his public service. We bless Thee that he has lived among us, bearing in all the years the white flower of a stainless life. Thou hast called him to the reward of the great beyond. Let Thy blessing rest upon us as we cherish his memory and help us to emulate all his virtues.

And now, O God, as we have come this day to the greatest crisis in our Nation's history, and in the history of the world, we pray Thee to make bare Thine arm to save. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. RANSDELL and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR BROUSSARD.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, it is with profound sorrow that I announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, Senator BROUSSARD, who died at his home in New Iberia, La., at 8.30 last night, after a long and very painful illness.

I shall not attempt to say anything about the late Senator at this moment, but at a later time I shall ask the Senate to set aside some hour at which fitting testimonials may be paid to the memory and public services of my deceased colleague.

Mr. President, I send to the desk the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 224) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. ROBERT F. BROUSSARD, late a Senator from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. BROUSSARD, to be held in the city of New Iberia, La.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed under the second resolution, as the committee on the part of the Senate, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. KING, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. SHAFROTH.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 13, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father Soul, a living, vitalizing presence, ever working in and through the minds and hearts of the susceptible, for the larger life and grander achievements, that human happiness may be advanced.

But alas, for the perversity of human nature and the willfulness of men, we stand before Thee abashed and humiliated at the awful spectacle presented by the world in the terrible tragedy through which we are passing; brought about by the machinations, cunning, and evil designs of comparatively few, who would change the course of human events and subject mankind to the barbarous methods of militarism and autocracy.

Intervene, we beseech Thee, with all the force of Thy holy influence; confound the enemies of civilization and give success to the arms of those who are compelled to fight for human rights; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

APRIL 13, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I ask leave of absence for three days, to participate in liberty-loan campaigns in my district.

Very truly, yours, ISAAC BACHARACH.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, for two days, on account of illness.

CAPT. H. A. MEYER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a communication from the Acting Secretary of War in response to a House resolution. The Clerk will read the communication.

The Clerk began the reading of the communication.

The communication is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 6, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: With reference to House resolution No. 297, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, directing the Secretary of War to furnish the facts concerning the issuance of a commission as captain to Herbert A. Meyer, which resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, I beg leave to place before you the facts in this connection. Herbert A. Meyer was appointed captain, Quartermaster Reserve Corps, on March 12, 1917. This appointment was made upon the recommendation of the Quartermaster General as the result of an examination conducted by a board of officers in conformity with General Orders No. 32, War Department, 1916. His papers show that he had four years' service with the United States Marine Corps, finishing his enlistment as quartermaster sergeant, and six years' excellent administrative training in civil life. He performed no active service under this commission. On February 16, 1918, with the consent of the Quartermaster General, he was examined by a board of officers under Special Regulations No. 43, War Department, 1917, for appointment to the Signal Corps and found duly qualified for appointment as captain, Signal Reserve Corps, and recommended by the Chief Signal Officer for such appointment. This recommendation was approved on March 16, 1918. His appointment as captain, Signal Reserve Corps, automatically vacated his quartermaster commission.

Attention is invited to the fact that as captain, Quartermaster Reserve Corps, on the inactive list, he was entitled to classification in section 5, Selective Service Regulations. However, he failed to avail himself of this and was placed in class 4, because of a dependent wife and child. Capt. Meyer was examined for his first commission two months before the declaration of war and over three months before the passage of the selective-service law. The foregoing clearly establishes that Capt. Meyer was appointed in conformity with the act of June 3, 1916, as passed by Congress and the regulations as prescribed by the President. He has been continuously in the military service since the date of his commission, March 21, 1917, though not on active duty, and at no time has been subject to selective-service regulations for this reason.

With respect to that part of the resolution which reads, "recent official statements of the War Department discontinuing the issuance of commissions in the Army of the United States to persons in civil life and to registrants under the selective-draft act of May 18," this could be construed to mean that the War Department had announced that the issuance of commissions to civilians and draft registrants had been discontinued absolutely. This is not the fact so far as concerns the various staff corps and departments and the special and technical units provided for in the selective-service act of May 18, 1917. Commissions have been and are under the existing policy issued to qualified applicants from each of the classes referred to in your resolution. No announced policy of the War Department was violated when Capt. Meyer was commissioned captain, Aviation Section, Signal Corps. Any applicant for this or any other staff corps commission, whether from civil life or a registrant under the selective-draft act, with the same qualifications and recommendations, would have been so commissioned.

At the beginning of the war the various staff corps and departments were in the process of a relatively great expansion and their need for properly qualified officers was very great. The heads of the various departments were charged with the responsibility to carry out successfully the war program in so far as it concerned each of them, and as they were responsible for the results it was thought best to give them a comparatively free hand in the selection of their officers to accomplish these results. Appointments were made under the national-defense act, June 3, 1916, and regulations made in pursuance thereof, and without regard to the age of the applicant, except as specified therein, provided he was professionally qualified and recommended by the head of the staff corps or department concerned.

On August 11, 1917, the following instructions were given concerning the commissioning of young men subject to selective-draft regulations:

"The Secretary of War directs that, before staff commissions that do not imply active field service are issued to young men in good physical condition subject to the selective draft, certificate be required that equally well-qualified men who are above the draft-age limits, or who are physically disqualified for active service, are not available."

This rule governed until January 4, 1918. Many applicants for commissions were rejected if they did not have special qualifications for the work required. Some department heads complained that the work of their departments was being interfered with by the enforcement of this rule. The matter was submitted to the War Council and on January 4, 1918, the following resolution of the War Council was approved and directed to be carried into effect:

"Resolved, That the War Council recommends that hereafter men required by the staff departments, and having special qualifications for the duty for which they are desired, shall be commissioned, provided they do not come in class 1 under the new classifications for the next draft. The council recommends that commissions be not issued to persons in class 1."

This remained in effect until February 4, 1918, when the following amendment was ordered by the Secretary of War upon the recommendation of the Provost Marshal General:

"Only registrants whose class and order number are so late that they are not within the current quota of their local boards shall be eligible to be commissioned in staff corps."

This is the rule, with respect to registrants and civilians, now in effect in so far as regards staff corps commissions; likewise for commissions in special and technical units provided for by act of May 18, 1917.

The policy above outlined has not been violated in the issuance of commissions to persons in civil life or registrants under the selective draft, May 18, 1917.

It will be noted that at no time has it been the policy of the department to refuse to commission civilians or registrants of the selective draft if they were specially qualified and recommended by the head of the staff corps or department that desired their services, though at all times an effort has been made to prevent the appointment of able-bodied young men within the draft age to staff departments unless they appeared to be exceptionally qualified for duty therein.

There have never been any restrictions upon appointments, in so far as concerns the draft age, in the Medical Department. For obvious reasons this was not desirable.

There has been a gradually increasing tendency on the part of the staff corps and departments (Signal, Ordnance, Engineer, and Quartermaster) to confine commissions to enlisted men, unless the applicant had special technical qualifications and training which were desired. The Engineer Corps has conducted three training camps; the Signal Corps is now conducting a large number of training schools in various parts of the country; the Ordnance Corps has commissioned about 100 from its training school and is now conducting a school for securing commissioned officers in the Ordnance Department; and the Quartermaster Department likewise is conducting a school for the purpose of securing officers for that corps.

With respect to commissions in the line (Infantry, Cavalry, Field Artillery, and Coast Artillery), the following policy of the department was announced at the beginning of the war before any troops were officered or organized and shortly after the selective-draft act was passed (June 4, 1917):

"To provide officers for the drafted forces of the National Army, the War Department has adopted the policy of commissioning all new officers of the line (Infantry, Cavalry, Field and Coast Artillery) purely on the basis of demonstrated ability after three months' observation and training in the officers' training camps. Thus, the officers of the new armies will be made entirely on merit and free from all personal or other influences."

This policy has been consistently followed. There has, therefore, been no discontinuing of the issuance of such commissions to registrants under the selective-draft act, May 18, 1917, or to persons in civil life.

The attached lists of officers commissioned in line sections who did not qualify at a training camp but were, however, given line commissions is furnished:

"A." A list of officers commissioned in the Infantry Reserve Corps under authority provided in section 31–A Selective Draft Regulations and assigned to duty as assistants to the governors of the States to assist them in carrying out the selective-draft regulations. These officers will not be assigned, under their commissions, to duty with troops.

"B." A list of colored enlisted men taken from the Regular regiments to provide officers necessary to organize and officer the Ninety-third Division, not enough being provided by the colored training camp.

"C." Maj. Laurence Angel, an ex-officer Porto Rican Regiment, with 16 years' commissioned service, who resigned in 1916 to accept a lucrative position with the Maxims Munitions Corporation. He was a graduate line and staff class, Army Service Schools, Fort Leavenworth. His appointment as major of Infantry was considered and directed by Chief of Staff upon the recommendation of Maj. Gen. John F. Morrison, who was in charge of the service schools. His services were desired for use as an instructor at future training camps.

It is believed that the above is the only one of this class, although it is possible that there may have been a few others appointed under similar circumstances, but it is practically impossible to list such by name without going over the records of all line officers appointed to date, which investigation would require an indefinite length of time.

"D." A list of officers commissioned for purely intelligence work under the direction of the chief of the military intelligence branch of the General Staff. These men were recommended for appointment by the chief of the intelligence branch, and their appointments were made at the direction of the Chief of Staff, and orders have been issued that such officers shall not be assigned to line duty, because they are not qualified for such duty It was not desired that they be allowed to secure line commissions without having qualified through a training camp. These officers are available for duty wherever their services are needed, at home or abroad, but only for intelligence work.

"E." A copy of the board report on Capt. Meyer's examination and a copy of the recommendation of the Chief Signal Officer.

"F." Training-camp memorandum, containing policy with reference to appointment of line officers.

Very respectfully, BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

House resolution 297.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 5, 1918.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the House, for information of the House, as soon as practicable, the facts in reference to the issuance of a commission to Herbert A. Meyer, as captain in the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps; also any information as to whether the recent official statements of the War Department discontinuing the issuance of commissions in the Army of the United States to persons in civil life and to registrants under the selective-draft act of May 18, 1917, were violated in the case of Herbert A. Meyer; also a list of all commissions which have been issued in violation of such procedure.

Attest: SOUTH TRIMBLE, Clerk.

By J. C. SOUTH, Chief Clerk.

EXHIBIT A.

Name.	Age.	Address.
Maj. Graph J. Hubbard, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	47-3	Montgomery Ala.
Maj. Frank S. Hutton, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	36-2	Sacramento, Cal.
Capt. John Evans, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	33-7	Denver, Colo.
Maj. John Buckley, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	32-11	Hartford, Conn.
Capt. Raymond O. Wilmarth, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	33-4	Washington, D. C.
Capt. Edward Anderson, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	51-2	Tallahassee, Fla.
Maj. Joel B. Mallet, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	24-1	Atlanta, Ga.
Capt. Frank A. McCall, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	47-3	Boise, Idaho.
Maj. June Smith, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	42-1	Springfield, Ill.
Maj. Robt. C. Baltzell, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	38-8	Indianapolis, Ind.
Maj. Roy W. Snell, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	5-9	Des Moines, Iowa.
Maj. R. Neill Rahn, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	43-1	Topeka, Kans.
Maj. Henry F. Rhodes, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	22-1	Frankfort, Ky.
Maj. Chas. S. Miller, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	44-2	Baton Rouge, La.
Capt. Wm. Ernest Lawry, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	35-	Augusta, Me.
Capt. Benj. G. Gott, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	52	Annapolis, Md.
Maj. Roger Wolcott, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	40-3	Boston, Mass.
Maj. Albert E. Petermann, judge advocate Michigan National Guard.	41-1	Lansing, Mich.
Maj. John P. Snyder, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	31	St. Paul, Minn.
Lieut. Col. James H. McCord, Missouri National Guard.	58-5	Jefferson City, Mo.
Capt. Harold M. Stewart, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	43-4	Helena, Mont.
Capt. Walter Anderson, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	50-2	Lincoln, Nebr.
Capt. Chas. W. Howard, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	27-6	Concord, N. H.
Maj. Mahlon R. Marzerum, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	51-5	Trenton, N. J.
Capt. R. C. Reid, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	41-4	Santa Fe, N. Mex.
First Lieut. M. A. Holmes, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	22-7	Albany, N. Y.
Capt. G. A. Fraser, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	23-1	Bismarck, N. Dak.
Maj. W. S. Pealer, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	37-5	Columbus, Ohio.
Capt. John E. Cullison, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	50-5	Portland, Oreg.
Maj. Wm. G. Murdock, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	36-9	Harrisburg, Pa.
Capt. Geo. C. Webb, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	49-7	Providence, R. I.
Maj. Rutledge Smith, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	47-4	Nashville, Tenn.
Maj. John C. Townes, jr., Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	31-9	Austin, Tex.
Capt. F. V. Fitzgerald, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	33-2	Salt Lake City, Utah.
Capt. Steven S. Cushing, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	34-1	Montpelier, Vt.
Maj. William W. Sale, Virginia National Guard.	49-6	Richmond, Va.
Capt. Irving W. Ziegaus, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	30-8	Olympia, Wash.
Capt. Breckenridge Jones, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	30-3	Charleston, W. Va.
Maj. Edward A. Fitzpatrick, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	33-8	Madison, Wis.
Capt. John T. Hunt, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	38-1	Juneau, Alaska.
Capt. H. Godding Field, quartermaster, Officers' Reserve Corps.	51-7	Honolulu, Hawaii.
Capt. Richard J. VanDeusen, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	39-1	San Juan, P. R.
Maj. Henry F. Fredeman, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Little Rock, Ark.
Capt. Henry G. Parker, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Dover, Del.
Maj. John M. Hairston, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Jackson, Miss.
Capt. W. J. McCabe, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Carson City, Nev.
Maj. Franklin S. Hutchinson, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Albany, N. Y.
Maj. John D. Langston, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Raleigh, N. C.
Maj. Eugene M. Kerr, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Oklahoma City, Okla.
Capt. Richard E. Carwile, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Columbia, S. C.
Capt. Ray K. Olds, Infantry Officers' Reserve Corps.	.....	Cheyenne, Wyo.

EXHIBIT B.

List of colored officers commissioned in the Reserve Corps or National Army who did not attend the training camp at Des Moines, Iowa. All were enlisted men when commissioned.

Name.	Rank.	Assignment.
Black, Samuel A	Second lieutenant	Newport News (port of embarkation), Va.
Brown, William	do	Do.
Gaines, Underwood	First lieutenant	Do.
Harvey, Jesse J	Second lieutenant	Brig. Gen. Roy Hoffman, 93d Division, Newport News, Va.
Hurt, John	First lieutenant	Newport News (port of embarkation), Va.
Johnson, Robert	do	Brig. Gen. Roy Hoffman, 93d Division, Newport News, Va.
Maryweather, Moses W	do	Newport News (port of embarkation), Va.
Newton, Arthur	do	Do.
Penn, James R	Second lieutenant	Brig. Gen. Roy Hoffman, 93d Division, Newport News, Va.
Simelton, Dove E	First lieutenant	Newport News (port of embarkation), Va.
Thornton, William	do	Do.

EXHIBIT C.

List of officers commissioned from civil life without attending training camp.

Maj. Laurence Angel, Infantry, National Army; age, 47.

EXHIBIT D.

Officers of the Infantry on intelligence duty.

Name.	Rank.	Age.	Address.
Knabenshue, F. G	Lieutenant colonel, Infantry, National Army.	45-2	Seattle, Wash.
Craig, Henry C	Captain, Infantry, National Army.	39-9	Hoboken.
Cramer, J. Grant	do	48-4	Washington.
Hughes, Rupert	do	45-3	Do.
Tiffany, Chas. L	do	40-3	New York.
Tausig, Knox	First lieutenant, Infantry, National Army.	32-5	St. Louis.
Hay, Clarence L	Second lieutenant, Infantry, National Army.		New York.
Manning, Jos. A	Captain, Infantry, Officers' Reserve Corps.	38-9	Washington.

EXHIBIT E.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
SIGNAL CORPS, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Record of examination for the Signal Reserve Corps, Aviation Section.

Name in full: Herbert Alton Meyers, captain—nonflying.

If in military service: Rank, captain; organization, Quartermaster Reserve Corps; regiment—station, inactive list.

Present post-office address: 1760 Euclid Street NW., Washington, D. C.

Permanent post-office address: 1760 Euclid Street NW., Washington, D. C.

Date and place of birth: August 30, 1886, at Chillicothe, Ohio, U. S. A.

Educational institutions attended: Staunton Military Academy, Virginia, 1900–1904; George Washington University, Washington, D. C., 1905–1907; National University Law School, Washington, D. C., 1908.

Business experience: Assistant to secretary in charge of Alaskan Railroad and Territories, Secretary of Interior, March, 1917, to date; private secretary to Secretary of Interior, 1911 to 1917; assistant secretary Railroad Securities Commission, United States Government, November, 1910, to March, 1911; clerk, Department of Commerce and Labor, July, 1909, to November, 1910; clerk, headquarters United States Marine Corps, December 26, 1905, to July 14, 1909.

Previous military or naval service or training: Captain cadet corps, Staunton Military Academy, 1903–1904; sergeant Quartermaster Corps, United States Marine Corps, 1905–1909; captain Quartermaster Corps, U. S. A., March 21, 1917, to date.

EXAMINATION.

Physical: Satisfactory if waiver on physical disqualification is granted.

Moral: Satisfactory.

Professional: Satisfactory.

Qualifications for special services: Proficient in automobile driving; studied theory of automobile repair, accounting, storekeeping, surveying.

Remarks: None.

The board is of the opinion that Herbert Alton Meyers has the physical, moral, and professional qualifications to perform efficiently all the duties of captain, nonflying, in the Signal Reserve Corps, Aviation Section, and does recommend that he be commissioned as such immediately.

S. M. DE LOFFRE,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Corps, United States Army, Retired, Examining Board.

R. D. WRENN,
Captain Signal Reserve Corps, Aviation Section, President Examining Board.

Board met in compliance with Special Order 207, War Department, 1917, and Special Order 284, War Department, 1917.

Present: Lieut. Col. Nelson Gapen, Medical Corps, United States Army, retired, or Lieut. Col. S. M. De Loffre, Medical Corps, United States Army, retired, and Capt. R. D. Wrenn, Signal Reserve Corps, Aviation Section.

Place: Washington, D. C.; date, February 16, 1918.

Applicant personally appeared before examining board on the 16th day of February, 1918, and was accorded the right of challenge, of which privilege he did not avail himself, and was then examined.

EXHIBIT F.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
June 4, 1917.

Memorandum of information. Officers' training camps, August 27–November 26, 1917.

1. GENERAL PLAN.

To provide officers for the drafted forces of the National Army the War Department has adopted the policy of commissioning all new officers of the line (Infantry, Cavalry, Field, and Coast Artillery) purely on the basis of demonstrated ability after three months' observation and training in the officers' training camps. Thus, the appointment of officers of the new armies will be made entirely on merit and free from all personal or other influences.

As an emergency measure to provide officers for the first 500,000 drafted troops the War Department has put in operation 16 officers' training camps, with a total attendance of about 40,000. These 16 camps correspond to the territorial divisions in which it is planned to raise troops under the draft act of May 18, 1917. These camps, which began May 15, 1917, are expected to provide line officers well qualified as to character and training and sufficient for the first increment of 500,000, with a reserve for that increment.

Following the policy of commissioning officers on demonstrated worth it is intended that after the first increment of 500,000 has been organized, officers will be obtained by promoting officers and men already in the Regular Army, National Guard, and drafted forces, thus giving to those who have volunteered or have been drafted for military service full opportunity to earn promotion to the exclusion of those not in actual military service.

The period devoted to the organization of the first 500,000 must therefore be devoted to training and selecting officers for the second 500,000 to supplement those promoted from troops in service.

To meet this situation a second series of officers' training camps will be held beginning August 27, 1917, with the definite mission of producing a body of line officers (Infantry, Cavalry, Field and Coast Artillery) capable of filling all places in the grades above lieutenant and many of the places in the grade of lieutenant in the second 500,000 troops.

The training camps to be established for this purpose will afford those not in the military service, or drafted in the future, the last opportunity to become officers. Also, in connection with these camps it is to be noted that mature and experienced men are needed to fill the higher grades (first lieutenant, captain, major, and a few lieutenant colonels) in the second 500,000.

2. DATE AND LOCATIONS OF CAMPS.

Date (for all camps), August 27 to November 26, 1917.

Locations: Fort Myer, Va. (two camps).—For Divisional Area I (Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut) and Divisional Area V (New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, and Virginia).

Fort McPherson, Ga. (two camps).—For Divisional Area II (congressional districts 1 to 26, inclusive, of New York State, being New York City and contiguous territory) and Divisional Area VII (Alabama, Georgia, and Florida).

Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. (two camps).—For Divisional Area III (New York congressional districts 27 to 43, and Pennsylvania congressional districts 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 21, 25, and 28) and Divisional Area VI (Tennessee, North Carolina, and South Carolina).

Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. (three camps).—For Divisional Area IV (Pennsylvania congressional districts not included above in Area III), Divisional Area VIII (Ohio and West Virginia), and Divisional Area IX (Indiana and Kentucky).

Fort Logan H. Roots, Ark. (two camps), or other place to be designated.—For Divisional Area X (Wisconsin and Michigan) and Divisional Area XII (Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas).

Leon Springs, Tex. (two camps).—For Divisional Area XI (Illinois) and Divisional Area XV (Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma).

Fort Riley, Kans. (two camps).—Divisional Area XIII (Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Iowa) and Divisional Area XIV (Kansas, Missouri, and Colorado).

Presidio of San Francisco, Cal. (one camp).—For Divisional Area XVI (Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and California).

3. QUOTAS OF CAMPS BASED ON POPULATION.

Each camp will have a quota equaling the population of the divisional area (Census Bureau estimate, 1915) multiplied by .00016. This will give to each divisional area about 1,000 men, and will insure an equal basis of representation to each State in the Union according to population.

4. QUALIFICATIONS.

(1) Classes eligible to apply. Age limits.

(a) Members of the Officers' Reserve Corps (line sections) who, through no fault of their own, were unable to attend the first series of camps; also reserve officers of staff corps under 50 years of age with at least two months' service in war and who have had experience in Infantry, Cavalry, or Artillery.

(b) Noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army recommended in March, 1917, for temporary appointment in case of war, and who, through no fault of their own, were unable to attend the training schools for Regular Army noncommissioned officers in April, 1917. Maximum age limit, 50 years.

(c) Resigned officers of the Regular Army. Maximum age limit, 50 years.

(d) Men of proper qualifications made eligible for the Officers' Reserve Corps by the Army appropriation act of May 12, 1917. Maximum age limit, 50 years.

(e) Men who have qualified for commissions under General Orders, No. 42, War Department, 1915. Maximum age limit, 50 years.

(f) Citizens of the United States who have had war service in the present war as officers or noncommissioned officers of the line in the armies of allied powers. Maximum age limit, 44 years.

(g) Men of exceptional qualifications who tendered their services to the Government prior to June 5, 1917, and who have been listed under General Orders, No. 37, War Department, 1916. Maximum age limit, 50 years.

(h) Citizens with valuable military experience and adaptability for commissioned grade, or citizens who have demonstrated marked ability and capacity for leadership, and are clearly adapted for military service in commissioned grade. Maximum age limit, 44 years.

Note.—Men who applied for the first series of camps must reapply, whether or not certified as suitable for the first camps. Right to enter camp, if selected, is not affected by the fact that applicant is drafted before or after camp begins.

The minimum age limit for all applicants is 20 years and 9 months. However, in order to obtain the experienced class of men desired preference will be given to men over 31 years of age, other things being equal. Because of the anticipated large number of applications it will probably be difficult for men under that age to qualify, except in instances where the applicant has preeminent qualifications or unusual military experience. This applies to the training camps described herein. For later camps see paragraph 1.

5. MANNER OF APPLICATION AND PROCEDURE FOR SELECTION.

All who desire to become candidates will apply on the official application blank which accompanies this circular. Men certified as acceptable for the first series of camps (the camps now in operation), but not directed to attend must in all cases renew their applications. Department commanders have been directed to return to prior applicants papers filed with their previous applications.

A member of the National Guard in Federal service may apply through channels, and, if accepted, will be part of his State quota. While in the training camp he will be on detached service from his National Guard organization.

It is expected that the entire National Guard will be in Federal service before these training camps open. If the applicant's organization is not in Federal service at time of making application he must inclose with his application a signed statement of the adjutant general of the State recommending the applicant as suitable for appointment as an officer, and agreeing to discharge him, or furlough him for three months beginning August 27, 1917, if not in Federal service on that date.

The few noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army who were not in position to be included in the training schools established for noncommissioned officers recommended for temporary appointment will, if accepted, be included in the quota of the State in which they are stationed. These men are highly trained instructors scattered through the country on college or recruiting duty.

Employees of the United States must inclose the signed recommendation and consent of their chiefs.

Area.	Quota.	Those who reside in—	Will mail their applications to examining officer, second training camp—
I	128	Maine	Fort McKinley, Me.
	72	New Hampshire	Fort Constitution, N. H.
	58	Vermont	Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.
	587	Massachusetts	Fort Warren, Mass.
	96	Rhode Island	Fort Adams, R. I.
	196	Connecticut	Do.
II	972	New York (districts 1 to 26, inclusive).	Governors Island, N. Y.
III	714	New York (districts 27 to 47, inclusive).	Fort Porter, N. Y.
	272	Pennsylvania (districts 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 21, 25, and 28).	130 North Washington Avenue, Scranton, Pa.
IV	998	Pennsylvania (not included in Area III).	1220 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
V	362	New Jersey	Trenton, N. J.
	35	Delaware	Fort McHenry, Md.
	208	Maryland	Do.
	48	District of Columbia	Do.
	347	Virginia	Fort Monroe, Va.
VI	379	North Carolina	Raleigh, N. C.
	256	South Carolina	Southeast Department, Charleston, S. C.
	361	Tennessee	523½ Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.
	448	Georgia	Fort McPherson, Ga.
VII	368	Alabama	Clark Building, Birmingham, Ala.
	135	Florida	53 West Bay Street, Jacksonville, Fla.
VIII	216	West Virginia	Charleston, W. Va.
	801	Ohio	Columbus Barracks, Ohio.
IX	448	Indiana	Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.
	377	Kentucky	640 West Jefferson Street, Louisville, Ky.
X	482	Michigan	Fort Wayne, Detroit, Mich.
	395	Wisconsin	391 Wells Street, Milwaukee, Wis.
XI	719	Illinois	Fort Sheridan, Ill.
XII	304	Mississippi	202½ West Capitol Street, Jackson, Miss.
	272	Arkansas	Fort Logan H. Roots, Ark.
	288	Louisiana	Jackson Barracks, New Orleans, La.
XIII	361	Minnesota	Fort Snelling, Minn.
	355	Iowa	Fort Des Moines, Iowa.
	113	North Dakota	Fort Lincoln, N. Dak.
	109	South Dakota	Sioux Falls, S. Dak.
	200	Nebraska	Fort Crook, Nebr.
	528	Missouri	Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, Mo.
XIV	288	Kansas	Fort Riley, Kans.
	152	Colorado	Fort Logan, Colo.
	688	Texas	Fort Sam Houston, Tex.
XV	336	Oklahoma	Fort Sill, Okla.
	64	New Mexico	Santa Fe, N. Mex.
	40	Arizona	Whipple Barracks, Ariz.
	72	Montana	Helena, Mont.
	28	Wyoming	Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo.
	64	Idaho	Boise Barracks, Idaho.
XVI	240	Washington	Fort Lawton, Wash.
	130	Oregon	Vancouver Barracks, Wash.
	16	Nevada	Reno, Nev.
	68	Utah	Fort Douglas, Utah.
	457	California	Presidio of San Francisco, Cal.

Read the instructions on the application and fill it out carefully. Note particularly that letters of recommendation are not wanted, but only the names of three responsible citizens who know the applicant best. Each applicant must be examined physically at his own expense by a reputable physician, who will fill out the physical report forming part of the official application blank. This preliminary examination is subject to review, and the examining officer may require another examination. Men who submitted physical examinations on the Army blank for the first series of camps may submit these reports in lieu of a new examination.

Applications will be received between June 15 and July 15, 1917. Under no circumstances will an application be considered if received after July 15. It will be promptly returned to the applicant.

Shortly after July 15 Army examiners will visit various points, to be announced, in each State. Applicants selected for personal and physical examination will be notified to appear before the Regular Army examiner in person at a convenient point for inquiry into his record, capacity, leadership, and qualifications in general, also for further physical examination if deemed necessary by the examiner.

After the personal and physical examinations are completed, and as soon after August 1, 1917, as practicable (not later than August 10), the accepted applicants will be notified when and where to go for the training course.

6. OBLIGATION.

Accepted applicants, unless they are reserve officers or members of the Regular Army or National Guard in Federal service, will be required to enlist for a period of three months, under section 54, national-defense act, and will agree to accept such commission in the Army of the United States as may be tendered by the Secretary of War. The enlistment obligates one to service in the training camp only.

7. APPOINTMENTS AT CLOSE OF CAMPS—AGE LIMITS FOR COMMISSIONS.

Men will be classified and recommended for commissions on the basis of their qualifications as demonstrated during the training. Those eligible under the Officers' Reserve Corps age limits (up to 32 for second lieutenant, 36 for first lieutenant, 40 for captain, and 45 for major), will be commissioned for five years in the Reserve Corps. However, these age limits will not govern all appointments, because under the draft act of May 18, 1917, these age limits do not apply to appointment for the war only. Accordingly, men qualified for commissions (except for the Reserve Corps age limits) will be commissioned in the National Army for the war. In other wards, a man of 40 may be commissioned a second lieutenant in this manner if recommended for that grade.

8. PAY AND EXPENSES.

The Government will pay the men in training $100 per month during the three months' course, and will provide transportation, uniforms, and subsistence, except that reserve officers in training will receive the pay of their grades, and will provide uniforms and subsistence at their own expense.

All accepted applicants are urged, however, to provide their own uniforms in advance, as follows:

1 hat, service
1 coat, service, olive drab.
2 shirts, flannel, olive drab.
2 breeches, service, olive drab.
1 pair leggins, canvas.
1 pair shoes, marching.

The Government will provide all necessary arms and equipment, and the necessary drill regulations and other publications used in the course will be issued to accepted applicants in the camps.

9. COURSE OF INSTRUCTION.

The training will cover a period of three months. For the first month the course will be uniform for all, with the purpose of giving instruction in the duties common to all arms. At the end of a month the men will be divided, according to qualifications and needs of the service, into Infantry, Cavalry, Field and Coast Artillery for special instruction in their respective branches during the last two months. Candidates for Cavalry commissions will be equipped and trained dismounted for service as Infantry.

10. CHARACTER OF MEN DESIRED.

Since the special object of these camps is to train a body of men fitted to fill the more responsible positions of command in the new armies, every effort will be made to select men of exceptional character and proved ability in their various occupations. While it is desired to give full opportunity for all eligible citizens to apply, no man need make application whose record is not in all respects above reproach and who does not possess the fundamental characteristics necessary to inspire respect and confidence.

By order of the Secretary of War:

H. P. McCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

Memorandum for The Adjutant General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, April 6, 1918.

The Acting Chief of Staff directs the attached resolution be referred to you for the preparation of the necessary report.

P. P. BISHOP,
Colonel, General Staff, Secretary.

Received appointment section, Adjutant General's office, April 8, 1918.

Done:

H. P. McCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

Received Office Chief of Staff April 8, 1918.

The SPEAKER. This communication was in answer to a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], and the Chair submitted it to him——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that it will take about half an hour to read that report, and I can probably dispose of it in a short time by making the motion to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs, and if recognized to make that motion I can probably in a few words explain so as to save the House some of the time that it would take to read the entire report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, having had the privilege of reading that report I regret that the Acting Secretary of War has not seen fit to furnish the House with all the information that is asked for in the resolution which was sent to that department. The report of the War Department seems to be entirely devoted to a justification for the appointment of Capt. Herbert A. Meyer as a captain in the nonflying branch of the Aviation Corps. It tells what a fine man he is, and all that. Capt. Meyer's character has never been questioned. He may be all that the report says he is. He probably was a very efficient secretary to one of the Cabinet officers of the present administration. But that is not the question. What we did want to know is what were the military reasons why his appointment has been juggled with by the War Department as the appointment of no officer in the Reserve Corps has been juggled. The report neglects to state that in September last, I think it was, Mr. Meyer was commissioned as a captain in the Quartermaster Corps and ordered for active duty with the Army in France at about the same time when the draft was imminent, and the department neglects to say that there is on file in the War Department, as I understand there is, an order from the Chief of Staff, dated a few days after the first one, revoking the order assigning him to duty in France for some reason not specifically stated, and he returned to duty as the secretary of one of the Cabinet officers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. With the rank of captain?

Mr. ANTHONY. With the rank of a captain on the inactive list. The matter drifted along with Mr. Meyer on the inactive list as a captain of the Quartermaster Corps, and during that time the department has construed that a man declining an order to active service left the corps——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. No. The gentleman made this statement, that as it would take half an hour to read this communication it would shorten the time if he explained it a minute or two and he would move to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs and have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kansas seems to be cricitizing a report none of us have heard. He seems to be making a statement that he has certain facts in his possession that are not set forth in that report.

The SPEAKER. What the Chair was endeavoring to do was to shorten up this matter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kansas does not seem to be contributing very much to the efforts of the Chair.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will have a little patience, perhaps——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not proceed without unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course, I do not suppose the motion would be in order unless I had unanimous consent, but I ask unanimous consent that the report be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs without further reading.

Mr. CALDWELL. And that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have already made the motion that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if my memory is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I ask for recognition on the motion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then it will have to be read, of course.

Mr. GILLETT. To save time, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed without reading. Of course, it will be read, if the House wishes it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, I shall not interpose further objection to the gentleman proceeding.

Mr. ANTHONY. Ordinarily an officer appointed in the reserve who receives an order to the active list and is ordered to duty, if he declines that order to active duty, goes back to his status as a citizen. He is dropped from that list. In this case, Mr. Meyer was not dropped from his status as an officer on the inactive list, but for some purpose was kept on the list, and the report from the department neglects to give us that information.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COX. I wish the War Department had answered the gentleman's resolution. Will not the gentleman introduce another resolution and ask for the information again?

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall renew my motion that this answer be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and then I will introduce another resolution and ask for further information. The case of Mr. Meyer slumbered along all winter until March of the present year, when a reclassification of men eligible to the draft was made. I have ascertained upon good information that about March 17 Mr. Meyer was given a new designation to class 1. The probabilities were strong that this man would be taken in the next draft. Thereupon, by some mysterious influence, Mr. Meyer received an appointment as a captain in the Aviation Corps—the nonflying branch. That appointment was obtained in the face of repeated statements from the War Department that they would not assign young men who were on the draft list to commissions in the Army unless they were specially qualified from a technical standpoint. Yet Mr. Meyer is given an appointment as captain in the Aviation Corps in the nonflying branch. In order to secure that appointment the Medical Department of the War Department, through some mysterious influence, gives an order waiving a deficiency of 16 pounds in weight, all of which is omitted in the present report. I also understand that in this case some one secured a statement from an officer of the Signal Corps to the effect that this man's services were very badly needed in the Aviation Corps—the nonflying branch—because of the fact that among the 3,500 officers on duty in that corps there were none available that could perform the duty for which he was desired, a preposterous statement on its face. That is the foundation that is carefully laid in the department. Now, after he is appointed, in the face of such a situation, the duties to which he was assigned, as I understand it, were those of superintending the construction of buildings in a camp somewhere out West, a duty that anyone of the 3,500 officers on duty could have performed or perhaps better by some civilian foreman. By the same mysterious influence this man is jumped over the heads of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of other officers already in the Aviation Corps. I hope the House will send for all that information. I want to ask that a stop be put to political influences securing such appointments in the War Department. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. COX. Is this man in class 1?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand the reclassification in his case was made on March 17, and that he was put in class 1, and that on the day before or after the department gave him this appointment as captain, which made him safe.

Mr. COX. There is no question but that he is of the draft age?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no quesion but he is of draft age.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know whether he is married or single?

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand he is married.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. The gentleman is very much opposed to political influence in appointments by the War Department, as I understand it?

Mr. ANTHONY. I absolutely am.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Would my colleague be willing to inform the House just how many appointments from his district there are in Gen. Crowder's office and in the Judge Advocate General's office?

Mr. ANTHONY. From my district?

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know exactly. I think a couple of officers have been appointed from my district; perhaps three officers; and I will state that two of them were appointed on the initiative of the department alone, without consulting with any Member of Congress or any Senator that I have heard of.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Would the gentleman be willing to state what their politics is?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not say as to that. I am not discussing appointments in Gen. Crowder's office. I am discussing appointments in the line of the Army, and in the Army as a whole.

Mr. CALDWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. CALDWELL. I want to speak on the motion when the gentleman has concluded.

The SPEAKER. That can be dealt with later.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to proceed, the country has been scandalized by publications in the great newspapers of the country, especially the Chicago Tribune, of lists of hundreds of young men, most of them members of prominent families, most of them of very rich families of the millionaire class, most of them with strong political connections, who in the face of repeated assurances from the War Department to Members of Congress that men of the draft age will not be directly commissioned, have been appointed and assigned to noncombatant places in all the different bureaus of the War Department scattered over the country, where they can not smell powder, as a gentleman in my rear suggests. There is no doubt but that the power of appointment in the War Department has been grossly abused.

And before I close my remarks here on the floor and ask that the reply of the Acting Secretary of War be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs for further action, I want to express my fear that in the present crisis which faces the country the War Department is not taking proper steps to provide sufficient trained commissioned officers for the great army we are trying to raise.

For the last three months the War Department seems to have been stricken with a palsy in the matter of raising a great body of commissioned personnel to officer the next body of troops that we are going to put into the field. For several months the originally established training camps of the line have not been in operation in this country. They were abandoned in favor of training men in the cantonments with the troops. I happen to know that a section of the General Staff has made the strongest kind of recommendations to the Secretary of War that immediate steps be taken toward the training of another large body of commissioned officers to officer the next body of men that we are going to draft in this country, and so far the department has not taken a single step along that line. Gen. McCain believes we should have a reserve of 50,000 trained officers of the line to make up possible losses in the field in France, and Gen. Wood only to-day urges that another large body of men be put into immediate training for commissions. I say it is time that some life were shown and some activity displayed toward raising and training not less than 50,000 commissioned officers to train and lead the next great draft of troops that are to be called into service.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that no steps are being taken to provide training for officers?

Mr. ANTHONY. No steps are being taken to reopen or establish the original training camps for the training of officers of the line.

Mr. HAYDEN. A series of training camps started on January 5, and they are just closing now, at every cantonment in the United States. A Member of this body has been training at one of these camps.

Mr. ANTHONY. Those are training camps most largely for enlisted men who are on duty at those cantonments; but the training camps proper, for officers of the line, as I understand it, closed several months ago.

Mr. HAYDEN. These are for officers of the line. I am sure the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does not the gentleman think the proper policy is what the department is doing, recognizing at these training camps these men who have had the courage to go into the enlisted ranks? Does the gentleman want to indorse the idea of taking men from civilian life and putting them into training camps?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I appreciate what the department has done, but within the next month or two all of these organizations will be in France, where they ought to be. We are going to raise a great levy of absolutely untrained men, and in my opinion it is not good military policy to take the commissioned officers altogether from the ranks of these new levies of men. Enough men best fitted to be officers ought to be in training now at properly established officers' training camps before we withdraw all these organizations from this country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to make the point of order that the gentleman from Kansas is not discussing the matter before the House. The gentleman was given consent to discuss a report, the reading of which had not been completed, and to dispose of it in a very few moments. The gentleman did proceed for a time to discuss that report in his own way, but now he has branched off into another proposition entirely. It seems to me the gentleman ought to proceed in order, out of regard for those of us who did not object to the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think the gentleman has the slightest ground for his assertion. My remarks have been entirely along the line of the subject of my inquiry, and I have kept faith with the House, because my remarks have taken less time than it would have taken to read the report; and if it will relieve the gentleman's mind any I will state to him that I am about through with the few words that I have had to say.

The SPEAKER. The question involved in this report was about one man, and the gentleman's later remarks have been concerning the War Department.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the Speaker that the question involved the appointment of a great many other men.

Mr. SLAYDEN rose.

Mr. ANTHONY. If I may yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], I will after that move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman just now stated that he approved of the policy of the War Department in promoting men from the ranks to be commissioned officers?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has there been a proper rigid adherence to that policy?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; there has not. There has been the widest divergence from that policy, as I say, in the matter of these favored sons with political influence and sons of families able to pull the strings.

On March 22, 1918, this article appeared in the Chicago Tribune:

[By a staff correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 21 (special).

Reports that commissions have been issued to 62,000 noncombatant officers, although the combatant officers number only 63,000, and that thousands of the noncombatant officers are of draft age, are to be investigated by Congress.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs has decided to act, and Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, Democrat, to-day introduced a resolution calling on the War Department to state how many noncombatant reserve officers are of draft age.

"If reports are true, that there has been wholesale commissioning of young men of draft age to staff jobs, whereby they not only escape the draft but will escape fighting for their country, I do not think it is a very good thing for the morale of the American Army," Senator THOMAS said.

A MAZE OF UNIFORMS.

Washington is the grand headquarters of the noncombatant officers, for there are few men, young or old, of the thousands performing even clerical duties in the war offices who have been unable to obtain commissions. There have not been so many uniforms in Washington since the grand review of the Union Army at the close of the Civil War.

Many young officers of wealth and influence are sharing the discomforts of an overcrowded Capital with hundreds of men of draft age, but in more modest circumstances, who have obtained noncombatant commissions, War Department clerkships carrying exemptions from the draft at the request of Secretary Baker or assignment by Secretary of the Navy Daniels to the "inactive list" of the Naval Reserve.

THE CASE OF BROWN.

Perhaps the most unusual noncombatant commission so far issued is that possessed by L. Ames Brown, the 27-year-old bosom friend of Secretary Tumulty and late assistant of George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information. Young Mr. Brown, placed in class 1 of the draft during his service in the Creel bureau, was made a first lieutenant and assigned to "intelligence duties solely" in Washington and New York, with the proviso that he should "not be assigned to any other duty or the command of troops under this appointment."

Humphrey Redfield, son of the Secretary of Commerce, is an assistant pay clerk, with a desk in the Navy Supply Bureau. He was commissioned an ensign after his graduation from Amherst College, and since that time has married and brought his bride to Washington.

ONE DANIELS IN SERVICE.

The only one of Secretary Daniels' four sons in the service is Josephus, jr., who enlisted in the Marine Reserve Corps and was assigned to duty in the Marine Corps office in Philadelphia. Recently he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Quartermaster Department of the Marine Corps Reserve. Lieut. Daniels's duties do not take him to sea.

Secretary of Agriculture Houston's son, David, jr., has been commissioned an ensign in the Navy and assigned to duty on a patrol vessel in the second naval district. His service will be on the New England coast.

Secretary of State Lansing has no children. The only representative of the family in the commissioned ranks of the service is John Foster Dulles, Mrs. Lansing's nephew, who has been commissioned a captain and assigned to the Army War College.

HAMMOND IS EXEMPTED.

John Hays Hammond, jr., son of the millionaire mining engineer, is in Washington, engaged in work upon the radio torpedo which he invented, and which he believes can be made useful in this war. The device is to be given a test eventually, he says, by a War Department board headed by Gen. Wood. Mr. Hammond was exempted from the draft at the request of Secretary of War Baker.

A younger brother, Richard Hammond, enlisted in the Naval Reserve as a boatswain's mate, first class, in May, 1917, and is now in the Yale unit of the Naval Reserve in training for eventual service on a coast-patrol vessel in the New England district. Service on coast-patrol vessels is confined to this side of the Atlantic. Another brother, Harris Hammond, who was married last week, is engaged in business in New York.

STRAIGHT IS A MAJOR.

Willard Straight, of the American International Corporation, was commissioned a major early in the war and sent to France for a short time to straighten out the question of pay allowances and insurance for soldiers and dependents. Maj. Straight, who was formerly in the American Diplomatic Service, married Dorothy Payne Whitney, daughter of the late millionaire, William C. Whitney.

Charles R. Crane, one of the President's most intimate friends, has three of his kin in the Government service. Two are in Washington, while a young nephew, Charles R. Crane, 2d, is a second lieutenant in the Ordnance Procurement Division, assigned to Chicago.

These Ordnance Department assignments are generally called "bomb-proof" jobs in Washington parlance.

SOME CHICAGOANS THERE.

Among Chicagoans who have been busy with war work in Washington is Jack Peabody, son of F. Stuyvesant Peabody, who, it is reported, has been assigned to the Department of Gases, United States Army.

George R. Nichols, jr., is a captain of ordnance, whose assignment has been in Washington. He is a son-in-law of Dr. Frank Billings. Charles Barnett Goodspeed, of Chicago, is also an ordnance officer, with an assignment, at last reports, in this city.

Edward S. Moore, also a millionaire Chicagoan, is now a major of ground aviation.

Thomas S. Chalmers, of Chicago, son of William J. Chalmers, former vice president of Allis-Chalmers, is in the procurement division of the Ordnance Bureau, and has taken an appointment in Washington.

Perry H. Keeney, a wealthy young Chicago lawyer, Harvard '06, obtained a captain's commission in the National Army, although not being required to pass through an officers' training camp, and has been assigned to duty at the War College.

W. J. Carboy, son-in-law of former Gov. Dunne, of Illinois, is a second lieutenant in the contract section of the Ordnance Bureau.

Melvin Ericson, the young son-in-law of Charles G. Dawes, was brought to Washington as confidential assistant to Secretary Baker. Later he was given a commission as captain in the Signal Reserve Corps. Recently he filed charges against Gen. Thomas Cruse, retired.

HE'S A NONFLYER.

Charles Marshall, brother of Mrs. Marshall Field, 3d, was recently commissioned a first lieutenant in the nonflying branch of the Aviation Service and assigned as adjutant of the One hundred and eighty-fourth Aero Squadron, at Hicks, Tex. Although under 30, Lieut. Marshall is wealthy. He married Miss Alice Huntington, sister of Mrs. Vincent Astor. The Marshalls spent the winter in Washington, occupying Ivanwold, a Virginia estate, a few miles from the Capital.

Winthrop Murray Crane, jr., son of the former Senator from Massachusetts, is a major in the Ordnance Supply Bureau here.

Burchell Dunbar Adams, a wealthy New Yorker, who married Edith Gracie, daughter of Col. Archibald Gracie, one of the Titanic survivors, was drafted, but later was able to secure a commission. He lived with his bride in the Gracie home in Nineteenth Street until recently transferred to New Haven, Conn.

Anthony J. Drexel, jr., of Philadelphia, a member of the wealthy Drexel family, recently was made a second lieutenant and assigned to the Ordnance Department. He will live in Washington.

SON OF MRS. STOTESBURY.

After a six weeks' special course at Annapolis, an ensign's commission in the Navy was given to James H. Roberts Cromwell, son of Mrs. Edward Stotesbury, who recently accepted the chairmanship of the Woman's Naval Auxiliary of the Red Cross, created by Secretary of the Navy Danials to supplant the Navy League Comforts Committee, which had incurred his displeasure. Mrs. Stotesbury built a submarine chaser for her son, with the understanding that he was to command it. The Government, however, did not accept the boat, and she has now presented it to the New York post of the Junior Naval Reserve as a training craft.

Ensign Cromwell has been assigned to the battleship Louisiana.

Robert Goelet, of the rich and prominent New York family of that name, received a captain's commission and was assigned to the postal censorship substation at New Orleans.

Col. E. M. House, the President's chief confidant, has no sons, but has two sons-in-law, one of whom, young Gordon Auchincloss, is in the office of—

And so forth.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have submitted the names of a good many gentlemen who have not been appointed.

The SPEAKER. The question of the gentleman from Texas and the answer of the gentleman from Kansas are extraneous to this subject.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, that is not at all necessary. Under the rules of the House the report would go to the committee.

The SPEAKER. That would be true if the Chair had not interrupted the reading of the report, and the Chair wanted to get the House out of the hole it got into. This report will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and further insist upon its amendment No. 44, still in disagreement.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LEVER presented a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9054) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, to be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

LIABILITY TO MILITARY SERVICE OF CERTAIN REGISTERED PERSONS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the joint resolution under consideration yesterday.

The Clerk read the title of S. J. Res. 123, providing for the calling into military service of certain classes of persons registered and liable for military service under the terms of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move the previous question on this joint resolution and all the amendments to the final passage?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am entitled to the floor. I claim the floor on the amendment which I offered. I wish to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent——

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No; I had the floor when the House adjourned yesterday.

The SPEAKER. That is true. The gentleman undoubtedly had the floor. The only thing that the Chair was studying about was whether the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] had the right to move the previous question at this particular juncture.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my motion.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, but it was distinctly understood that if he yielded the floor for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] to move to adjourn the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRISON] would have an hour when we reconvened this morning. On that statement is he not entitled to recognition by the Speaker immediately upon the taking up of this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he is.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday evening, when I introduced this amendment to the present bill, it embodied in terms a bill that I had already introduced earlier in the session, and which had been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Now, I have been assured by the Committee on Military Affairs that that bill, which is now before them, will receive their prompt consideration and action. The question has never been debated or passed on by the committee, and therefore I am anxious to have the committee consider it and not embarrass the present legislation by injecting into it a matter that might complicate the operation of the draft under the law as it is now framed. All I desire is to secure for the people who I think need protection from the draft consideration by this House of their claims. The only purpose of the amendment was to place farm labor on the same footing that is given labor in shipbuilding yards. In view of the fact that the adoption of this amendment may embarrass the prompt passage of the necessary legislation for the new draft, and in view of the fact that this matter has never been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, that there is a bill now pending before it which has the same object, which I am assured will receive prompt consideration, I ask leave to withdraw the amendment. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia withdraws his amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. BURNETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. As I understood the ruling of the Chair a short time ago, in a matter that is before the House the gentleman has no right to withdraw it without unanimous consent. I want to know, because I want to register my opposition to the withdrawal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has in mind the rule that prevails in Committee of the Whole. Anybody can withdraw anything in the House without asking unanimous consent, clear up to the time it is voted on. It is not so in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Kentucky moves the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WALSH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The resolution having been considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, is it in order to take a separate vote on the amendments agreed to by the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is the universal practice.

Mr. GARNER. I think the Speaker is mistaken about that. I want to suggest to the Chair that if he will refer to the precedents he will find that where bills are considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole and amendments adopted it is not necessary to take another vote on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I rise to inquire of the Speaker what action was taken by the House as to that part of the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska which struck out certain language of the resolution. The RECORD, on page 5438, shows:

> The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the Shallenberger amendment.
>
> Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of the amendment.
>
> The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky demands a division of the amendment, and the Clerk will report the first proposition in it.
>
> The Clerk read as follows:
>
> "Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, called under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' shall hereafter be determined in proportion to the total number of persons registered and liable for military service therein, including resident aliens who have waived all claims for exemption."
>
> The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to that proposition, the first half of the Shallenberger amendment.

As far as I recall, no action has been taken by the House on the substantive proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska to strike out a certain part of the Senate resolution. The fact is the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska was not a motion to strike out and insert, but a substantive proposition to strike out certain lines of the joint resolution as reported to the House and to add—not to insert in lieu thereof—but to add at the conclusion of the Senate resolution certain substantive propositions which were divisible under the ruling of the Chair into two parts. Action has been taken by the House on the substantive parts of the divisible proposition, but no action, so far as the RECORD shows and followed the procedure in the House, has been taken on that part of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska which sought to strike out a certain portion of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, the question which the gentleman from Wisconsin raises was raised yesterday, when we voted on the measure. If the Chair will observe the language of the resolution, that part of my amendment which proposed to strike out certain language of that resolution has no application whatever to the second part of my amendment, and when the attention of the Speaker was called to that in debate I made the statement, and the Speaker accepted it, that the portion of the amendment adopted went to the end of the bill, and that part which called for the striking out of certain language was defeated.

Mr. STAFFORD. No action has been taken by the House on the substantive proposition to strike out, which was a distinct proposition of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Notwithstanding the lack of action on the part of the House, as claimed by the gentleman from Wisconsin, I submit that it is now too late for the House to act on the matter, the previous question having been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska is absolutely correct, that his amendment proposed to strike out certain things and the House refused to strike out, and then voted on the new matter added at the end of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit, no action at any time has been taken by the House on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska to strike out these lines.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I think if the gentleman will reflect, he will recall that the part of the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska to strike out was read as the first half of his amendment when the amendment was defeated.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will refer to the RECORD he will see——

Mr. WALSH. I do not care what the RECORD says.

Mr. STAFFORD. That no reference was made to that portion of the amendment in which it was sought to strike out certain lines of the resolution.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It certainly was read, for I noticed it, and that is borne out by the RECORD, on page 5059, where the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] says:

> The motion to strike out the lines of the first part of my amendment was voted down, and this will go to the end of the bill—

Referring to the second part of his amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. He may have made that statement, but no action was taken upon it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I submit in respect to the point of order that even if it is conceded that everything is precisely as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] states, it is perfectly immaterial. We have added substantive language to this resolution, by an amendment which did not require a preliminary motion to strike out anything. If the motion to strike out has never been acted upon, what earthly difference will that make? The amendment has added a new paragraph to the resolution. That action has been taken, and it is a matter of no concern whatever what becomes of the motion to strike out, which was necessary only in the event that the Shallenberger amendment was adopted as a whole. It was a necessary part of that portion of the Shallenberger amendment, which was rejected. Therefore, it may be fairly considered as nonexistent with respect to the amendment, which was actually adopted. Hence when that part of the amendment to which the motion to strike out applied, failed to carry, that action can be considered as a substantial disposition of the motion to strike out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Virginia is correct, and the vote is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 334, nays 3, answered "present" 9, not voting 85, as follows:

YEAS—334.

Alexander	Elston	Kreider	Sanders, Ind.
Almon	Emerson	La Follette	Sanders, La.
Anderson	Esch	Langley	Saunders, Va.
Anthony	Estopinal	Larsen	Schall
Ashbrook	Evans	Lazaro	Scott, Mich.
Aswell	Fairchild, B. L.	Lea, Cal.	Scott, Pa.
Austin	Fairchild, G. W.	Lee, Ga.	Scully
Ayres	Fairfield	Lehlbach	Sells
Baer	Farr	Lenroot	Shackleford
Bankhead	Ferris	Lesher	Shallenberger
Barkley	Fields	Lever	Sherley
Barnhart	Fisher	Linthicum	Sherwood
Beakes	Flood	Little	Shouse
Beshlin	Focht	Littlepage	Siegel
Black	Fordney	Lobeck	Sims
Blackmon	Foss	Lonergan	Sinnott
Bland	Foster	Longworth	Sisson
Booher	Francis	Lufkin	Slayden
Bowers	Frear	Lunn	Slemp
Brand	Freeman	McArthur	Sloan
Britten	French	McCulloch	Small
Browne	Fuller, Ill.	McFadden	Smith, Idaho
Browning	Fuller, Mass.	McKenzie	Smith, Mich.
Brumbaugh	Gard	McKeown	Smith, C. B.
Buchanan	Garland	McKinley	Snell
Burroughs	Garner	McLaughlin, Mich.	Snook
Butler	Garrett, Tenn.	Madden	Stafford
Byrns, Tenn.	Garrett, Tex.	Magee	Steagall
Caldwell	Gillett	Mansfield	Stedman
Campbell, Pa.	Glynn	Mapes	Steele
Cannon	Godwin, N. C.	Martin	Steenerson
Cantrill	Goodwin, Ark.	Mays	Stephens, Miss.
Caraway	Gould	Merritt	Sterling, Ill.
Carlin	Graham, Ill.	Miller, Minn.	Stevenson
Carter, Okla.	Gray, Ala.	Montague	Stiness
Cary	Green, Iowa	Moore, Pa.	Strong
Chandler, N. Y.	Greene, Mass.	Moores, Ind.	Sumners
Chandler, Okla.	Greene, Vt.	Morgan	Sweet
Church	Gregg	Morin	Swift
Clark, Fla.	Griffin	Mott	Switzer
Clark, Pa.	Hadley	Mudd	Tague
Classon	Hamill	Nelson	Talbott
Claypool	Hamilton, Mich.	Nicholls, S. C.	Taylor, Ark.
Coady	Hamlin	Nichols, Mich.	Temple
Collier	Hardy	Nolan	Thompson
Connally, Tex.	Harrison, Va.	Oldfield	Tillman
Connelly, Kans.	Haskell	Oliver, Ala.	Tilson
Cooper, Ohio	Hastings	Oliver, N. Y.	Timberlake
Cooper, W. Va.	Haugen	Olney	Treadway
Cooper, Wis.	Hawley	Osborne	Van Dyke
Cox	Hayden	O'Shaunessy	Vare
Crago	Hayes	Overstreet	Venable
Cramton	Heaton	Padgett	Vestal
Crisp	Helm	Paige	Vinson
Crosser	Helvering	Park	Voigt
Currie, Mich.	Hersey	Parker, N. J.	Wallow
Dale, N. Y.	Hilliard	Peters	Walsh
Dale, Vt.	Holland	Phelan	Walton
Dallinger	Houston	Platt	Ward
Darrow	Howard	Polk	Wason
Davidson	Hull, Iowa	Pou	Watkins
Davis	Hull, Tenn.	Pratt	Watson, Pa.
Dempsey	Humphreys	Price	Watson, Va.
Denison	Husted	Purnell	Weaver
Dent	Igoe	Quin	Webb
Denton	Ireland	Ragsdale	Welling
Dewalt	Jacoway	Rainey	Welty
Dickinson	James	Raker	Whaley
Dill	Johnson, Ky.	Ramseyer	White, Me.
Dillon	Jones, Tex.	Randall	White, Ohio
Dixon	Kahn	Rayburn	Williams
Dominick	Kearns	Reavis	Wilson, Ill.
Dooling	Keating	Reed	Wilson, La.
Doolittle	Kehoe	Robbins	Wilson, Tex.
Doremus	Kelley, Mich.	Roberts	Wingo
Doughton	Kelly, Pa.	Rodenberg	Winslow
Drane	Kennedy, Iowa	Rogers	Wood, Ind.
Dupré	Kennedy, R. I.	Romjue	Woodyard
Dyer	Key, Ohio	Rose	Wright
Eagan	Kiess, Pa.	Rouse	Young, N. Dak.
Eagle	Kincheloe	Rubey	Young, Tex.
Edmonds	Kitchin	Rucker	Zihlman
Elliott	Knutson	Russell
Elsworth	Kraus	Sabath

NAYS—3.

Burnett	Gordon	Huddleston

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—9.

Bell	Lundeen	Thomas	Wheeler
Blanton	Mondell	Tinkham	Wise
Good.

NOT VOTING—85.

Bacharach	Gallivan	Kinkaid	Riordan
Borland	Gandy	LaGuardia	Robinson
Brodbeck	Glass	London	Rowe
Byrnes, S. C.	Goodall	McAndrews	Rowland
Campbell, Kans.	Graham, Pa.	McClintic	Sanders, N. Y.
Candler, Miss.	Gray, N. J.	McCormick	Sanford
Carew	Griest	McLaughlin, Pa.	Scott, Iowa
Carter, Mass.	Hamilton, N. Y.	McLemore	Sears
Cleary	Harrison, Miss.	Maher	Smith, T. F.
Copley	Heflin	Mann	Snyder
Costello	Heintz	Mason	Stephens, Nebr.
Curry, Cal.	Hensley	Meeker	Sterling, Pa.
Decker	Hicks	Miller, Wash.	Sullivan
Delaney	Hollingsworth	Moon	Taylor, Colo.
Dies	Hood	Neely	Templeton
Donovan	Hutchinson	Norton	Towner
Dowell	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overmyer	Volstead
Drukker	Johnson, Wash.	Parker, N. Y.	Walker
Dunn	Jones, Va.	Porter	Woods, Iowa
Fess	Juul	Powers
Flynn	Kettner	Ramsey
Gallagher	King	Rankin

So the Senate joint resolution was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. SEARS with Mr. DOWELL.

Mr. DECKER with Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. BORLAND with Mr. GOOD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina with Mr. HICKS.

Mr. GALLIVAN with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. ROWE.

Mr. GANDY with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. CURRY of California.

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. BRODBECK with Mr. TINKHAM.

Mr. DOUGHTON with Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. CAREW with Mr. PARKER of New York.

Mr. CLEARY with Mr. SANFORD.

Mr. DELANEY with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

Mr. DIES with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. DONOVAN with Mr. FESS.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. GOODALL.

Mr. HEFLIN with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOOD with Mr. GRIEST.

Mr. JONES of Virginia with Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. KING.

Mr. MCLEMORE with Mr. KINKAID.

Mr. MAHER with Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOON with Mr. MASON.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. MILLER of Washington.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. RAMSEY.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. STERLING of Pennsylvania with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. VOLSTEAD.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. JUUL.

Mr. MCCLINTIC with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, three of my colleagues, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. BACHARACH, and Mr. GRAY, are unavoidably absent. If they were present, they would all vote "yea."

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the statement that my colleague, Mr. CANDLER, is sick and unable to be here. If he were present he desires me to state that he would vote "yea" for the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. MEEKER, is unavoidably absent to-day, and if he were present he would vote "yea" for this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall listening when his name was called?

Mr. BLANTON. I came in just after my name was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask to be marked "present."

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] is sick and confined to his room. He wishes me to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts, is absent on account of illness. He desires me to say that if he were present he would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. FIELDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

GENERAL EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen have 10 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on Senate resolution 123.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen have 10 legislative days in which to extend remarks on the resolution just passed. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, requested me to say that if he were present he would vote for the bill.

TO PUNISH THE DESTRUCTION OR INJURY TO WAR MATERIAL, ETC.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the bill S. 383, known as the sabotage bill, and ask to have it printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 383. An act to punish the destruction or injury of war material and war-transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means and forbid the hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I desire to be recorded as present on this vote.

The SPEAKER. Too late.

Mr. TINKHAM. But I was present.

The SPEAKER. Why did not the gentleman answer "present"?

Mr. TINKHAM. Because I happened to be in the door, that is all. I wanted to vote "yea," but could not hear my name when called.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman was present, he has a right to be recorded present.

Mr. TINKHAM. Thank you.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] be permitted to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] be permitted to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, my apology for taking even five minutes of the time of the House at this time is the very serious situation on the western front and my desire to have the membership of the House visualize it. We read in the morning papers that Field Marshal Haig has issued a statement to his men to the effect that they are standing with their backs against the wall and no more ground must be given. The wall to which he refers is indicated by the gray line on this map.

These two maps are two sheets of the same map and connect here [indicating]; the one that is at the top should be moved down until it joins the lower one here [indicating]. It is a map on a scale of practically 4 miles to the inch, so that you can estimate the distance in that way.

Ten days ago I presented the lower section of this map, which showed the situation at that time in Picardy. The red line indicated here shows the then front, about 10 miles from Amiens. Since that time and up to April 5 the map shows only these slight gains indicated by the purple thread. The advance made from April 1 to April 5 was a minor thrust westward, just north of the Cojeul River, pushing out as far west as Mercatel and Neuville. Also, a little farther south from Ayette, pushing out to Douchy, reaching its greatest depth at Hebuterne and extending southward and slightly to the west, leaving Albert about a mile within the German lines. Since that time the changes have been so slight on that section of the map as to be difficult of recording, even on a map of this scale, 4 miles to the inch. The latest changes of any significance were in this corner [indicating], to the southeast of the Somme battle field.

On April 8 the line indicated in red here in the vicinity of Ypres on this northern half of the map was the line held. The line in brown is the line that was held on the night of the 9th of April. The territory included represents one day's work, breaking through the Portuguese sector of the line here [indicating] and pouring through on both sides of the break.

The next day's line is indicated by the green thread. You will note that to the north of Armentieres this line runs from Houthem, by way of Messines and Ploegsteert, to Houplines here, while on the south of Armentieres it runs from Premesques, through Sailly and Estairese, to a point 1 mile west of Richebourge, connecting at Givenchy, which latter has been held stubbornly since.

These two salients thrust westward on the second day created what is called in the papers "the pocket," in which is Armentieres. Note the two deep salients driven westward making the intervening eastward salient at Armentieres still deeper. It was so deep that it was untenable, and the British had to withdraw.

The white thread indicates the position on April 11. It runs from Hollebeke, approximately through Wytschaerte, Nieppe, Steenwerck, and Vieille Chapelle, connecting with the line of April 10 at a point 1 mile west of Richebourge, then down to Givenchy, the pivot, which has been held ever since.

The situation last night at 10 o'clock is indicated by the gray thread, much farther to the west, which includes almost as much territory as was taken the three days preceding. This line now runs from Wytschaerte, through Neuve Eglise, Bailleul, Vieux Berquin, Neuf Berquin, and Merville, rejoining the line of April 10 and 11 about a mile west of Richebourge, the line being about 4 miles from Bethune at the narrowest point.

This was the situation last night at 10 o'clock, according to the last dispatches that were received from Gen. Pershing and Gen. Bliss. This map was very kindly arranged for me by a competent officer in the Chief of Staff's office, and is as nearly correct as it can be made from the official dispatches. It contains no secret or confidential information, but is intended to be helpful, as I am sure it will aid us in more clearly visualizing the situation.

A MEMBER. What do you make out of the situation?

Mr. TILSON. It is far from hopeless, but bad enough.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How far is the line from Calais?

Mr. TILSON. About 40 miles. It is about 25 miles from the line to Dunkirk.

Mr. SUMNERS. What point of most strategic importance is made toward by the last thrust?

Mr. TILSON. The Channel ports.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What change has been made at the bottom of the map?

Mr. TILSON. Not enough to be indicated on the map.

Mr. ROGERS. Do you think that Ypres is the German objective now?

Mr. TILSON. I would not say that Ypres is the objective. Ypres is held by a very strong line at the east, very difficult to push back at that point. If the enemy pushes very much farther here to the south of Ypres it would probably render it untenable.

Mr. FARR. Where is Gen. Goff's army?

Mr. TILSON. It was down here in this section of the region of the Somme.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where the coal fields are?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TILSON. I thank you, gentlemen. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the military bill.

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman's speech on the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. DYER. Did the gentleman speak on the bill?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

Mr. ESCH. And I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] made the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Was an order made yesterday that those who spoke on the bill should have time for extending remarks?

The SPEAKER. That was the understanding of the Chair. The order was made that everybody who spoke could extend their remarks.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Have these requests been made to extend their remarks on the bill itself?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

PERSONAL STATEMENT.

Mr. OVERMYER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. OVERMYER. I want to make a statement. I was down at one of the departments when the vote was taken on the military bill. If I had been here, I would have voted "yea."

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUSSELL. To ask unanimous consent. There was a sort of tacit understanding yesterday, pension day, that after the bill then pending was finished the pension bill could be called up. I ask unanimous consent that the pension bill H. R. 11364 be now taken up and considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 11364. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11364) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for amendment.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Nathan L. Nims, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William B. Hazeltine, late of Company A, Twenty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jesse Mather, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert N. Lafferty, late of Company B, Fiftieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George M. Estes, late of Company H, Thirty-ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jesse Roark, late of Company M, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Hall, late of Company K, Fifteenth Regiment, and Company F, Tenth Regiment, West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Schofler, late of Company D, Tenth Regiment, and Company C, Second Regiment, Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sallie Blevins, helpless and dependent child of George Blevins, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month: Provided, That the pension heretofore granted Luzenia Brown shall not be affected by this act.

The name of Louis Irons, late of Company M, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph A. Craig, late of Company F, Seventy-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. Prior, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas J. Shocker, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Ames, widow of Florian W. Ames, late of Company C, Eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Josephus Gatten, late of Company G, Ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Frank F. Randolph, helpless and dependent child of William F. Randolph, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Mathew Stamets, late of Company K, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry C. Taylor, late of Company G, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph G. Kitchen, late of Company I, First Regiment Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph K. Kelly, late of Company F, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Barger, late of Company B, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Clay Jackson, late of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Miller, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Paul Schools, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George R. Watt, late of Company D, One hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary F. Church, widow of Milton Church, late of Company L, First Illinois Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Lulu Hendrixson, helpless and dependent child of William N. Hendrixson, late of Company E, One hundred and seventy-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infanty, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William H. H. Adams, late of Company I, Two hundred and sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William R. Pinson, late of Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joel A. Pugh, late of Company B, One hundred and ninety-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Goodman, late of Company K, Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David F. Black, late of Company I, Twenty-first Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and Company B, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Margaret J. Rogers, former widow of George Musser, late of Company F, Eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Jacob H. Gimstead, late of Company F, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lytle McCracken, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Fourth Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Beasley, late of Company G, Fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles J. Edington, late of Company C, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Sixth Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Felix Gremore, late of Company F, Ninety-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eli Miller, late of Company I, Eighty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Rolls, late of Company A, One hundred and seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sylvanus C Oppelt, late of Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George Stoneking, late of Company I, Twentieth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel B. Bailey, late of Company E, Sixty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David S. Oliphant, late of Company D, Thirty-fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Naylor, helpless and dependent child of Alfred Naylor, late of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Alfred H. Wrenn, jr., late of Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Emrich, late of Company H, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry R. Playford, late of Company G, Ninety-second Regiment, and Company I, Sixty-fifth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L. Campbell, late of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Groesbeck, late of Eighty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Wilkinson, late of Company F, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Donnells, late of Company E, Seventeenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Eliza J. Fosha, divorced wife of George W. Fosha, late of Company E, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of John Fasnacht, late of Company K, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Wyatt, late of Company F, One hundred and first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George H. Fuller, late of Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John J. Noftsinger, late of Company K, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Francis M. Harrell, late of Company C, Fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James N. Beasley, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hannah Lane, widow of Peter H. Lane, late unassigned, Twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of James M. Hummer, late of Company F, One hundred and fifty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of David A. Ladd, late of Company F, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John M. Goodwin, late of Company K, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nancy E. Benedict, widow of Lafayette Benedict, late of Company C, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Alvin W. Every, late of Company E, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Stephen K. Lyon, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Margie A. Raines, former widow of William Mathews, late of Company A, Twenty-sixth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Edward Springer, late of Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Wilson, late of Company B, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, Thirty-second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Patterson Short, late of Company A, One hundred and eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hamilton Campbell, late of Company E, Sixty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Reuben A. Anderson, late of Company B, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Richard C. Newsom, late of Company H, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles A. Young, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John P. Belt, late of Company D, Forty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John W. Harvey, late of Company G, Twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Horace E. Adams, late of Company H, Forty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary C. Landress, former widow of William Landress, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Polly Fields, widow of George Fields, late of Company M, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Eli Ingraham, late of Company G, Fiftieth Regiment New York Engineers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Quail Erity, late of Company H, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jerry A. Fitzgerald, late of Company G, Second Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adam A. Worthington, late of Company C, One hundred and eighty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Smith, late of Company K, Fifty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Buckle, late of Company E, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Carrie L. Kibbe, widow of Howard C. Kibbe, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Lucius S. Hitchcock, late of Company K, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nancy C. Jones, widow of Euphrates Jones, late of Company H, Sixty-third Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of James O. Batten, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nathan N. Spence, late of Company B, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Franklin Hereford, late of Company L, Sixth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Isaac Boyce, late of Company D, Third Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry C. Edmiston, late of Company E, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph L. Middleton, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Maria Wilson, widow of John H. Wilson, late of Company F, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Van Stewart, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Simeon D. Chelf, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Phedora J. Black, former widow of John L. Black, late of Company K, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of David A. Gage, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Emma Chase, widow of Augustus L. Chase, late of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Darius N. Shaw, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph W. King, late of Company F, Twenty-ninth Regiment, and Company E, One hundred and twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel Keene, late of Company B, Sixty-seventh Regiment, and Company F, Sixty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas R. Thompson, late of Company A, Seventy-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Annie Ridgway, widow of William Ridgway, late of Company E, Fifth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Burton M. Goines, late of Company A, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Stolcolp, widow of Frederick Stolcolp, late of Company D, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Hezekiah E. Hawver, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Bannon, late of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Ephraim Whitson, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry F. Sager, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Milton T. Bedford, late of Company B, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $27 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William H. McCurdy, late of Sixth Battery, Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lucian B. Walker, alias Burt Crowell, late of Company H, Forty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William S. Webb, alias William Stoddard, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Counts, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Mitchell Mason, late of Company F, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles B. Griffin, late of Company H, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles McCarroll, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Battery K, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Peter Minihan, late of Company E, One hundredth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram H. Reed, late of Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samual V. Bocock, late of Company H, Sixty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Julia A. Gorman, widow of Robert Gorman, late of Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Otis Gorman, helpless and dependent child of said Robert Gorman, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Julia A. Gorman, the name of said Otis Gorman shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Julia A. Gorman.

The name of Foster D. Brown, late of Company B, Forty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin Macy, late of Company H, One hundred and second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Sherrard, late of Companies A and C, Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Morrison, late of the Signal Corps, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Dallas Runyon, late of Company C, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, Second Regiment West Virginia Veteran Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Allen, late of Company D, Sixtieth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henrietta Schmidt, former widow of Peter Eberle, late of Company B, Thirty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Arvilla I. Briggs, widow of John F. Briggs, late of Company K, Eighth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Eva Briggs, helpless and dependent child of said John F. Briggs, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Arvilla I. Briggs, the name of said Eva Briggs shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Arvilla I. Briggs.

The name of Zerah T. Baker, late of Company G, Forty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Charles, late of Company H, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elijah L. Wyatt, late of Company B, First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joshua S. Fisher, late of Company C, First Battalion Delaware Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nathan C. Messick, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Molten R. Pepper, late of Companies F and C, First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sarah C. Frankford, widow of Edward Frankford, late of Company B, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Mathias Klingel, late of Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Archable Dougherty, late of Company F, Fiftieth Regiment, and Companies E and D, Fifty-second Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry W. Wright, late of Company C, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Martin De Glopper, late of Company D, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel W. Spring, late of Company B, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Engineers and Mechanics, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George D. McKinney, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel M. Boone, late of Company D, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Johnson Hatfield, late of Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Phineas B. Ewan, late of Company G, Sixty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Green, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elijah Coffman, late of Company F, Fifteenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William W. Agee, late of Company M, Third Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Henry Burcham, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel Jack, late of Third Independent Battery, Iowa Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George A. Burgess, late of Company F, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Lettie Edie, widow of Arthur S. Edie, late of Company A, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Mary E. Edie, helpless and dependent child of said Arthur S. Edie, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Lettie Edie, the name of said Mary E. Edie shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Lettie Edie.

The name of Martin T. Shadwick, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elijah J. Farlow, late of Company B, First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George W. Monmonier, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph Letzkus, late of Company G, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Davidson, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel J. Henderson, late of Company H, Fifteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sylvania Farmer, former widow of Denton Farmer, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of William B. Carr, late of Company E, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Horace E. Hand, late of Company H, First Regiment United States Sharpshooters, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Joseph B. Doan, late of Company E, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Edward Searls, late of Company H, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James Custer, late of Company I, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Welcome Ashbrook, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thaddeus Clark, late of Company B, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles J. Mead, late of Company F, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Jacob Hamon, late of Companies F and G, Eighth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William L. Stephenson, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment, and Company A, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Alonzo Green, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James F. McLuen, late of Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Etta C. Bartholomew, widow of William S. Bartholomew, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The name of Almeron D. Martin, late of Company D, Ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harriet L. MacGregor, widow of Peter MacGregor, late of Company H, First Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Charles H. MacGregor, helpless and dependent child of said Peter MacGregor, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Harriet L. MacGregor, the name of said Charles H. MacGregor shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Harriet L. MacGregor.

The name of Joseph Wiley, late of Company D, One hundredth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Hartley, helpless and dependent child of John Hartley, late of Company M, Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Myrtle Collver, helpless and dependent child of George W. Collver, late of Company B, One hundred and ninety-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of William H. Beal, late of Company I, One hundred and fifty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. King, late of Company F, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles Brady, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Sedonia A. Smedley, widow of Henry A. Smedley, late of Company L, Third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $37 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Lemuel T. Smedley, helpless and dependent child of said Henry A. Smedley, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Sedonia A. Smedley, the name of said Lemuel T. Smedley shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Sedonia A. Smedley.

The name of James A. Rives, late of Company E, Fiftieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William P. Underwood, late of Company B, Twenty-second Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel P. Thurber, late of Company B, Twelfth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Williams, late of Company F, Fifty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Benjamin F. Smith, late of Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Sare, late of Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Brocious, late of Company H, Ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of George C. Miller, late of Company B, Twentieth Regiment Iowa Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Mitchell, alias William Terow, late of Company C, Twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, Second Regiment New York Veteran Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John T. Axline, late of Company B, Second Battalion Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William A. Bivens, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 7, strike out "$36" and insert "$40."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment increases the pension of Charles H. Williams, late of Company F, Fifty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, from $36 to $40 per month.

This bill is a substitute for the following bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

H. R. 578. Nathan L. Nims.
H. R. 792. William B. Hazeltine.
H. R. 794. Jesse Mather.
H. R. 863. Robert N. Lafferty.
H. R. 864. George M. Estes.
H. R. 1152. Jesse Roark.
H. R. 1318. George W. Hall.
H. R. 1475. Jacob Schofler.
H. R. 1884. Sallie Blevins.
H. R. 2047. Louis Irons.
H. R. 2150. Joseph A. Craig.
H. R. 2521. William H. Prior.
H. R. 2627. Thomas J. Shocker.
H. R. 2799. Mary A. Ames.
H. R. 3574. Josephus Gatten.
H. R. 3583. Frank F. Randolph.
H. R. 3591. Mathew Stamets.
H. R. 3890. Henry C. Taylor.
H. R. 4052. Joseph G. Kitchen.
H. R. 4205. Joseph K. Kelly.
H. R. 4208. Jacob Barger.
H. R. 4324. Clay Jackson.
H. R. 4358. James Miller.
H. R. 4424. Paul Scheops.
H. R. 4649. George R. Watt.
H. R. 4930. Mary F. Church.
H. R. 5043. Lulu Hendrixson.
H. R. 5129. William H. H. Adams.
H. R. 5212. William R. Pinson.
H. R. 5454. Joel A. Pugh.
H. R. 5499. Benjamin F. Goodman.
H. R. 5502. David F. Black.
H. R. 5728. Margaret J. Rogers.
H. R. 5784. Jacob H. Olmstead.
H. R. 6088. Lytle McCracken.
H. R. 6311. James W. Beasley.
H. R. 6365. Charles J. Edington.
H. R. 6424. Felix Gremore.
H. R. 6631. Eli Miller.
H. R. 6632. James Rolls.
H. R. 6688. Sylvanus C. Oppelt.
H. R. 6689. George Stoneking.
H. R. 6734. Daniel B. Bailey.
H. R. 6840. David S. Oliphant.
H. R. 6865. George H. Naylor.
H. R. 7052. Alfred H. Wrenn, jr.
H. R. 7212. William Emrich.
H. R. 7213. Henry R. Playford.
H. R. 7307. William L. Campbell.
H. R. 7401. John W. Groesbeck.
H. R. 7593. John Wilkinson.
H. R. 7752. Joseph Donnells.
H. R. 7949. Eliza J. Fosha.
H. R. 7983. John Fasnacht.
H. R. 7990. William J. Wyatt.
H. R. 8025. George H. Fuller.
H. R. 8041. John I. Noftsinger.
H. R. 8098. Francis M. Harrell.
H. R. 8111. James N. Beasley.
H. R. 8120. Hannah Lane.
H. R. 8131. James M. Hummer.
H. R. 8281. David A. Laild.
H. R. 8369. John M. Goodwin.
H. R. 8379. Nancy E. Benedict.
H. R. 8449. Alvin W. Every.
H. R. 8505. Stephen K. Lyon.
H. R. 8542. Margie A. Raines.
H. R. 8555. Edward Springer.
H. R. 8663. Thomas Wilson.
H. R. 8743. Patterson Short.
H. R. 8862. Hamilton Campbell.
H. R. 8884. Reuben A. Anderson.
H. R. 9000. Richard C. Newsom.
H. R. 9070. Charles A. Young.
H. R. 9088. John Belt.
H. R. 9089. John W. Harvey.
H. R. 9115. Horace E. Adams.
H. R. 9130. Mary C. Landress.
H. R. 9196. Polly Fields.
H. R. 9203. Eli Ingraham.
H. R. 9225. Quail Erity.
H. R. 9266. Jerry A. Fitzgerald.
H. R. 9279. Adam A. Worthington.
H. R. 9435. George W. Smith.
H. R. 9443. Joseph Buckle.
H. R. 9469. Carrie L. Kibbe.
H. R. 9528. Lucius S. Hitchcock.
H. R. 9549. Nancy C. Jones.
H. R. 9588. James O. Batten.
H. R. 9634. Nathan N. Spence.
H. R. 9659. Franklin Hereford.
H. R. 9670. Isaac Boyce.
H. R. 9719. Henry C. Edmiston.
H. R. 9721. Joseph L. Middleton.
H. R. 9746. Maria Wilson.
H. R. 9757. Van Stewart.
H. R. 9759. Simeon D. Chelf.
H. R. 9789. Phedora J. Black.
H. R. 9804. David A. Gage.
H. R. 9805. Emma Chase.
H. R. 9821. Darius N. Shaw.
H. R. 9825. Joseph W. King.
H. R. 9921. Daniel Keene.
H. R. 9925. Thomas R. Thompson.
H. R. 9939. Annie Ridgway.
H. R. 9947. Burton M. Goines.
H. R. 9999. Mary A. Stolcolp.
H. R. 10015. Hezekiah E. Hawver.
H. R. 10017. William Bannon.
H. R. 10032. Ephraim Whitson.
H. R. 10056. Henry F. Sager.
H. R. 10089. Milton T. Bedford.
H. R. 10123. William B. McCurdy.
H. R. 10128. Lucian B. Walker, alias Burt Crowell.
H. R. 10145. William S. Webb, alias William Stoddard.
H. R. 10184. William W. Counts.
H. R. 10232. Mitchell Mason.
H. R. 10233. Charles B. Griffin.
H. R. 10253. Charles McCarroll.
H. R. 10314. Peter Minihan.
H. R. 10342. Hiram H. Reed.
H. R. 10343. Samuel V. Bocock.
H. R. 10348. Julia A. Gorman.
H. R. 10384. Foster D. Brown.
H. R. 10405. Benjamin Macy.
H. R. 10440. John Sherrard.
H. R. 10452. Joseph Morrison.
H. R. 10453. Dallas Runyon.
H. R. 10460. John H. Allen.
H. R. 10464. Henrietta Schmidt.
H. R. 10480. Arvilla I. Briggs.
H. R. 10486. Zerah T. Baker.
H. R. 10496. John Charles.
H. R. 10504. Elijah L. Wyatt.
H. R. 10508. Joshua S. Fisher.
H. R. 10510. Nathan C. Messick.
H. R. 10513. Molten R. Pepper.
H. R. 10533. Sarah C. Frankford.
H. R. 10559. Mathias Klingel.
H. R. 10560. Archable Dougherty.
H. R. 10561. Henry W. Wright.
H. R. 10570. Martin De Glopper.
H. R. 10571. Daniel W. Spring.
H. R. 10596. George D. McKinney.
H. R. 10635. Samuel M. Beone.
H. R. 10637. Johnson Hatfield.
H. R. 10641. Phineas B. Ewan.
H. R. 10645. Andrew J. Green.
H. R. 10647. Elijah Coffman.
H. R. 10677. William W. Agee.
H. R. 10678. Henry Burcham.
H. R. 10683. Samuel Jack.
H. R. 10686. George A. Burgess.
H. R. 10700. Lettie Edie.
H. R. 10706. Martin T. Shadwick.
H. R. 10707. Elijah J. Farlow.
H. R. 10729. George W. Monmoneir.
H. R. 10736. Joseph Letzkus.
H. R. 10737. John H. Davidson.
H. R. 10738. Samuel J. Henderson.
H. R. 10740. Sylvania Farmer.
H. R. 10751. William B. Carr.
H. R. 10756. Horace E. Hand.
H. R. 10769. Joseph B. Doan.
H. R. 10771. Edward Searis.
H. R. 10779. James Custer.
H. R. 10790. Welcome Ashbrook.
H. R. 10797. Thaddeus Clark.
H. R. 10812. Charles J. Mead.
H. R. 10829. Jacob Hamon.
H. R. 10831. William L. Stephenson.
H. R. 10837. Alonzo Green.
H. R. 10865. James F. McLuen.
H. R. 10866. Etta C. Bartholomew.
H. R. 10881. Almeron D. Martin.
H. R. 10906. Harriet L. MacGregor.
H. R. 10917. Joseph Wiley.
H. R. 10942. William A. Hartley.
H. R. 10946. Myrtle Collyer.
H. R. 10949. William H. Beal.
H. R. 10963. John H. King.
H. R. 10964. Charles Brady.
H. R. 10967. Sedonia A. Smedley.
H. R. 10968. James A. Rives.
H. R. 10986. William P. Underwood.
H. R. 11034. Samuel P. Thurber.
H. R. 11044. Charles H. Williams.
H. R. 11050. Benjamin F. Smith.
H. R. 11052. John A. Sare.
H. R. 11063. John Brocious.
H. R. 11089. George C. Miller.
H. R. 11095. William Mitchell, alias William Terow.
H. R. 11096. John T. Axline.
H. R. 11098. William A. Bivens.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. SMALL, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pascagoula, Wolf, Jordan, Pearl, and East Pearl Rivers, and Biloxi Harbor, Miss.: For maintenance, $15,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In all the bills heretofore passed, just after that provision for the Pascagoula, Wolf, Jordan, and other rivers, the item for the Yazoo River and its tributaries has been carried. I notice that in this bill that is put over with the Arkansas items. I was going to suggest that the item on page 9, beginning with line 7, be transferred to this point, if it is satisfactory. That is the place where it has always been.

Mr. SMALL. I can explain that. In the formulation of this bill it was arranged by engineer districts, and these two projects to which the gentleman refers just happen to be in different engineer districts. This was thought to be a better arrangement than the one we had heretofore followed, which was largely by location and nearness to each other. This arrangement is followed throughout the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Very well. I do not care to disturb it. I was just wondering why it was.

Mr. SMALL. That is the only reason.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. In referring to a bill of two or three years ago to see what provision was made for the Yazoo River, and then referring to this bill, a casual examination would indicate that the item had been omitted; but I have no objection to this arrangement, if the committee think it the better one.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to and including the mouth of the Missouri River: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $100,000.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. I wish to discuss briefly conditions on the Mississippi River, because it occurs to me that we are facing one of the most important problems in reference to inland-waterway navigation that can possibly be considered by this country. Briefly, I desire from the record to show conditions as they exist on this river at the present time. We have spent on the Mississippi River, in round numbers, or have appropriated, over $170,000,000. I have given a statement, and made some comparisons in the minority report, which ought to receive consideration from those who desire to know how the Government money is being expended and what return is had for this enormous expenditure.

I quote briefly from the hearings on page 85, where Col. Newcomer makes this statement regarding the upper Mississippi:

The 4½-foot project is said to have been completed on the upper Mississippi, and I think they have substantially that depth all the time. Of course, in a stream subject to such variations of stage such as the Mississippi, during these changes of stages it is always changing on the bar, and there will be some periods possibly when there may be a less depth than a depth of only 3½ feet.

Col. Keller was before our committee. He is a very able Army engineer, and he discussed this same question and suggested that there was an excellent depth of water at the present time in the river. This was at hearings on inland-waterway transportation, on page 19. Among other things the question was asked:

Mr. FREAR. Now, let us see on what point we are in agreement. We have spent something like $100,000,000 on the lower Mississippi from St. Louis down to New Orleans. That is a channel of 9 feet on the average, is it not?

Col. KELLER. It is supposed to be 8 feet from St. Louis to the mouth of the Ohio, and 9 feet from there down.

Mr. FREAR. Of course, that is a condition which is far better than in any European country, and yet we have no line of boats between these two points.

Col. KELLER. That is an admitted fact.

Mr. FREAR. And the commerce has depreciated, as estimated, 90 per cent, which I presume is true. Now, do you believe that the fault lies with the railroad systems?

Col. KELLER. Undoubtedly.

Again, a little further down, the question was asked:

Mr. FREAR. On the upper Mississippi we have appropriated something like $30,000,000 thus far and we have very little there. I think we will agree on that.

Col. KELLER. Yes.

In that, reference was made to the commerce, which is insigficant, with an average haul of only 14 miles. Appropriations on the Mississippi above the mouth of the Ohio reach over $50,000,000, with practically no result commercially on the finest inland waterway in the country.

On page 20 of this report the further statement was made by Col. Keller:

Mr. FREAR. Now, what do your people propose to do; what change do you propose to make at this time so as to eliminate this situation in regard to railroad discrimination in rates? You say you propose to place some boats upon the Mississippi River?

Col. KELLER. None for the purpose of curing the general situation. I have already explained that the boats are to be placed upon the upper Mississippi River, and they have been authorized to be built for a special purpose, and I think that that special use is possible in the face of existing railroad rates. There is no necessity for changing railroad rates in order to make special traffic profitable. That is Mr. Goltra's proposition. He has already satisfied himself, and the rest of us are agreed with him, that such business can be carried on without difficulty.

On page 21 Col. Keller says:

Col. KELLER. We have had many applications, but none that are predicated upon as tangible a basis as Mr. Goltra's. For example, the people who are interested in the New Orleans-St. Louis line, that has been under discussion for some time past in these two cities and elsewhere in the valley intervening, have been anxious to have the Government build a fleet of them much the same as is proposed by Mr. Goltra, and have expressed a desire to lease it from the Government. We have not up to the present time found any authority under which we construct such a fleet. The authority given by the Shipping Board to construct this fleet for Mr. Goltra is specially limited to that case alone.

Here we have a statement that Mr. Goltra's is the only application of many that could be considered, and that the authority given by the Shipping Board is for a fleet for Mr. Goltra, specially limited to his case alone.

Again, at the botton of page 20:

Mr. FREAR. The Government provides the boats?

Col. KELLER. Yes, sir; towboats and barges. We are going to build 4 towboats and 24 large barges.

Mr. FREAR. And they are to be leased; or what arrangement made?

Col. KELLER. Leased under equitable conditions to Mr. Goltra or an operating company.

I will show that the Government is to build these boats, at a cost of $3,360,000, for Mr. Goltra's use, as stated. That is the proposal.

On page 23 Col. Keller further says, in reply to a question:

Mr. FREAR. Do you believe, getting back to the original point, which is the important one in determining our action in regard to transportation, do you believe that this can be carried on profitably, notwithstanding the present railroad rates?

Col. KELLER. Yes, sir; I do; but on the upper Mississippi only in this special traffic—

Not for general or public use; only for this special traffic of Mr. Goltra's. What justification exists for this $3,360,000 contract to be made by the Shipping Board?

Eight years ago, Mr. Chairman, this Congress appropriated $500,000 and placed that money in the hands of our Army engineers for an experimental fleet upon the Mississippi River for the purpose of determining whether or not we can carry on any substantial commerce.

I will not read the conditions, but it provides that Congress is to receive reports of what use can be made of the river, to be determined by experiments.

Two years ago Congress again, as an amendment to a bill, passed a brief statute which provided that the engineers were to immediately make experiments and report within two years what could be done on this great river in stimulating commerce.

For eight years that other statute has been on the books, with $500,000 in the hands of the Army engineers for experimental work. We have put $170,000,000 into the Mississippi River for improvement. The Government engineers have been given from one to two million dollars annually in recent years for continual river improvement on the finest river in the world, on which we have lost 95 per cent of a once great commerce; and yet no report has come from the Army engineers to show that the stream can be utilized—that they are making any experiments. Why not? What have they been doing? To my mind it is an astounding situation. The report of Col. Townsend proposed to stop all improvements, except on the Mississippi and Ohio, until we could demonstrate that the rivers would carry commerce profitably, as rivers do in Europe—not to spend more for new improvements but to ascertain how to use those we have. And yet, in the hearings, the statement of Col. Keller is that there is practically no commerce on the river, and the Army engineers have not shown any development of commerce under the power given them to buy or build boats or to indulge in commercial experiments. Now comes an offer from Col. Goltra, of St. Louis, a private individual, who makes a statement that he has been given a lease, or is about to be given a lease, which has been referred to in the minority report—a lease of boats that are to be built by the Government at a cost of $3,360,000 for two dozen barges. That is in addition to four towboats, and I wish to read what he says on that same subject.

Col. Goltra, whose military title, I assume, is political, last year made experiments on the Mississippi River. He has a steel plant in St. Louis, and he proposed to carry ore from St. Paul to St. Louis and carry coal back, which, of course, if it can be done, will be of some commercial benefit to Col. Goltra, although in this case, as I have shown from Col. Keller's statement, it is for Col. Goltra's special purpose alone, and it is going to Col. Goltra's steel plant in boats for his special use. Referring to his past experience, which consisted in one trip on the river last year, on page 38 of the hearings on the inland waterways Col. Goltra says:

She drew between 5 and 6 feet. After struggling with the Nokomis to the extent of taking everything off of her except, as the captain expressed it, the cook and the paint, we finally succeeded in getting her down to St. Louis in the latter part of October, and when we got to Alton the barges were there awaiting us, and we hooked up and came into St. Louis, having no difficulty from that time on. The financial result being that all the money that had been made in going up the stream was lost in getting the Nokomis back to deep water, and about $10,000 besides. That is what it cost to get the boat down.

On this trip Col. Goltra had the use of Government boats for a nominal rental in making an experimental trip, as described.

In other words, he lost $10,000 in that trip, the only experimental trip we know anything about, and one in which he experimented with Government boats furnished by Army engineers.

Further down on the same page—38—he says of that trip:

We came down, I repeat, over that 675 miles with the lowest stage of water that there ever has been in the river, so far as history tells us, with no difficulty, comparatively speaking, with our load—the barges were loaded—but with all kinds of difficulty with the deep-water boat. In other words, it was clear that a deep-water boat was not a proper boat for the upper Mississippi in the low-water months of the year, and certainly not the proper boat when the river is lower than it was ever known to have been before.

In other words, Col. Goltra said with the river at a low stage, the lowest ever known, he was able to bring down loaded barges without difficulty. The trouble came with the experimental tow-boats they built, which drew about 6 feet of water. Think of engineers building boats of that draft for river traffic. But Goltra says nothing is the matter with the river.

Here is a further statement, on page 39, by Col. Goltra. He says:

I would state, gentlemen, that this was done on a commercial-sized basis. I call it to your attention again that what I was endeavoring to do was twofold: First, to find out whether the river was in a condition that made it and rendered it navigable now; and, second, the trip was made for the purpose of determining just exactly what was the kind of vessel or vessels best adapted for the purpose. Both of the objects sought were accomplished. To my surprise, gentlemen, the condition of the river from St. Louis to St. Paul was very much better than I had any idea. I was like a great many—in fact, like the people of St. Paul, who thought that I would never get through with that enormous fleet.

Let it be understood at this point that the river is in proper shape, plenty of water; but after spending nearly $170,000,000 it is minus boats, and the $500,000 given to the engineers to build boats has been without results, at least nothing has come to Congress.

We have the testimony of all these gentlemen—Col. Newcomer, Col. Keller, and Col. Goltra, all colonels—to the effect that on this river, upon which we have spent $170,000,000, that is to-day practically without any commerce, conditions are all that can be asked for carrying commerce. Col. Goltra now desires to make a contract, and is expecting to make a contract, not through the Rivers and Harbors Committee but through the Shipping Board. The Army engineers have refused to make any experiments worth while, because we have had no report from them that gives us any information of what can be done on the river. It is left for Col. Goltra.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I ask unanimous consent to put two or three paragraphs in the RECORD in regard to Col. Goltra's testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including the matter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. On page 48 Col. Goltra says as follows:

If I can eventually purchase this fleet for $1,700,000 that has cost $3,360,000, that money will cost me 6 per cent per annum; that is, $283 a day. I know the number of men that are going on that boat to operate it—I am speaking now of one boat—and I know how much they will cost and how much they will eat; that will cost me just $36 a day.

This is to prove he thinks he can make it profitable for himself in his steel business.

Further down on the same page he says:

My scheme contemplates creating a body politic, to be known, for instance, as the Mississippi Valley Transportation Co., and that transportation company will take over a railroad, the control of which I have secured—the option on the railroad—that railroad will bring over the coal from the mines, 25 miles down to the river, and the cost in the matter will be the cost of raising the coal and putting it on board the boat.

On pages 43 and 44:

Mr. SWITZER. Just one more question: Mr. Keller stated that the steamers would cost about $300,000. I don't believe he stated what the barges would cost; do you know?
Mr. GOLTRA. I think about $100,000.
Mr. SWITZER. Apiece?
Mr. GOLTRA. Apiece. They will cost more than twice as much as they would have cost several years ago.
Mr. FREAR. What will be the total?
Mr. GOLTRA. $3,360,000; that is the amount set aside.
Mr. FREAR. For this particular purpose?
Mr. GOLTRA. Yes, sir.
Mr. FREAR. Are any other contracts being proposed?
Mr. GOLTRA. Not that I know of. I am speaking about this thing because, with this thing a success, you will see a great many boats on that river eventually.

Referring to the new Liberty motor, Garabad experimental, $3,360,000 fleet, to be built by the Government, by Mr. Goltra, page 46:

Mr. FREAR. I understand there is no such boat in existence to-day.
Mr. GOLTRA. There is no such boat in existence to-day.

Col. Goltra will build them with Government money. On page 47:

Mr. FREAR. And you think the river is in good enough condition now to give a good test of that?
Mr. GOLTRA. Yes, sir; I think we better spend $3,500,000 now and find out whether our $30,000,000 expenditure was worth while. Uncle Sam could afford to throw that over and give me the boats in the end.
Mr. FREAR. Do you think you could do that with the present railroad rates?
Mr. GOLTRA. Yes, sir; I was coming to that.
Mr. SWITZER. You think this traffic will continue?
Mr. GOLTRA. Yes, sir; I have ideas about that matter that will interest you. At first you may disagree with me, but on reflection I think you will agree with me. The cost per ton per mile: If I can eventually purchase this fleet for $1,700,000 that has cost $3,360,000, that money will cost me 6 per cent per annum—that is $283 a day. I know the number of men that are going on that boat to operate it—I am speaking now of one boat—and I know how much they will cost and how much they will eat; that will cost me just $36 a day.

And so on. He figures that if the Government will build in these times of war stress when labor is high and he can buy back from the Government at half price, or $1,700,000, that it will be a good bargain for him sure. If the Government would pay his railway freight charges now, it would be very convenient. Remember this is not a war proposition. It will take two or three years presumably to build these boats for Col. Goltra to be used by him exclusively in his steel business.

Here is what he says about this fleet on page 47:

If I do not keep it going, if I do not do what I say, Uncle Sam will lose every dollar he puts into it, excepting the boats.

That is a prospect which at least ought to give your Uncle Sam a jolt.

Down further on that same page, 47, he says:

I think we had better spend $3,500,000 now and find out whether our $30,000,000 expenditure was worth while. Uncle Sam could afford to throw that over and give me the boats in the end.

I believe that was read before, but think of the proposition about to be put over by the Shipping Board with Government money. All for Col. Goltra's private business.

There is no question, I presume, if we can develop any commerce there, that it is wise to make an experiment. That is what Congress gave a half million dollars to the engineers to demonstrate. But this is a gift of $3,360,000 to Col. Goltra. Why? I have objected in my report to making this private contract when the Army engineers have been directed, with half a million dollars placed in their hands, to determine whether that river can be made commercially valuable. I have stated at all times that we ought to improve the channel of the river. That is what we have done to the extent of $170,000,000, which is an enormous amount to waste unless we use the river. These expensive improvements have been going on, and are larger than they were many years ago, yet with a loss of 95 per cent in the commerce since we began improvements, ought to call attention of the country to what we have been doing blindly all this time.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman did not read all of that last sentence.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no; I want to state this in fairness to Col. Goltra, that he believes he can make a success of it, but what I say is, he lost $10,000 on the only trip he ever made, and he asks this Government to put $3,360,000 more into boats for his private use, and it is conceded by Col. Kellar that no other business can be served excepting Mr. Goltra's especial traffic. In that he appears to be right. Commerce is not to be established for any general purpose, but only for Col. Goltra's purpose, iron at one end and coal at the other. Not for any general commercial use. We are not improving the river for that purpose.

We are digging the channel in the river and putting this money in with the hope that the people of the whole country may utilize it, not for Col. Goltra's private purposes. I said to him in my office, "Will you reduce the cost of your ore if you can get those boats for $3,360,000?" and he said, "Excepting as it affects the general trade"; and that was a reasonable explanation. Grain, stock, lumber, and other commerce is not considered. Just for Mr. Goltra's private company, that seems to be the only use to be served. What I complain of is that, with this $500,000 placed in their hands, the authorized agents of the Government, the Army engineers, have made no effort to develop that river, notwithstanding they have expended nearly $170,000,000 received from Congress in the improvement of the river without developing any commerce; and now they permit this man to come here and take $3,360,000 of Government war funds, as he says, for his own private business uses, to build 28 experimental boats—nothing like them, he says, in existence. And he lost $10,000 on the only trip he ever made, and comes with the proposition that unless he can succeed those boats might as well be scrapped, because they will be of as little use to the Government as the $170,000,000 river which is now deserted. Is it not time to inquire where the money goes?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened attentively to what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] has said in reference to the operation of these barges by Mr. Goltra, of St. Louis. In my judgment Mr. Goltra is to be commended for his undertaking to demonstrate whether it is possible or not to navigate the river from St. Louis to St. Paul.

I remember a few years ago that there was appropriated $500,000 for the Army engineers to determine if possible some craft that might be used on this river, and everyone who is acquainted with the Mississippi River hoped that the Army engineers would be able to develop such a craft by this time and be able to give Congress some definite information of what might be done. Mr. Goltra has at least demonstrated that there is a channel in the Mississippi River that can be navigated. The Army engineers have apparently given up the fight, or at least they are not doing anything to demonstrate whether there can be navigation of the river as it now exists with some new craft. Mr. Goltra went up there with a fleet of barges when the river was at its lowest ebb, and while he did not make a financial success of his venture, he has developed the fact that it was possible to go there with these boats. There has always been a difference of opinion in reference to the Mississippi River between the Army engineers and people who are commonly called river men. It has occurred to me that men who have been on the river and who have known it most of their lives, who have navigated it for many years, may be able to demonstrate something more if they are given a chance, even though the Army engineers are unable to solve the problem. We all have great respect for the ability of Army engineers who have charge of this work, yet it has not been demonstrated that they are always infallible and that their judgment has always been the best that could be had. Others may make valuable suggestions, at least. So it seems to me that in a problem of this kind the views of these men ought to be taken into consideration and they ought to be given an opportunity to demonstrate whether they can make suggestions and demonstrate their ideas in reference to the navigation of this river. Especially at a time like this, when transportation is so necessary and when the Congress has met all of the demands that it ought to meet in the way of appropriations, it occurs to me that something further ought to be done.

I do not live on the river. I live on the other side of the State, but I have talked with some of these men who have navigated that river in the past, and they believe that there is a way even with the low water as it occurs in the summer time and the fall and with the river channel as it is now, in which that river can be navigated. I think it is important to the people of the Mississippi Valley if it can be shown there may be constructed some craft that can be put on the river and carry freight. As you all know, in southern Illinois and Kentucky we have coal in large amount that is transported to the North. There is a large amount of ore that needs transportation from the North to the South, especially to St. Louis. There are other commodities that might be transported by water. I say these few words in the hope that there may be some consideration given to these men who honestly believe that a craft can be constructed by which the river can be successfully used for navigation.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to take up the time of the committee, and I told the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I would not say anything at this time; but as there has been considerable criticism directed against Col. Goltra, to the effect that a venture that he now expects to engage in may be of some considerable advantage to him or those he represents at St. Louis, I feel that, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, it is my duty to express what I believe and my feelings about the matter at this time. I do not think that Col. Goltra should be criticized because he is in a venture that will move a commodity that may be of advantage to some industry that he represents or is interested in at the city of St. Louis. I would have the members of this committee look to the Monongahela River, which is is a branch of the Ohio, and whose navigation has been developed by the expenditure of twelve to fourteen million dollars. There will be a commerce this year upon that river of 20,000,000 tons, and it is an advantage directly to the men who have industries upon the banks of the Monongahela River, who in great measure own these industries and own the towboats and barges that engage in the handling of this great traffic upon that river, and to some extent it is true upon the Ohio. So I see no reason to criticize Mr. Goltra because he may be interested in some industry at St. Louis that desires to receive low-grade traffic up in Minnesota like iron ore. The testimony discloses that there is an abundance of iron ore near Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota, that can be transported down the Mississippi by barges at a low cost, competing with railway rates of to-day; and the testimony further discloses that there is coal in southern Illinois and in western Kentucky that can be transported from that region up to St. Paul and Minneapolis at a low cost by river transportation, thereby relieving the congested railway traffic of the Mississippi Valley. Now, it is stated by the engineers and by Col. Goltra that this sort of traffic can be carried on with competition with the railroad rate of to-day. Why, then, should I, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, criticize anyone? The fact is I desire the Shipping Board or any other board to demonstrate, if they can, the utility of the upper Mississippi and Ohio or Tennessee or any other stream. I have no objection if they can show some merit, some proof, that their scheme will succeed. I think that Col. Goltra has gone into this matter in good faith. Like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], I think he is to be commended. Trips can be made in six, seven, or eight days from St. Louis by water to St. Paul or Minneapolis, and vice versa.

In other words, you can take iron ore down by barge in 8, 10, or 12 days, where it takes 6 or 8 weeks now by rail. That is one advantage that may be of great help in prosecuting this war. Like the Panama Canal, to bring ships now constructed through the Panama Canal from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic may be of great advantage in helping to win the war, so, if we can utilize the Mississippi, or the Ohio River can be utilized as the Monongahela has been demonstrated it can be used, I see no reason why a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should object to a shipping board or any other board appropriating or being allowed any reasonable amount to demonstrate the utility of those rivers, and I want to say here that the testimony of those two gentlemen show that to-day pig iron can be brought from Birmingham to Sheffield, on the Tennessee River, down the Tennessee River, down the Ohio, up the Mississippi, and up the Illinois River to Peoria in much quicker time—in one-third or one-fourth the time—and at a much cheaper rate than transportation by rail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The observations of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] interested me, because ordinarily he is one of the most painstaking economists of the House. I was somewhat surprised indeed to observe that he would rise in defense of a proposition to turn over, in effect, Federal money to an individual, one of considerable influence, to organize a company for the purpose of experimenting upon a river, the success of whose navigation, the gentleman from Illinois admits, has not been altogether satisfactory. Col. Goltra, who is to have the privilege, or who already has the privilege, through the Shipping Board or Emergency Fleet Corporation——

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to say to the gentleman that Col. Goltra has no contract with the Shipping Board or anybody else. There has been no contract let, and nobody has got any claim on this proposition. Col. Goltra's proposition, Col. Keller said, was the best one they had, but they had not accepted any proposition. Col. Goltra on Thursday, in an interview in St. Louis, stated that there had been no proposition made to him at that time, and that he had accepted no proposition. He stated exactly as he testified before the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was taking into account the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], together with the data which he has placed in the minority report and the testimony which he cites as having been taken before the committee.

Mr. BOOHER. I think the gentleman is mistaken where he got his information. I do not know. I think instead of getting it from the hearings he got it from the private conversation he had with Col. Goltra.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. FREAR. I have given the testimony here in which Col. Keller recommends this proposition, in which Col. Goltra states he expects to have this contract.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman turn to the page where he stated anything of that kind before the committee?

Mr. FREAR. I do not want to take the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I would be glad to read it into the RECORD or to print it in the RECORD, as I have in the past.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman give the page?

Mr. FREAR. Let me ask the gentleman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield, does not the gentleman from Missouri understand that Col. Goltra expected to get this contract?

Mr. BOOHER. I do not know what he expects.

Mr. FREAR. That is the statement in the record of what he proposed to do.

Mr. BOOHER. Yes; he put his proposition, but I do not know what the others proposed to do, and Col. Keller said he did not, but they were receiving other applications.

Mr. FREAR. He said no other applications would be considered.

Mr. BOOHER. Where did Col. Keller say that?

Mr. FREAR. I will read it into the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Meanwhile, since Col. Goltra has come to our notice, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri just who he is?

Mr. BOOHER. He is a steel manufacturer in the city of St. Louis. He is a member of a large company. They get their coal from Illinois and their iron from Minnesota.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is he engaged in politics?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes. He is a Democrat.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is he a member of the Democratic National Committee?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes; and has been for years. It does not say so in the record, however.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He is a very strong man in St. Louis?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes. He is a very prominent business man, and he would be prominent anywhere.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is to such a man, I assume, that a contract of this kind ought to go.

Mr. BOOHER. Let me read what Col. Keller says.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was with that in mind that I commented on the project.

Mr. BOOHER. As a business man no man stands higher in the West than Col. Goltra. I want to read an extract from the testimony of Col. Keller. Mr. FREAR asked this question:

Mr. FREAR. And they are to be leased, or what arrangement made?

Col. KELLER. Leased under equitable conditions to Mr. Goltra or to an operating company.

Mr. FREAR. Are there any other propositions in view as to the building of boats and leasing them?

Col. KELLER. We have had many applications, but none that are predicated upon as tangible a basis as Mr. Goltra's. For example, the people who are interested in the New Orleans-St. Louis line that has been under discussion for some time past in these two cities, and elsewhere in the valley intervening, have been anxious to have the Government build a fleet for them much the same as is proposed by Mr. Goltra, and have expressed a desire to lease it from the Government. We have not up to the present time found any authority under which we could construct such a fleet. The authority given by the Shipping Board to construct this fleet for Mr. Goltra is specially limited to that case alone.

Mr. FREAR. That is an unusual course, for the Government to build a fleet and then lease it as an experimental proposition.

Col. KELLER. As I have explained the committee hasn't any funds. We can not build any special plant. All we can do is to investigate the schemes proposed and decide whether they would be profitable as commercial or private enterprises—

That is the same as is proposed in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Missouri knows that I do not always follow carefully the reports of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] on river and harbor bills; but may I ask the gentleman whether this statement which the gentleman from Wisconsin has made in his minority report is correct? He says that the Government of the United States has placed $3,360,000 in the hands of a waterways committee with which to build several steamers of an experimental design and to design new barges for trial tests on the upper Mississippi, and then the statement is made that Col. Goltra is to be the beneficiary of that enterprise and is to participate in the use of $3,360,000 of Federal money for experimentation. Is that a true statement?

Mr. BOOHER. I do not want to pass on the truth of the statements of the gentleman from Wisconsin. I feel sure the gentleman from Wisconsin is mistaken in his facts and quotes from a private conversation and not from the record.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Missouri is an able defender of his State and has spoken bravely for Col. Goltra. I do not want unduly to embarrass the gentleman nor the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who ordinarily is a careful administrator of public funds, and who would not ordinarily support a Government contract that he was not thoroughly satisfied with.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not saying anything about a Government contract of that kind.

Mr. BOOHER. Here is what is said in the St. Louis Republic of April 6, and I want you to note that it says the feasibility of the barge line was to be investigated. I read:

GOLTRA ACCUSED OF TRYING TO PROFIT BY WAR—WISCONSIN CONGRESSMAN ASSERTS ST. LOUISAN IS IN DEAL WITH UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD—RIVER BOATS ARE INVOLVED—REPRESENTATIVE DECLARES MANUFACTURER EXPECTS EVENTUALLY TO BUY VESSELS AT HALF COST.

[By leased wire from the Washington Bureau of the Republic.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5.

Representative JAMES FREAR, of Wisconsin, opened his annual fight against the rivers and harbors bill to-day with the cry of "pork."

This time, however, he said, the pork was not being grabbed by Members of Congress for their districts but was being passed to Edward F. Goltra, of St. Louis, who, Mr. FREAR charged, was in a deal with the Shipping Board to purchase from the Government, after the war, at one-half cost of construction, boats built for Mississippi River traffic.

Asked if there was anything in the bill contemplating such a deal, Mr. FREAR replied:

"No; it is a deal contemplated by Mr. Goltra and the Shipping Board. But I refer to it now because of an appropriation we made at one time to test the navigability of the Mississippi River.

VALUES OF BOATS INCREASE.

"Mr. Goltra was very frank. He said the Government would have to pay twice as much now during this war time to manufacture the boats and that after the war he expected to purchase them at one-half the cost."

"I have always understood that boats which had been used for two years or so were of more value than when placed in the water the first time," suggested a Republican Member.

"That is the statement of men who understand this boat business," said FREAR. "And to think of it at this time when the allies are crying for boats and every shipbuilder in the country is expected to build boats.

"Mr Goltra should not have one boat built for him for his private use during this war time."

FREAR said the boats would be used for Goltra's private corporation and that no reduction in the price of steel would be made to the Government by the Goltra firm.

PRAISES $11,000 FAILURE.

"Will Congress sit silently by when the keys of the Treasury are being turned over to a private corporation such as this?" he demanded.

Outside his attacks upon Goltra, FREAR seemed to have found little in the rivers and harbors bill upon which to criticize, except a charge that river transportation upon the Mississippi had proven a failure and that it was not a feasible proposition. He charged that Secretary Redfield and Brig. Gen. Bixby supported the Goltra experiment and praised the "failure," although it cost $11,000.

He became eloquent about the recent election in Wisconsin and accused the Democrats of playing partisan politics. Political leaders saw in this attack a fear by FREAR that if the Democratic party in the next election makes as good a showing in his district (the tenth Wisconsin) as it did in the recent election he will stand a slim chance of being returned to Congress.

The bill, which was pared to the bone on everything except river and harbor work, which is necessary only as war measures, probably will pass the House to-morrow.

—

GOLTRA SAYS HE TRIED TO RELIEVE FREIGHT TRAFFIC.

Edward F. Goltra, president of the Mississippi Valley Iron Co., of St. Louis, who, at the instigation of the Government, investigated the feasibility of the barge line between St. Louis and St. Paul, referred to by Representative FREAR and for which the Shipping Board recently appropriated $3,500,000, said last night at his home:

"From what you say Mr. FREAR stated, it seems hardly worthy of reply. It is an ingenious piece of verbal jugglery, the fallacy of it being readily exposed by a single statement of the facts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then Col. Goltra does not agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BOOHER. No. I read further:

The congestion on the rail carriers on account of the tremendous activity due to the war makes it necessary that we put into use, to supplement these carriers, every means at our command. The shortage of coal in the Northwest became unusually great. It was plain that the only other means at hand was the river. Such steamers and barges as the Government had, which were only about 45 per cent efficient, were pressed into service, and I made a pioneer trip with them loaded with coal, from the southern Illinois coal fields to St. Paul, to determine the practicability as a freight carrier of the river.

The trip was a physical success, and would have been an economical one had the city of St. Paul been prepared to promptly unload the barges. They held us there six weeks waiting to unload. This, of course, occasioned the unusual expense. The steamer used was a lower river, deep-draft boat, and the trip downstream, bringing iron ore back, thereby was unduly delayed.

The object sought was fully attained, to determine the kind of craft that should be built for the purpose.

He paid $10,000 out of his own pocket to determine it. I read further:

Mr. FREAR'S statement that the boat will cost twice as much now to build as in normal times is correct. But, in my opinion, that is not sufficient reason or excuse for our not doing everything we can to move these important commodities—Illinois coal to the North and ore from Minnesota to the central section. As to the "deal" between the Shipping Board and myself, which he alleges, please quote me as stating there is none.

Mr. FREAR. None what?

Mr. BOOHER. No agreement. I do not think that anybody who knows Col. Goltra would doubt that statement.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Would it not be sufficient to call upon a member of the Shipping Board to refute that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was reading from the report of Mr. FREAR concerning the testimony that was presented.

Mr. FREAR. So far there is nothing that has developed to disprove the statement that I made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, may I have a little more time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOHER. I read again:

No contract has been made nor has any proposition been submitted to me or any company in which I am interested by the Shipping Board or any other board.

The extraordinary building cost will have to be absorbed in some manner, just how I do not know. The Government is just completing a large river steamer of light draft, and when she is ready it has been determined to take a cargo of 7,500 tons of Illinois coal to St. Paul. I have invited Mr. FREAR to accompany me on this trip to show him the feasibility and practicability of the Government's intentions. I am sorry he declines the invitation, notwithstanding his plea of pressing business in the Congress.

There is, of course, nothing in the implied argument that the fabrication of these barges will interfere with the Government's shipbuilding program, as they will be built in small boat yards located on the river, the use of which is not contemplated in the Shipping Board program.

Seagoing vessels could not be built in these small yards.

St Louis is using about 500,000 tons of pig iron per annum. This is equal to 1,000,000 tons of ore. It takes iron ore to make pig iron. I know of no one thing that will so greatly relieve rail carriers as bringing this commodity in by boat instead of by rail.

As regards the price the Government will pay for iron, the same will be fixed by the board, which is fixing all prices.

Mr. FREAR apparently has not investigated the subject sufficiently to know that the 2,200 tons of steel built into barges will carry a tonnage of iron ore and coal that would require 17,000 tons of steel built into cars to transport. The Government is trying to conserve its steel.

Right in that connection let me state that Mr. FREAR is again mistaken in the statement he made—not that he did not have some foundation for it. He said he had a conversation or consultation with Col. Goltra in his office, but at no time has he stated what was said there. Mr. FREAR also said that Col. Goltra was to pay 2 per cent for the use of the boats, and when he got through with them, if the experiment was a failure, the Government would lose all it had in boats. What he did say was that he was to pay 4 per cent on a lease of 20 years, and at any time within that period he was to have the option of buying these boats at the appraised value. That was called out by a question of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] himself.

Mr. FREAR. He was to buy them at $1,700,000, whatever their value.

Mr. BOOHER. No. He said they were to be appraised, and he was to buy them at the appraisement, whatever it was. The gentleman says that Col. Keller said that if Col. Goltra did not take the boats the Government would lose everything. He said that the boats could be used for transportation purposes either inland or along the coast. It is an effort to get transportation on the river somewhere. It was not to be a dead loss.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was attracted to this controversy by the statement prepared by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], and my interest, of course, was aroused by the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who, as I say, ordinarily may be depended upon as one of the watchdogs of the Treasury, to see that money does not go out for experimental projects or in doubtful contracts. I was rather glad, while I was not always able to agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], that he was able to bring these facts forward if only for the purpose of debate. The gentleman from Illinois, however, indicated that the Government had already spent upward of $500,000 in an effort to build barges that would be suitable for navigation on the Mississippi. I am inclined to think that much more money than that $500,000 has been expended for that purpose.

Mr. BOOHER. I wish every Member of the House had read Col. Goltra's testimony. He says in that testimony that it is better for the Government to spend $3,600,000 to find out whether that river can be made navigable; and if it can not, he says it is their duty to stop spending money on it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is the statement of Col. Goltra?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And not of the Army engineer.

Mr. BOOHER. Yes. He says it is a business proposition that he is offering to the Government, and that if it can not be made navigable, after spending this $3,600,000 to find out, then it is the duty of Congress to stop spending money on it, and I think so too.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I take it from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that he is inclined to think that there are times when the United States Army engineers ought not to be followed literally, and that there are times when it is better to take the advice of gentlemen outside, like Col. Goltra, who has had long experience on the Mississippi River, and therefore may be better informed than the United States Army engineer. That is the way I took the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], and it was extremely interesting to me to find him taking that stand; that is, that the Army engineers having failed, after the expenditure of $500,000 and other sums that have been spent in experiments upon the Mississippi River, it might be well in his judgment to take the advice of Col. Goltra, who is of good standing in St. Louis, a big business man there, and who also attained considerable prominence as a national committeeman in the party to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] belong.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. "The gentleman from Illinois" did not make that statement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Illinois said that it was possible that the engineers might not be as well informed on the question of navigation as some of these practical gentlemen, like the gentleman who happens in this case to be the Democratic national committeeman for the State of Missouri.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois never said anything of the kind, as the gentleman will see if he will look at the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; the gentleman did not mention Col. Goltra as the Democratic national committeeman. That is true.

Mr. FOSTER. No; nor did he mention Col. Goltra in that connection. He did say this, and I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Most of my time was taken by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER]. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois said this: That the Army engineers had had a long time to demonstrate whether they could secure suitable craft——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Since 1879, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; I am talking about the $500,000——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Mississippi River Commission has been working since 1879.

Mr. FOSTER. I am talking about the $500,000 that was appropriated some years ago.

Mr. FREAR. About 10 years ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether it has been spent or not.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois said this: That the Army engineers are not infallible——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I remember that.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may have the idea that they are infallible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I do not have any such idea.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois did not say anything about Col. Goltra's contract or wanting a contract.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman very studiously avoided saying anything about Col. Goltra. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. But he said that rivermen who had navigated that river for many years in the past——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Men just like Col. Goltra.

Mr. FOSTER. Might be able to give some idea and be able to devise some sort of craft that could navigate that river. That is what the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is really no difference between the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOSTER. I am surprised that the gentleman from Pennsylvania questions an item in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did not question it.

Mr. FOSTER. We spend millions of dollars in other places to which the gentleman does not object, and probably those expenditures are all right; but when an attempt is made to solve a problem out on the Mississippi River the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to take exception to what men say about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to say to my friend from Illinois that I did not intend to question this item as it is written in this bill. The controversy is over the Shipping Board venture. What I rose to say was that I was not only interested but somewhat surprised to find my distinguished friend from Illinois, one of the most careful custodians of the Treasury in this body, I repeat——

Mr. FOSTER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Proposing that we should spend, through the Shipping Board or through some other method not provided in a river and harbor bill, what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] indicates will be upward of $3,000,000——

Mr. FREAR. Four million dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. By a gentleman who happens to be the Democratic national committeeman from Missouri, on experimental boats on a river which the gentleman from Illinois admitted the Army engineers were incapable of managing so that navigation is wholly successful upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. The fact that a gentleman was the Democratic national committeeman from Missouri or from any State would indicate that he was an honest man and that the money would be properly spent. That fact is a recommendation for him. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER], who had the floor a moment ago, certified to the high character of Col. Goltra in a manner that, I think, does both himself and the colonel proud, and both he and the gentleman from Illinois are entitled to great credit for the able defense they have made of Col. Goltra and the situation.

Mr. FOSTER. He needs no defense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But what I wished to impress on the Members, who have been patient with us during this discussion, is this: At some future time when a question of experimentation on some other stream than the Mississippi River arises, I would like to recall, merely by way of proving up the consistency of the gentleman from Illinois when he rises to oppose such a suggestion, that in this instance of the Mississippi River, coursing by the great State which he in part represents, when the opportunity arises to utilize the services of a distinguished committeeman of the National Democratic Party, he is willing that the Government shall experiment with its money in testing out whether such a scheme is wise and calculated to improve navigation.

I merely want to have the gentleman from Illinois remember on some future occasion the stand he has taken to-day in favor of improving navigation on the various inland waterways of the country. I want him to remember, when the question arises, that there are other streams besides the Mississippi that he so ably champions. I want him out of the depths of his patriotism to remember, if it is necessary to build barges on the Delaware or the Hudson or to connect the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays, to bear in mind that on this great day in the House, when Col. Goltra was in issue, he took this noble stand for inland waterways.

Mr. FOSTER. The "gentleman from Illinois" well remembers in every river and harbor bill coming before Congress in the several years since he has been here the many pleadings in eloquent speeches the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made, trying to secure all the appropriations that were possible, that he has been able to secure larger appropriations for streams up around his city of Philadelphia than anyone else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to put in the RECORD the whole article of which I read a part.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Mississippi River Commission shall forthwith make an examination of the caving bank on the right bank of the Ohio River below the mouth of the Cache River and shall make such plans and take such steps, to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, as may be necessary from time to time to protect the levee line endangered by this caving bank, such improvements to be paid for out of any funds heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the work of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But I have made a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. SMALL. Does not my motion to strike out have priority?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; nothing is in order after the point of order is taken but to dispose of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, does the gentleman from Mississippi insist on his point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If I withdraw the point of order and the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina should not prevail, my rights would be forfeited. If I may reserve the point of order and ask unanimous consent that the item be stricken from the bill, or if the gentleman asks that it be stricken from the bill, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SMALL. If the motion is not carried, if it is necessary, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may then make his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, in view of the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi that the motion to strike out is not in order until the point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can not withdraw the point of order, because I would lose my rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves the point of order against the paragraph, and the gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the paragraph may be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SMALL. That was not quite my request.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not recognition first go to the chairman of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. That is quite true and the Chair recognized the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Who moved to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Mississippi in the meantime made the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the Chair hold that the point of order takes precedence of a motion to strike out, the motion to strike out having first been made?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order must be disposed of before any action can be taken on the paragraph.

Mr. SMALL. I do not think it is necessary now, Mr. Chairman, to argue the point. I disagree with the Chair, but I do not understand it to be necessary because the gentleman from Mississippi says that he has the right to make the point of order in the event that the motion to strike out is not carried, he is satisfied.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be taken off my feet for a motion to be made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I did not make a motion. The gentleman from North Carolina will understand that I am simply trying to preserve my rights. If the motion of the gentleman to strike the paragraph from the bill should not prevail it would be too late then to make a point of order. I am willing to reserve the point of order if the gentleman wants the item stricken from the bill, and it seems to me he ought to be willing to have it go out by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMALL. I want it to proceed from the committee because I am doing it by instruction of the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that this paragraph, page 9, beginning at line 17, be stricken from the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Reserving the right to object, there are other items in this bill which seem to me to be taking from the proper committee the power of appropriation. It seems to me that when the matter is presented to the Chair there should be a ruling on the proposition. The gentleman from Mississippi has reserved the point of order on this item and an item that clearly presents that proposition because it has no place in this bill. It seems to me that we might as well meet that proposition and meet it fairly, and therefore I object.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, this is the situation at present. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves the point of order to the paragraph. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to strike the paragraph from the bill. If a vote is taken on that motion, and is lost, then the reservation of the point of order remains for the protection of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not think the gentleman from Virginia will insist that anything is in order when a point of order is reserved, except procedure by unanimous consent.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, yes, if you reserve it, it is lodged there, it is a sort of caveat.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I dare say the Chair will not agree with that opinion.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not see any real difference between the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. If you lodge the point of order and the motion is made to strike out, and the paragraph goes out, the purposes sought to be subserved by both these gentlemen will be secured. The gentleman from Mississippi said that he would yield to the gentleman from North Carolina to ask unanimous consent to strike the language from the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Absolutely.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That being so, the same result would be obtained by moving directly to strike it out, and the gentleman from Mississippi would not lose any position of right.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the Chair were announcing that opinion as the parliamentary status, the gentleman from Mississippi would be much happier than to hear it come from any Member on the floor.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not announcing any ruling, as a matter of course, but my suggestion, I submit, is sound. If the gentleman from Mississippi reserves, or lodges the point of order and the gentleman from North Carolina then moves to strike out the section, and that motion prevails, the section goes out and along with it the reservation of the point of order, but if the gentleman from North Carolina loses on the motion to strike out, then the reservation of the point of order remains, and preserves all the rights of the gentleman from Mississippi. That is a very plain conclusion of common sense, and promotive of the orderly and efficient conduct of the business of this body.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have no question that it is in the interest of common sense, but it is not the rule of the House.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Absolutely.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, at the conclusion of the reading of the paragraph I addressed the Chair and secured recognition and immediately said that by direction of the committee I moved to strike out the pragraph. Is it true, as a matter of procedure, that a gentleman may break in at that point and make a point of order against the paragraph which is moved to be stricken out? Can he take me off the floor to do that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Otherwise I could not make the point of order.

Mr. SMALL. But all points of order on this bill were reserved. When I moved originally to go into the Committee of the Whole upon the bill, some gentleman on that side, possibly the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY], reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. CRISP rose.

Mr. SMALL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to interfere with the gentleman at all, and when he gets through I desire to give the Chair my view of the proposition.

Mr. SMALL. Very well, I shall soon conclude. The point in my mind is that having been recognized to strike out the paragraph, by direction of the committee, the first thing in order was to put that motion. Then if perchance the motion had failed, all points of order being reserved, the point of order could then be made and passed upon. That seems to me to be regular and proper, and I submit that having been recognized, and being upon my feet and addressing the Chair, and making the motion to strike out, the gentleman from Mississippi was not in order at that time to make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I have no interest whatever in the controversy between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL]. And as far as the House is concerned, it seems to me that it is a question of tweedledum and tweedledee, for both want the provision eliminated from the bill; but I do have some interest in the rules of the House and the regularity of the proceedings of the House, and that is the only reason I am trespassing my views upon the Chair.

There is a good deal of misunderstanding among many of the Members as to when and how a Member may be taken off the floor. Where a gentleman has the floor I can only recall two ways whereby he may be taken off the floor. One is by lodging a point of no quorum, because no business whatever can be transacted when no quorum is present, and the other is by lodging a point of order against the bill or some portion of the bill. Under the rules and under the precedents of the House a point of order to be effective must be made before there has been any debate whatever on the proposition or amendment. If any debate has been had, the question of estoppel applies, and it is too late to then make a point of order. When a point of order is reserved the only way it has ever been operative in the House is for the purpose of discussion, the object of the reservation being to hear the merits of the proposition discussed with a view to seeing if the point of order would be withdrawn. You can not offer an amendment to any provision in a bill to which a point of order is reserved, and why? Obviously because if the point of order is sustained the whole proposition goes out and there is nothing left for the amendment to relate to. In the present instance the motion is to strike out the entire section, and, answering the argument of my friend from Virginia, Mr. SAUNDERS, if that motion to strike out is lost, he says the point of order could then be passed on. I do not think so. Suppose the motion, instead of striking out the whole paragraph, was to simply strike out some part of it or to add some new matter to it, and the motion prevailed. The entire text might be thus changed so as to relieve it from the point of order, whereas the original text, to which the point of order was lodged, may have been clearly subject to the point of order. It seems to me clear, under the rules of the House, if the point of order is insisted upon, the Chair must pass on the point of order before he can recognize or submit to the House any motion to amend or strike out. If an amendment is allowed, the point of order is waived.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It strikes me as a peculiar situation, and I made a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair for that reason. Suppose the gentleman from North Carolina, having been recognized, should carry the motion to strike out; there could be no point of order—there would be nothing against which to make the point of order.

Mr. CRISP. Then you would have the point of order reserved and held up in the air, and the House would never act upon it.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. LENROOT. The amendment vote would be taken upon that, and the point of order would be waived and the reservation gone.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the whole contention advanced in this connection, it seems to me, as stated by the gentleman from Georgia, to be the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. If the motion to strike out should fail then as I have argued the common sense of this matter is that the section must be taken up for consideration, subject to the reservation of the gentleman from Mississippi. The point of order has been reserved, and action upon the same is not insisted upon. I agree that if the gentleman should insist upon a ruling on the point of order, a different situation would be presented. I understood the gentleman in charge of the bill to say that he moved to strike out the whole section. Now if those two gentlemen are agreed and if the action taken on the motion to strike out is favorable, then that will end this whole matter.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Suppose the motion to strike out prevails and the bill is reported in that form, and then a vote in the House is demanded, and the motion to strike out defeated, and the provision is restored to the bill. What becomes of the vote?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It will come up I presume in the House for a ruling on the part of the Speaker. Of course logically this would be the case, if the reservation is noted. In that event the reservation will go along with the motion to strike out. Should action on the amendment be demanded in the House, it would seem therefore that a ruling might be asked of the Speaker on the point of order. And why not? In many of these cases, it would be very desirable to have an affirmative and authoritative ruling by the Speaker, on questions arising in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the suppositious case propounded by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], would the gentleman from Virginia claim that if a motion to strike out prevailed that the chairman in reporting the action of the committee to the House would report that that paragraph was stricken out with the reservation of the point of order?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What else could he report, if the reservation is noted? The two would naturally go together. If the reservation of the point of order is made and a notation of same made at the desk, why of course when the subject matter comes up in the House, the reservation would accompany the subject matter, and again, I ask, why would not this be desirable, and good parliamentary practice?

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I take it the Chairman would report not only the reservation of the point of order but the persons who participated in the debate, in the discussion, and the persons who——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is the reservation of the point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. A matter of courtesy on the part of the man who makes it to give gentlemen an opportunity to make remarks not pertinent to the point raised and to make them out of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No it is something more. It is to preserve the right of a Member to make a point of order after other action has been taken. Under the rules, a point of order can not be made after debate has begun. But if a reservation is made, the debate may proceed indefinitely on the merits. After this debate is concluded, action may be asked on the point of order which pending the debate has remained dormant, or quiescent. And so by analogy, if a point of order is reserved, and the motion is made to strike out, then in the event of the failure of that motion, the Member who has made the reservation, and whose rights have been preserved by that reservation, can ask for a ruling on his point of order. Just as the reservation operates to preserve a Member's rights, pending a discussion on the merits, by analogy, it will preserve his rights in the case suggested. It is merely dormant while the House is voting on the motion to strike out. It is not in anywise destroyed, or affected by that motion, should the motion fail.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No, I will not press this matter further. I do not consider that it is important enough to justify the consumption of the time that otherwise might be used in the disposition of the pending bill.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent, to which I ask the attention of the gentleman from Iowa, and in a different form from that in which I put it before. I ask unanimous consent that I may submit a motion to strike out this paragraph, that the gentleman from Mississippi may reserve a point of order against the paragraph, and that the motion to strike out shall be put to the committee, and if it does not carry that then the gentleman from Mississippi may present his point of order. Now, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, if he is thinking that it makes a precedent that affects anything else in this bill, that his fear is groundless in that respect. There is nothing in the bill that is like it or similar to it, and it does not affect any other proposition in the bill, and I hope no objection will be made.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman why this unusual, unprecedented, and unheard of request to dispose of it in this way rather than to meet the question on the point of order? What is the object to be attained?

Mr. SMALL. The answer to that is obvious. If the committee had decided since reporting this bill that they will submit a motion when it came up in the bill to strike it out, then it is quite obvious they prefer to have the motion put rather than the point of order. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. GOOD. That is the only reason; that is the real reason?

Mr. SMALL. Oh, it takes time, the gentleman can understand——

Mr. GOOD. Is that the only reason? Now, will not the gentleman from North Carolina tell us the real reason, all the reasons that actuate him to have the committee take this unusual action?

Mr. SMALL. I have given the substantial reasons. If there are other reasons they are personal, not personal to me, however.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the Chair puts the request of the gentleman from North Carolina he trusts the committee will permit him to make this statement: This presents a rather peculiar question, in that both the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Mississippi have the same purpose in view; that is, the elimination of this particular provision in the bill. It is true the Chair did recognize the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee, who made the motion to strike out.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] could not be taken off his feet by any Member except in the two ways indicated; that is, either by the point of no quorum or by some Member who interposes a point of order. If the Chair had refused to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] for the purpose either of making or reserving a point of order, which was his undoubted right as the Chair understands the rules and precedents of the House, then he would have lost that right if the motion to strike out had been put to the committee and had failed. It was for that reason that the Chair, acting in accord with the rules and the parliamentary precedents, recognized the gentleman from Mississippi to make the point of order; not to take the gentleman from North Carolina off his feet, but simply to preserve the right of the gentleman from Mississippi to make a point of order, or reserve it, which would give Members the right of debate on the proposition, but not the right to offer any amendment in the way of a motion to strike out, or add to, or take from, the provision.

Now, the gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to make a motion to strike from the bill the paragraph on page 9, beginning on line 17 and running down to and including line 25, and that the point of order which has been raised by the gentleman from Mississippi may be reserved, and that the gentleman from Mississippi will not lose any of his rights in making a point of order against the paragraph if the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina does not prevail. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects. Does the gentleman from Mississippi make the point of order?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; I make the point of order.

The point of order is, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has no jurisdiction of as an original proposition, and it has no right to report it in an appropriation bill and give it the privilege that goes therewith.

The Chair understands that all jurisdiction which was formerly vested in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, if it ever had any, over matters relating to flood control was taken from it and given to another committee that was created for that purpose. I think the Chair will have no trouble in finding the precedents there. They occur to me as being ample and full. I did not know, in fact, that the point of order had ever been contested.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may conflict with that of the Committee on Flood Control, of which the gentleman is chairman, but the matters to be referred to the Committee on Flood Control are matters relating to flood control other than appropriations therefor?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have read this paragraph carefully, and I do not observe in it anything that relates to floods. It is a matter of shoring up the banks of a river.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. For what purpose?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Shoring up the bank of a river. That is all. There is not a word about flood or flood control.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. To protect the levee line endangered by this caving bank. The chairman of the committee will very frankly state to the gentleman, if he wishes to have this information, that this has no relation to navigation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Flood control, as I understand it, and as we understood it when that committee was created, meant the abnormal flow of the water, not the normal flow affecting navigation. So far as this paragraph reads, it may be regarded as a matter to protect navigation, a matter of improvement of the channel, which would certainly come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

What is there in the paragraph to indicate that there is a flood there? It is a normal condition, not an abnormal one. It is a matter of the natural flow of the water, which may cause erosion on one bank or the other. But there is nothing to indicate that it is a matter of flood or flood control. The Mississippi River is an uncertain quantity. It is a river in which the flow changes. It cuts in on this bank and it cuts in on that bank. That is the normal condition. Then there are certain seasons when the river rises and there are freshets which result in floods, and great danger ensues to surrounding property. Then it becomes a matter of flood control. There is nothing on the face of this paragraph to indicate that it is a matter of flood control but everything to indicate that it is a matter purely of the normal regulation of the flow of a river. I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Mississippi for making that statement in his time.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It will not be stated by anybody on this floor that the purpose for which the appropriation is asked is in the interest of navigation.

Mr. SWITZER. I wish to say to the gentleman that I take the position that it is in the interest of navigation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I withdraw my statement. I did not think anybody would state that. The river there is nowhere less than 22 feet deep, and runs from 22 feet to 56 feet deep, and the engineers who have examined it say:

It is clearly shown within that the protection of the banks and levees between Mound City and Cairo is not necessary in the interest of navigation; that water-borne commerce would in no way be affected thereby, and that the only benefits to be expected from such an amendment would inure to the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Co. and riparian owners.

It is further true that in the hearings before the committee not a word was said about navigation. The whole issue was flood control—the protection of that country from the floods of the river.

The chairman of the committee told me that the question of navigation was not involved—and I know he will make the same statement here—and it did not occur to me that any gentleman would come here and say that when the river is at no place less than 22 feet deep, and from that to 56 feet, along this whole reach of the river, and that the engineers in the only reports that have been made upon it have said that it had no relation to navigation, and when the people who came and asked for the improvement asked for it for the purpose of protecting this levee, to protect the territory immediately behind it from overflow, and nobody had ever mentioned the subject of navigation, I assumed that nobody would claim it was in the interest of navigation, and I am quite sure the chairman of the committee will state frankly to the House that the purpose of it is to prevent the overflow of that drainage district.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. Preliminary to it I want to state this: I am interested in the provision that is under discussion. After it had received practically the unanimous approval of the committee, I heard that this question of jurisdiction might arise here, and in order to avoid taking up the time of the committee with the discussion of the question of jurisdiction I gave consent to the committee that the provision be withdrawn from the bill entirely, and the chairman of the committee, in keeping with that understanding, endeavored to get the provision out of the bill in order to avoid raising the question of jurisdiction. But it seems that there are certain parties who want to discuss the question of jurisdiction, whether the provision is in the bill or not. So it seems that the question of jurisdiction is forced on the committee, notwithstanding the fact that the Rivers and Harbors Committee were willing to dispose of the provision otherwise; and I, as the member more interested in it than anyone else, was willing to have it take that course.

Now, I have not a particle of doubt on this question of jurisdiction, and never have had any. I do not suppose the gentleman from Mississippi will deny the fact that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have always had jurisdiction of this subject until the time when this Flood Control Committee was created by the House, and that if the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee has been taken away from it, it has been taken away by reason of the creation of this new Committee on Flood Control. So we start out with the assumption that this formerly was within the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and I do not think that proposition will be disputed or denied at all.

Now, the rules defining the jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee have not been changed in one particular, and were not changed at the time of the creation of the Committee on Flood Control. There was simply another new committee of the House created, known as the Committee on Flood Control, and its jurisdiction was defined. The jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee was not changed, and never has been changed in this particular.

When this question arose once before, Speaker CLARK stated that the jurisdiction of the two committees overlapped, and I think that is necessarily true to some extent, growing out of the subject matters which the two committees are created to handle, and there is always going to be a question of overlapping jurisdiction or conflict between those two committees. If the Chair will recall the debate that took place here when the Flood Control Committee was created, a number of Members spoke and said that the resolution was not in proper form in order to avoid a conflict in jurisdiction. Among them was the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who spoke particularly of that question, and he stated then that there would be an interminable conflict of jurisdiction between the two committees because of the wording of the resolution creating the Flood Control Committee. Last year Mr. Speaker CLARK stated in the House that the jurisdiction of these two committees overlapped. That is for this reason, that the Flood Control Committee was created for the purpose of dealing with the question of preventing or controlling floods.

Now, it may be that occasionally, in order to do that, something may have to be done that will indirectly affect navigation. On the other hand, it may be necessary to make expenditures for improvements that directly affect navigation and indirectly affect flood control. The two subjects are so closely related that you can not always legislate upon one without indirectly or directly affecting the other. That in the very essence of the proposition must be so. So the jurisdictions of the two committees overlap.

Now, whenever there are two committees the jurisdictions of which do necessarily overlap to some extent, I contend that the committee which first takes jurisdiction of a proposition ought to retain jurisdiction over it if the subject is one that it has jurisdiction over. The gentleman from Mississippi has just stated that no question of navigation is involved here. I should like to know upon what authority he states that. The Chair must judge the question from the language in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly the rule stated by the gentleman from Illinois would control if this had come in by way of the bill and had been introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that committee had been given jurisdiction of it, and there had been no objection raised, and that committee had reported it to the House. Under those circumstances, undoubtedly, as the Chair understands the precedents, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would have had jurisdiction. But this provision presents a somewhat different question. This provision comes in as a part of the river and harbor bill reported by the committee and is not a bill regularly introduced.

Mr. DENISON. For that reason I think our position is all the stronger. The Rivers and Harbors Committee is an appropriating committee, has the power to appropriate. The Flood Control Committee has no such power. I contend, if the chairman please, that where an improvement like this is to be made on the river and an immediate appropriation is necessary, it peculiarly belongs to the Rivers and Harbors Committee. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has jurisdiction of all questions pertaining to improvements of rivers and harbors. In the act creating the Mississippi River Commission, which, as I understand, was river and harbor legislation, one of the duties of the Mississippi River Commission was to prevent the changing of channels of rivers and the caving of the banks, and it has always been understood, as I read the record, that legislation that is intended for the purpose of preventing the changing of channels of rivers and the caving of banks of rivers is in the interest of navigation. That is exactly what this legislation is for.

The situation presented is one in which the Ohio River is changing its course north of the city of Cairo, and it has been doing it for a series of years. It has been moving in the direction of the Mississippi River north of the city of Cairo, and it has gone so far that there is now only a neck of land still remaining between it and the Mississippi River. Some day there is going to be a calamity there, and the city of Cairo will be threatened. It is to prevent the continual changing of the channel of the river and the continual caving of the banks of the Ohio River north of Cairo that this provision is inserted in the bill. There can be no question as to the merits of the proposition. It is true that there is a question of controlling flood involved indirectly, but there is also the question of navigation involved.

In other words, I think the question of navigation is always involved when the river is changing its course, and I think the improvement to prevent the banks of the river from caving involves navigation.

The jurisdiction of the Rivers and Harbors Committee covers all questions of improvements of the rivers. A provision in the bill to prevent the change of the banks of the river, to prevent the washing away of the banks of the river is, on the face of it, an improvement of the river. The Chair can not say by looking at the provision that it is purely one for flood control. It says:

The Mississippi River Commission shall forthwith make an examination of the caving bank on the right bank of the Ohio River below the mouth of the Cache River and shall make such plans and take such steps, to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, as may be necessary from time to time to protect the levee line endangered by this caving bank.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is no flood on the Ohio River.

Mr. DENISON. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And none in the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. DENISON. No. It is a normal condition on the Ohio River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The caving in of the banks affects navigation on the river?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; and it will affect it more if it breaks through into the Mississippi River.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But it is not a question of flood control; it is due to no flood, but to the normal action of the water; is that right?

Mr. DENISON. Exactly. The Ohio River at this point has changed its course a long distance, and has finally changed its course until it has reached the base of the levee.

Now, as I understand the parliamentary situation, if the Chairman holds that the point of order is well taken against this particular provision in the bill it must appear to the Chairman from the language in the bill that it is a provision clearly intended for flood control. I think the Chairman can not say that.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Have not the Army engineers repeatedly stated that this caving in of the banks only takes place during periods of high water in the river when the rivers are in a flood state?

Mr. DENISON. If they have said that, I never heard of it.

Mr. HUSTED. I think it is in the RECORD.

Mr. DENISON. It is not in the RECORD in this case. But I want to state to the Chairman and the gentleman from New York that the Chief of Engineers and Col. Newcomer, for the purpose of getting the work done and because they recognized the importance of it, went before the Commerce Committee in the Senate two years ago to help me get a provision in the river and harbor bill extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission to include this part of the Ohio River for the purpose of having this work done.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman will yield, that was after the House had passed the flood-control bill containing the item which extended the jurisdiction of the commission up the Ohio River.

Mr. DENISON. I beg leave to differ with the gentleman; it was before the flood-control bill was passed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman is mistaken. We passed the flood-control bill in May and it went to the Senate, and it appeared that the Senate was not going to pass the flood-control bill, and so the following winter, after the flood-control bill had passed here, for fear that it was going to fail, the gentleman got the Commerce Committee in the Senate to incorporate this matter in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken, and, to refresh the gentleman's mind, I will remind him I went before the Senate committee to get that jurisdiction extended to the Mississippi River Commission upon the advice of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Absolutely. There is not any doubt about that, because we thought the flood-control bill was going to fail; and, in order that the Mississippi River Commission might have jurisdiction up the Ohio, we extended it on the flood-control bill, and, as it seemed that was going to fail, I suggested that the gentleman take that particular provision and have it put in the river and harbor appropriation bill in the Senate, and it appears there in the exact language that it appeared in the flood-control bill, which passed the House in the early part of May prior thereto.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman will recall the provision was put in the flood-control bill in exactly the same language it was put in the river and harbor bill before that. I know what I am talking about on that question. That provision was put in the river and harbor bill before the flood-control bill was ever passed, and was put in with the assistance and consent of the Chief of Engineer's office. Gen. Black went before the committee for the very purpose of getting this work done, because it was recognized as urgent and important. It has not been done, and this provision is put in the river and harbor bill for the purpose of getting the work done now.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Why did the gentleman and the other gentleman from Cairo go before the Committee on Flood Control and have a long hearing in order to induce us, in which he succeeded, to put this provision in the flood-control bill when, as a matter of fact, as he has just stated, he had already, prior thereto, had it enacted into law in the river and harbor bill?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman is skipping a cog.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Which cog?

Mr. DENISON. We first got the provision put in the river and harbor bill in order to give the Mississippi River Commission jurisdiction over this part of the Ohio River to do the work.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. There was no appropriation or direction to do it, but simply extending the jurisdiction of the commission over this part of the Ohio River, so that they would have authority to do it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is all the flood-control bill did. Why did the gentleman go to the Flood Control Committee and ask them to put in their bill a provision already the law of the land, and take up two or three days in the hearings before that committee when it was already the law of the land? The reason the gentleman did it is because it was not in the law, and we put it in our bill and passed it in the House, and the following fall, when it appeared the bill was not going to pass through the Senate, the gentleman got the Senate to put it in the rivers and harbors bill.

Mr. DENISON. I will answer the gentleman's question. Of course, I dislike very much to differ with the gentleman from Mississippi on a question of this kind, and yet, I am so certain that he is wrong that I feel constrained to say so, because I followed the advice of the gentleman from Mississippi in the matter, he being older and more experience in questions of river legislation. We went and got that provision in the river and harbor bill first which extended jurisdiction of the commission over this part of the Ohio River; that gave them authority to go up there and do the work whenever they got the appropriation to do so. When the flood-control bill came up, we were appropriating $45,000,000, as I remember it, for the purpose of doing work on the Mississippi River.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The flood-control bill did not appropriate any money.

Mr. DENISON. I mean we were authorizing $45,000,000 for doing work on the Mississippi River, and it seemed to me that that bill ought to provide that the Mississippi River Commission could go on up this part of the Ohio River where they had jurisdiction and do work there, so we put it in the flood-control bill for that purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But it was already the law.

Mr. DENISON. That is, they already had jurisdiction.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The provisions are identical in both bills. The river and harbor bill had passed and had become a law. Then why did the gentleman induce us to put it in the flood-control bill, when it was already the law?

Mr. DENISON. I will try to make that plain. It certainly ought to be plain to anyone who can read, but I will try to make it plain to the gentleman from Mississippi. In the flood-control bill Congress was authorizing the appropriation of $45,000,000 to do what? To provide against floods up and down the Mississippi River. I think we ought to agree on that plain statement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Absolutely. It was to authorize——

Mr DENISON. They had jurisdiction to do that before that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was to authorize the Mississippi River Commission to expend $45,000,000, to enter into continuing contracts therefor, provided only they should not expend exceeding $10,000,000 a year.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So that it relieves them of the necessity of going to Congress every year for an appropriation. We did not extend the power, the jurisdiction, of the Mississippi River Commission in the slightest, except we did tell them they could go up the Ohio River and in their discretion make allotments for that part of the Ohio River which the Rivers and Harbors Committee for 20 years had refused to take care of. So the gentleman came to us and said that the Rivers and Harbors Committee would not take care of this, because they said it had nothing to do with navigation. He said, "You have a flood-control bill; extend the jurisdiction up there and see if they won't take care of it as a flood problem."

We said, "Very well, we will do that, we will take you in; that is, we will let the commission do that at their discretion," and lo and behold, as soon as the gentleman got in he goes to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and says, "Now, I am in; I want you to pass a law so as to take care of me first." Is not that the truth?

Mr. DENISON. Of course the gentleman has made a very good speech on that side of the question, and I want to say this to the gentleman: The Flood Control Committee was to make authorization of $45,000,000 for doing work up and down the Mississippi River. In order that they might know that they had authority to spend part of that money on the Ohio River, we put that provision in the flood-control bill and——

Mr. SHERLEY. But, if the gentleman will permit, was not the purpose of the insertion of that provision touching the Ohio River in order to give to the Mississippi River Commission the right to continue its work for the improvement of that with the Mississippi River?

Mr. DENISON. It was for the purpose of authorizing their spending a part of that $45,000,000 to prevent floods on the Ohio River.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the reason for giving the Mississippi as well as the Ohio was not simply for the protection of the levees, but it was to continue the improvement of it, and it took from the Rivers and Harbors Committee and gave to the Flood Control Committee jurisdiction for authorizations and gave to the Committee on Appropriations power within the authorizations to appropriate.

Mr. DENISON. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Kentucky that all questions of river and harbor improvement now belong to the Flood Control Committee?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is the contention of the gentleman from Kentucky that to the extent that the act gives control over the Mississippi and tributaries for the improvement and flood control that it ceases to give to the Rivers and Harbors Committee jurisdiction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I question whether we gave that jurisdiction, only up to the point of the mouth——

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not say it gave the whole river, but the language of the act passed through the action of the Flood Control Committee says, "for control of the floods of the Mississippi River and to continue its improvement from the Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River," and then afterwards included these stretches in the Ohio.

Mr. DENISON. That language of the bill was put in there, but they can only expend money for the purpose of improving the river, in so far as the improvement of the river may control the floods—

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not say so.

Mr. DENISON. That is what it means, and the gentleman ought to know that.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that, and I am not sure that the language warrants that construction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is a flood-control proposition, is it not?

Mr. DENISON. No; not entirely.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say that?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly I say it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say this in any way is related to navigation?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; and if the gentleman will permit, I will tell you how it is related, and be very glad to do it. The way it is related to navigation is this: If the gentleman knows the situation in Cairo he knows Cairo is on a point of land between the two rivers——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do know it perfectly well.

Mr. DENISON. Up above the city of Cairo the rivers approach each other and there is a very narrow neck of land between the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. That condition is growing worse from year to year because the Ohio River is changing its course and approaching the Mississippi River. There is now only a narrow neck of land, less than half a mile wide, between the two rivers. The fact that that river is changing its course, the Ohio River, by moving north is due largely, in my judgment, at least I am told that, to an old dike which was built from the Kentucky shore a number of years ago which forced the current over on the Illinois side and deepened the harbor at Mound City. Now, that has done that work well, but the current is still forcing its way along the north bank of the Ohio River and approaching the Mississippi River. The bank is continually crumbling and as the bank washes off it is falling in and washing in the river and the current of the river has changed a great deal, not very rapidly, but changed some. Sooner or later, with a great flood, this levee will go out and the river will break across into the Mississippi above the city of Cairo. Will not that affect navigation?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; sooner or later the Mississippi River will break its banks and thereby affect navigation. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois this: I was a member of the committee that visited Cairo——

Mr. DENISON. I know the gentleman did.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And studied the problem——

Mr. DENISON. And I am sure the gentleman enjoyed his visit.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (continuing). And there never was a claim there that this proposition had anything to do with navigation. At no point——

Mr. DENISON. Well, I do not know what the gentleman is talking about. I know that the claim was made before the River and Harbor Committee at this hearing. If the gentleman will go to Cairo, he will get some information.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not this the situation, that the people interested at Cairo undertook to get the Mississippi Commission to spend this money for this particular work and they were not able to impress them with the overwhelming importance of it, as the gentleman views it? And, having failed to get the money out of the commission, are they not now turning to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. DENISON. I will answer the question.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, with the gentleman's permission, the only reason, as I understand, why the people at Cairo want this work done by the Mississippi River Commission is not because the Mississippi River Commission is engaged in improving the Mississippi River in flood-control work, but because they have special equipment there. I do not know whether it is under their authority especially, but it is under the authority of the Secretary of War and it belongs to the United States. It does not belong to the Mississippi River Commission or to the Flood Control Commission. It is the only equipment that can do this revetment work.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Was there any thought in the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, at the time you put this proposition in, that it was a navigation proposition?

Mr. SWITZER. Certainly. That has always been my contention.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is a navigation proposition?

Mr. SWITZER. Yes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] took that position before our committee. His statement has been made there three or four times. We have as much right to rely on the gentleman from Illinois as on some Army engineers or others when we want to act.

Mr. DENISON. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I want him to go down there and see that situation. He makes his statement very positively, but perhaps he has never seen that situation. If he should see it I do not think he would hold the view that he states.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me, right there, while I do not like to admit going to Cairo very frequently [laughter], yet I have seen that proposition time and time again.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman would be honored by going there.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am in sympathy with the idea of saving that bank, but I contend that it is not a navigation matter. I am interested in saving that bank, but the commission has ordered a survey to take place in May. This proposition which is in the bill does not order a survey; or rather it orders one, and then orders them to go on and do the work, notwithstanding the survey. It is the most remarkable proposition that was ever brought in. It is not a navigation proposition. It is a flood-control proposition. There is no question about that fact.

Mr. DENISON. Now, then, I will say to the gentleman that this proposition is copied word for word from the provision that was put into the river and harbor bill last year for Memphis, Tenn.—word for word—so that the gentleman evidently was not familiar with last year's bill when he made that statement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What was the purpose of the provision in the bill with reference to Memphis? It was to remove a mud bar from the city of Memphis. It had no earthly relation to flood control.

Mr. DENISON. I did not mean it was for the same place, but the language directing it was the same.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was merely to get that bar out of the way, so that boats could come up to Memphis.

Mr. DENISON. But the Ohio River is forming bars with the bank that is washed down. It is a navigation question as well as a question of flood control.

Now, I want to answer the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. He asked me if we had not tried to get the Mississippi River Commission to make this expenditure. We have tried to do so, but they have held back on the matter because they have been working for some time under the wrong impression as to the situation there. That is as to the railroad question that they thought was involved. In other words, there is a railroad that runs along there, and the Mississippi River Commission has been under the impression heretofore that it is the duty of the railroad company to do this work. Now they have found out differently.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that; but that is not the reason for refusing to do this work.

Mr. DENISON. It was the reason.

Mr. SHERLEY. I say to the gentleman that since he talked with them they have testified before my committee on this exact point, and the gentleman is mistaken, in my judgment.

Mr. DENISON. I do not know what they said to the gentleman.

